Of all the members of the new Lloyd George administration, the most remarkable undoubtedly is Lord Devonport, born the son of a small farmer or peasant at Uxbridge, in Middlesex, and formerly errand boy in a tea concern. He made a fortune in the grocery trade, outstripping his rival, Sir Thomas Lipton, who had to remain content with a mere baronetcy. And now he is a peer of the realm.

But it was not as grocer that he won fame. His chief title to distinction was his administration of the port of London. He disposed of the great dock strikes which in 1912 paralyzed things and threatened the metropolis with famine.

Every pressure was brought on that occasion to induce him to give way to the strikers, but Lord Devonport declined to surrender, although Ben Tillett and other labor leaders publicly urged the strikers to shoot him. In the long run he won the day and gained the respect, if not the affection, of the labor element, bringing them to see things his way.

Lord Devonport will be virtually supreme in control of the food supplies of the country. His position as director of the port already gives him a large measure of control, but he will have greater authority than is derived from that position.

The Mirkle's of Wayne, under the name of Oakwood's played here Friday evening and were defeated by the locals--13 to 29. When at Spencerville the week before, they hired Dick Bayman to bring them to St. Joe to take No 3, and when he delivered them they refused to pay. When the boys came here under the guise of Oakwood's--the constable was given a job and they paid up and $1.00 besides making $3.00 in all for their foolishness. Hard fodder all around.

Several had severe falls on the icy streets, Monday. Among them being Mrs. Amanda Coburn, who struck the back of her head with enough force to cut it, she also suffered from the shock of the fall Will Smith fell and hurt his back, and Mrs Wilson Sanders received a sprained wrist. Had the Camera man been around The News could have had some snap shots that would appear quite amusing. Tom Abel spilled his milk on his head and no telling what his wife did when he returned home; Geo. Bleeks and Dick Monroe measured themselves on the street; Inez Hart, Grace Wiers and Hazel Sechler looked around to see if anyone was looking.

WOUNDS OF HORSES

Animal Is Often Stung by Swarm of Insects.

SINGLE STING NOT DANGEROUS

Nostrils May Be Closed as Result of Swelling and Possibly Cause Asphyxiation—Treatment for Burns and Scalds.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Poisoned wounds are the result of bites of snakes, rabid dogs, stings of bees, wasps, etc. A single sting is not dangerous, but an animal is often stung by a swarm of insects, when the chief danger occurs from the swelling produced. If stung about the head, the nostrils may be closed as a result of the swelling, causing labored breathing and possibly asphyxiation. Intoxication may be produced by the absorption of this poison and is manifested by staggering gait, spreading of the legs, paralysis of the muscles, difficult respiration, and a rise of temperature. Death may follow in five to ten hours.

Treatment.

Douse the animal with cold water and apply an alkaline liquid, such as soapsuds, bicarbonate of soda, or weak solution of ammonia. Internally give alcohol, ether, or camphor to strengthen the heart. In case of bites by rattlesnakes, moccasin, or other poisonous snakes, a painful swelling occurs about the bitten part, which is followed by labored breathing, weakness, retching, fever, and death from collapse. The animal usually recovers if it can be kept alive over the third day. In treating the animal, a tight ligature should be passed about the part above the wound to keep the poison from entering the general circulation. Wash out the wound thoroughly with antiseptics and then apply a caustic, such as silver nitrate, or burn with a hot instrument. A subcutaneous injection of one-fourth dram of one per cent solution of chromic acid above the wound is also beneficial. Cold water may be applied to the wound to combat the inflammation.

Bites of rabid dogs produce an infected wound, and the virus of rabies introduced in this manner should be removed or destroyed in the wound. Therefore produce considerable bleeding by incising the wound, wash out thoroughly with ten per cent solution of zinc chloride, and then apply caustics or the actual cautery. Horses thus bitten should be maintained under strict observation for the possible development of rabies during a period of at least three months, and if the disease appears, the horse should be killed immediately.

Burns and Scalds.

These wounds of domestic animals are, fortunately, of rare occurrence; however, when they do occur, if at all extensive, they prove to be quite troublesome and in many cases are fatal. They are classified in three degrees according to the severity of the burn: First degree, where there is a simple reddening of the skin; second degree, where there is a formation of vesicles, or blisters; third degree, where there is a complete destruction of vitality of the tissues, such as would occur in charring from direct contact with flames or from escaping steam. Besides the burns caused by flames and steam, there are other causative agents, such as chemicals (caustic, alkalis and acids), lightning stroke, and occasionally the broken trolley wires of electric railways. When a large surface of the skin is burned or scalded, the animal (if it does not die at once from shock) will soon show signs of fever—shivering, coldness of the extremities, weakness, restlessness, quick and feeble pulse, and labored breathing. No matter which agent is a factor in the production of burns, the lesions are practically of the same nature. The extent and site of the burn should lead one in the determination and course of treatment. Burns of the shoulder and those about the region of the elbow or other parts where there is much movement of the tissues are grave, and, if at all extensive, treatment should not be attempted, but the immediate destruction of the animal is advised. A burn of the third degree, where there is a destruction of the vitality of large areas of tissue, even on parts not subject to much motion, is extremely tedious to treat; in fact, it is questionable whether the treatment and keep of the animal will ever be compensated for, even though recovery does take place; this, in any event, will require at least six or eight weeks. Burns caused by lightning stroke and trolley wires are liable to occur in irregular lines, and, unless death occurs at once, they generally are not serious.

Treatment.

Treatment should be prompt and effective. If the burns are extensive, the constitutional symptoms should be combated with whisky and milk and eggs or ammonia carbonate, strychnin, caffein, and other stimulants, to prevent shock. In the local treatment, to alleviate the pain, the application of cold water in some form and the hypodermic injection of morphine are recommended. In burns of the first degree, where there is only a superficial inflammation, lead carbonate (white lead) ointment is very good. Carron oil (limewater and linseed oil, equal parts) is a standard remedy, but a liniment composed of linseed oil and limewater each 200 parts, bicarbonate of soda 100 parts, and thymol 1 part, is perhaps better. The scorched surface should be covered with this ointment and then with a layer of borated gauze or absorbent cotton, to protect it from the air. The application should be frequently renewed. Carbolated vaseline may be used in place of the above. In case the burn is more extensive, the following solution may be used: Picric acid 2 parts, alcohol 40 parts, water 400 parts. The lesion should be thoroughly cleansed with this solution used on absorbent cotton. The vesicles, if any appear, should be opened with a clean needle, allowing the skin to remain. Strips of gauze or absorbent cotton saturated with the solution should now be applied and renewed only occasionally. In burns of the second and third degrees more satisfactory results may be obtained with nonpoisonous, dry dressing powder, such as is used in ordinary open wounds, as tannic acid 8 parts and iodoform 1 part, or a salve made of this powder and a sufficient quantity of vaseline. When sloughing of the tissues takes place the wounds should be cleansed with a warm 3 per cent solution of carbolic acid, all loose fragments of tissue removed, and either a dry, antiseptic dressing powder or carbolated vaseline ointment applied to exclude the air. Proud flesh should be controlled by the application of silver nitrate in the form of a caustic pencil.

Burns due to mineral acids may be treated by flushing the parts with a copious quantity of cold water or by the application of whiting or chalk. Either use a large quantity of water at the start or use the chalk first, then wash with water. If the irritant has been a caustic alkali, such as potash, lye, ammonia or soda, then vinegar should be the first application. Carron oil is a good general application for all burns for the first week; then this should be followed by the ordinary antiseptic wound dressings.

ECONOMIC PASTURE ON FARM

Practical Data Should Be Secured as to Number of Acres Needed to Support One Head.

In many cases land is given over to use as pasture which will not support sufficient stock to make any reasonable return on the investment. Such land properly belongs in the category of nonproductive land, in that it makes no return commensurate with the interest on the money invested.

It should be borne in mind that the quality of the pasturage in relation to the land value is an important consideration in choosing a farm. For instance, what is economic pasture on land that is worth $10 per acre might, on land valued at $100 an acre, be decidedly uneconomic. This relation should be carefully studied in buying a farm with much pasture land. To determine whether pasture land is economic or not, practical data should be secured as to the number of acres necessary to support one head of stock and the interest on the value of the land in question compared with the current charge per head of the same kind of stock for a season's pasturage. Or the estimated value of the return in increased value of the stock or its products may be used for comparison. By this means the relative economy of pastures may be determined.

TREATING COLT FOR VERMIN

Most of Lice Powders Will Prove Efficient If Used Frequently—Coal-Tar Dip Is Good.

Care must be taken that the colt does not become lousy, for no colt will thrive and make good growth while troubled with lice. If the owner of a good colt which is not thriving as well as his feed and management warrant will make a close examination he will discover that the young animal is being eaten up by lice.

Most of the lice powders on the market will prove very efficient if used frequently, or one of the coal-tar dip preparations may be applied as a spray with a hand sprayer. As long as the lice persist this treatment should be administered once a week. Spray well under the mane, under the jaws, along the backbone, back of the forelegs and around the flanks. A thorough treatment may be given in a few minutes with a good sprayer.

URIC ACID IN MEAT CLOGS THE KIDNEYS

Take a glass of Salts if your Back hurts or Bladder bothers you—Drink more water.

If you must have your meat every day eat it, but flush your kidneys with salts occasionally, says a noted authority who tells us that meat forms uric acid which almost paralyzes the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids, to cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink.

Everyone Should Drink Hot Water in the Morning

Wash away all the stomach, liver, and bowel poisons before breakfast.

To feel your best day in and day out, to feel clean inside; no sour bile to coat your tongue and sicken your breath or dull your head; no constipation, billious attacks, sick headache, colds, rheumatism or gassy, acid stomach, you must bathe on the inside like you bathe outside. This is vastly more important, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, while the bowel pores do, says a well-known physician.

To keep these poisons and toxins well flushed from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels, drink before breakfast each day, a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it. This will cleanse, purify and freshen the entire alimentary tract, before putting more food into the stomach.

Get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from your pharmacist. It is inexpensive and almost tasteless, except a sourish twinge which is not unpleasant. Drink phosphated hot water every morning to rid your system of these vile poisons and toxins; also to prevent their formation.

To feel like young folks feel; like you felt before your blood, nerves and muscles became saturated with an accumulation of body poisons, begin this treatment and above all, keep it up! As soap and hot water act on the skin, cleansing, sweetening and purifying, so limestone phosphate and hot water before breakfast, act on the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels.

COMB SAGE TEA IN FADED OR GRAY HAIR

If Mixed with Sulphur it Darkens so Naturally Nobody can Tell.

Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy and attractive with a brew of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect. By asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, all ready to use, for about 50 cents. This simple mixture can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound now because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied—it's so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural color and looks glossy, soft and beautiful. This preparation is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

Old Jokes In New English Garb.

On the theory that in war times humor is needed more than ever, Answers, the London weekly, features jokes in every number. Here are a few paragraphs, some of them old-time friends on this side of the water, which it offers as laugh-getters:

In a holiday gift store the clerk asks: "Are these gloves for your wife or do you want something better?"

Patron—"This meat is like leather." Waiter—"Yes, sir; it is saddle of mutton."

Wife—"You looked awfully foolish when you proposed to me." Husband "Not half as foolish as I was."

Author—"Where are the cuffs I took off this morning?" The Author's wife—"I sent them to the laundry." Author—"Heavens, I had the plot of a great novel written on them."

Lawyer—"Don't worry; I'll see that you get justice." Client—"I am not hiring you to get justice, but to win the suit."

Woman (at the door)—"Are you seeking employment?" Tramp—"To be truthful, no; you can't make work sound any more inviting by using a word of three syllables."

PRESIDENT WILSON GIVES FORCE TO MOVEMENT FOR BETTER ROADS

Whatever Indiana accomplishes in a big way in road building, cannot but feel the effects of the big nonpartisan "Good Roads" day, as a part of the Indiana Celebration, when President Wilson came to Indianapolis to make a speech on good roads, and reviewed from the Soldiers and Sailors' Monument, the exact center of Indiana road system, a parade of autos that represented every part of the state.

President Wilson came with the message of better roads, as a means to a fuller life and larger civilization. He has given his support to national building of roads, to the federal aid for the states which have highway departments. Indiana is to get more than two million dollars, if the legislature at this session creates the highway department.

Indiana joins with Texas and South Carolina as being without the fold of states having highway departments.

President Wilson brought with him the word "co-operation," that is still the battle cry in the movement for the State Highway department, which, it is intended to build a system of main market highways with government aid that will be a tribute to the judgment of Indiana men.

The president said: "It is perfectly obvious that you must have an intricate and perfect network of roads throughout the length and breadth of this great continent before you will have released the energies of America. Good roads are necessary for every practical aspect of our lives, to draw neighborhoods together, to create community of feeling, to create those arteries which may be compared to the arteries of the human body.

"So that the words I want you to carry in your mind in connection with this good roads cause are these:

President Wilson Reviewing Parade.

First, nationalization, getting all the fibres of this great vital people united in a single organism; second, mobilization; getting them so related to each other, so co-ordinating, so organized, so led, so united, that when they move they move as a single great, irresistible conquering force; and the third word that I want you to consider is the word that I suppose affords the key to doing these things, that word is the word co-operation."

Supporters of the president's idea say that there is little co-operation in making the 1017 townships the power of bonding for road-building. It has been said that there are 5,000 road officers in the state—no head to this body of men—no uniformity of engineering, no standard of specifications, little that would make for intelligent, organised, efficient and economical road building. This co-operation, it is pointed out would be brought about, by a state highway department, with the federal aid.

RALSTON NAMED OFFICIALS

Gathered Much Valuable Information, Force of Which Is Seen In Good Roads Ideas.

When Samuel M. Ralston gave over his duties as Governor of Indiana to James P. Goodrich, there passed from the service a real good roads enthusiast.

The work Ralston did for good roads will be long remembered. Much of the enthusiasm of the present day for better roads and the belief that Indiana should have a highway department, with the state deriving the benefit of Federal aid, comes from the missionary work done under his administration and under the spirit of his enthusiasm.

The report of the highway commission, appointed by him June 22, 1914—the report being made Dec. 26, 1914—was one of the forward steps toward the consummation of an ideal system of main market roads in Indiana. It is the idea of the men behind the State Highway Department bill to make those roads a reality.

On that commission was the late Addison C. Harris, jurist, publicist and diplomat; Thomas Taggart, ex-Senator; Leonard B. Clere, William H. O'Brien and R. L. Sackett.

On the advisory committee were Lewis Taylor, Newburg; Prof. E. R. Cummings, Bloomington; Albert P. Fenn, Tell City; I. Newt. Brown, Franklin; William P. Franklin, Danville; Maurice Douglas, Flatrock; Clarence A. Kenyon, Indianapolis; John H. Retherford, Muncie; D. F. Maish, Frankfort; J. G. Short, Hillsboro; Mike Duffey, Fowler; William Jones, Fairmount; Oliver Kline, Huntington; Senator George V. Kell, Ft. Wayne and Aaron Jones, South Bend.

A Cascaret to-night will make you feel great by morning. They work while you sleep—never gripe, sicken or cause any inconvenience, and cost only 10 cents a box from your store. Millions of men and women take a Cascaret now and then and never have Headache, Biliousness, Coated Tongue, Indigestion, Sour Stomach or Constipation. Adv.

Rare Christmas Gift.

A mother was out doing Christmas shopping, and with her was her four-year old boy. Leaving their automobile, they passed along the busy street and gazed into the well-filled shop windows. At the display of fancy articles in the dry-goods stores the child beamed interestedly. At the array of toys in other windows his eyes fairly danced.

Presently they came to a window in which eggs and like commodities were on view. As the child's parents were enthusiastic and consistent over the prevalent egg-boycott, hen fruit had been scarce in the household. The little lad jumped for joy at the sight of the hen products.

"Oh, mother," he exclaimed excitedly. "There's what I really want for my Christmas—some eggs!"

GIRLS! GIRLS! TRY IT, BEAUTIFY YOUR HAIR

Make It Thick, Glossy, Wavy, Luxuriant and Remove Dandruff—Real Surprise for You.

Your hair becomes light, wavy, fluffy, abundant and appears as soft, lustrous and beautiful as a young girl's after a "Danderine hair cleanse." Just try this—moisten a cloth with a little Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. This will cleanse the hair of dust, dirt and excessive oil and in just a few moments you have doubled the beauty of your hair.

Besides beautifying the hair at once, Danderine dissolves every particle of dandruff; cleanses, purifies and invigorates the scalp, forever stopping itching and falling hair.

But what will please you most will be after a few weeks' use when you will actually see new hair—fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair—growing all over the scalp. If you care for pretty, soft hair and lots of it, surely get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any store and just try it. Adv.

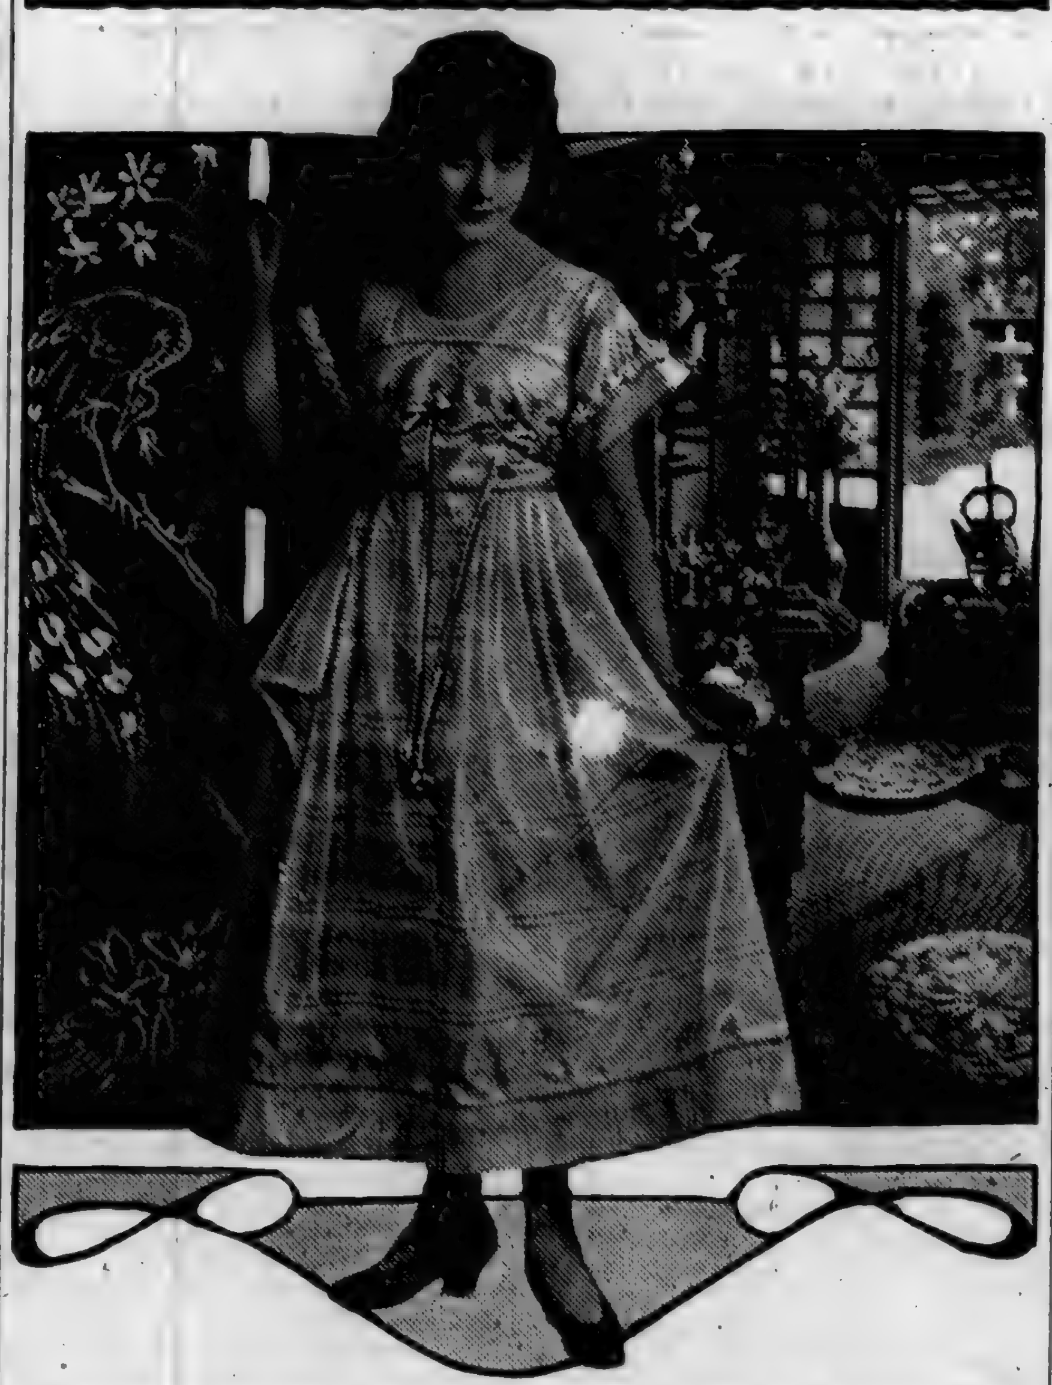
Immensely Flattered.

"I went to town with Mrs. Twobble this morning," said Mrs. Dubwaite.

"I thought you said you would never speak to that woman again," replied Mr. Dubwaite, with a superior smile.

"Well, she asked me to go along and advise her about some new draperies for her living room and of course no woman could resist a compliment like that."

Simplicity Itself in a Party Frock



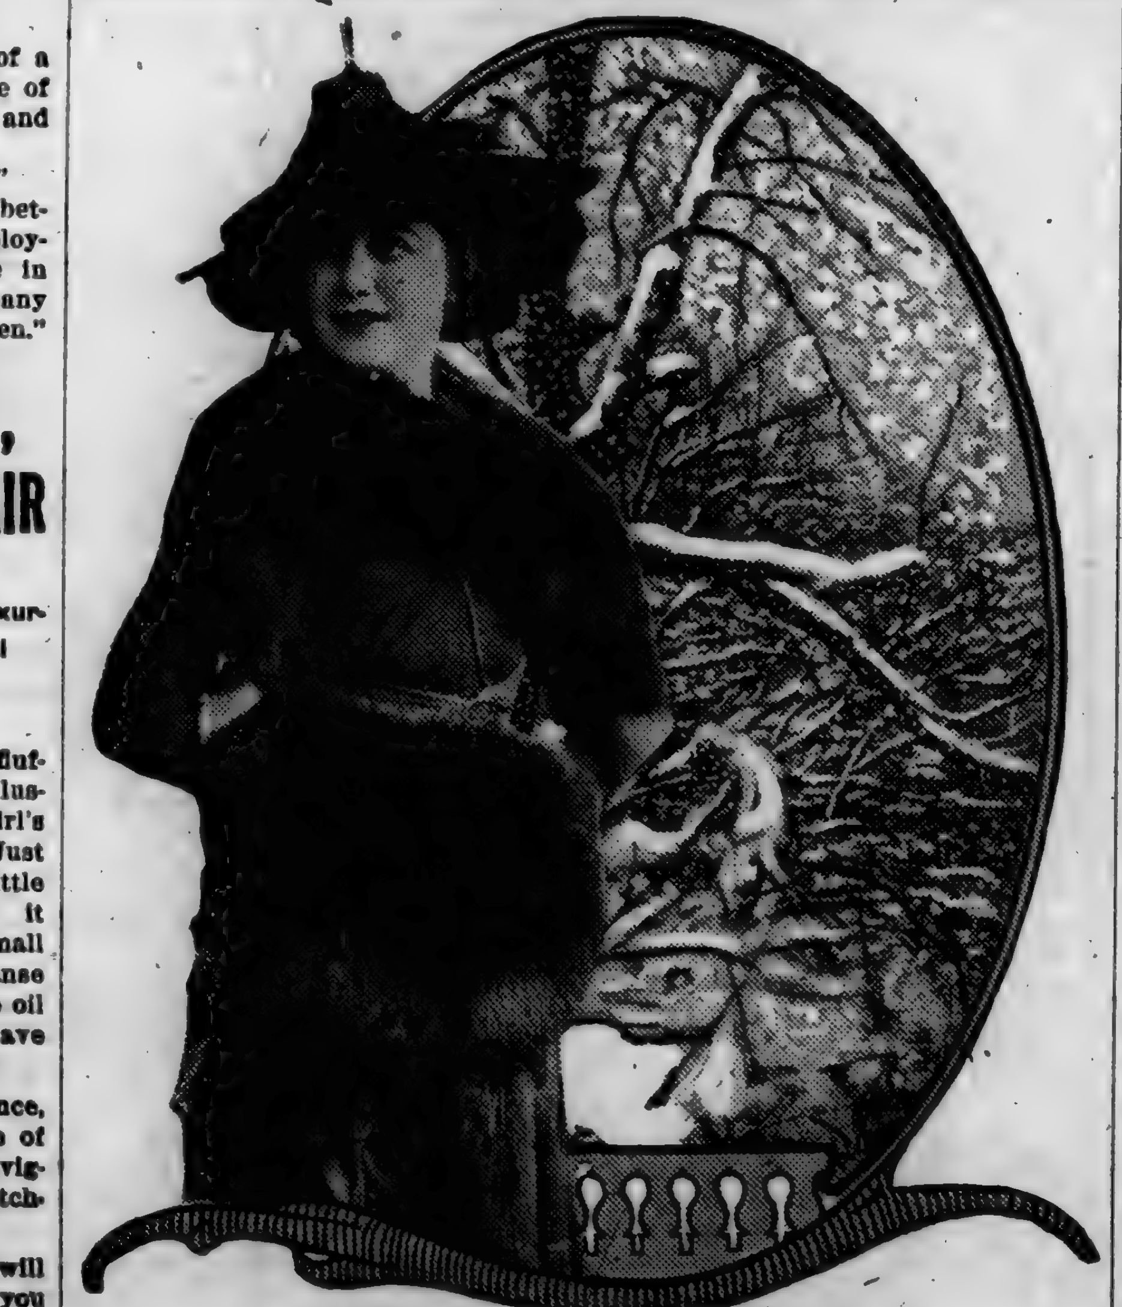
The pretty frock above is so simple and so expressive, that youth could not find anything better suited to herself, if she searched for days in the places where party frocks grow. This little gown possesses style—the intangible element that we all adore. Some people achieve it and others do not, and therein lies all the difference between success and lack of it in dress.

There is nothing much to tell about this model except that the skirt is of light-colored taffeta daintily cross-barred in other light colors. It is as plain and straight as can be and is finished with a hem beaded by a single narrow tuck. The tuck helps to give the skirt the right "set" about the bottom. It is gathered to a narrow belt and joined to a bodice of net and plain taffeta. The underbodice of net is gathered at the shoulders and has a round neck finished with a tiny hem. There are short, full sleeves of the net, with a ruching of frayed taffeta at the top of the hem, making a pretty decoration. The sleeves are set to the bodice with a band of lace insertion.

The taffeta overbodice, which is merely a very wide girdle, is adorned with little sprays of embroidery. Aside from this almost babyish decoration, the frock is allowed two frivolous touches. One of them is a bit of net drapery at one side, and the other is a tiny bouquet suspended by baby ribbon from the bodice. Of course they have no excuse for being—except that eyes were made for seeing.

Any of the sheer cotton dress goods, as voile or organdy, might be used to make the skirt, and worn over a petticoat of plain taffeta, for a frock of this kind. But it is best to be a perfect copyist of a model of such excellence, than to risk experimenting.

Always Good Styles in Furs



It is rather late in the season to consider buying furs, but for that very reason it is a good time to buy. Merchants sometimes find themselves with a few sets of really good furs left over after the holidays and are willing to sacrifice a little on them rather than carry them over to another year. Changes in styles may hurt their sale for the merchant, no matter how valuable the skins. But changes in styles need not worry the woman who owns good furs, for they are among the things that need not bow to fashion's whims.

A neckpiece and muff like those shown in the picture are not likely to be ever out of style. If tails and heads and paws disappear in the sets for the new season, it is no trouble to take them off and put them away until fashion calls for them again. A plain muff of moderate size is always good style, and in scarfs style is as much a matter of adjustment as shape. A plain scarf can be adjusted and worn in accordance with the mode. The set shown in the picture is of fox fur dyed black and tipped with white.

Fox is a very popular fur and the rarest pelts are extravagantly high priced, some of them bringing upwards of a thousand dollars. But the inexpensive pelts are beautiful, the fur long and silky. It is called a "soft" fur by furriers because it does not wear as long as the fur from some other animals, as mink or skunk—both of them beautiful furs. Squirrel, in the natural and dyed colors, is a satisfactory fur, so far as wear is concerned, and what is known as martin will give most excellent service. It takes an expert to pass judgment on furs and from the present outlook, good furs may be regarded as a paying investment.

To Keep Embroidery Clean.

Many ladies embroider linen or lawn shirt blouses or linen centerpieces for their friends. Many, too, though naturally neat, will find their work soiled before it is finished. If one desires to make up such material, or give it to a friend without washing, it may be made perfectly clean by sprinkling thickly with French chalk and rolling up for a day or two. The chalk may afterwards be shaken out.—Christian Science Monitor.

FARM BUILDINGS NICELY GROUPED

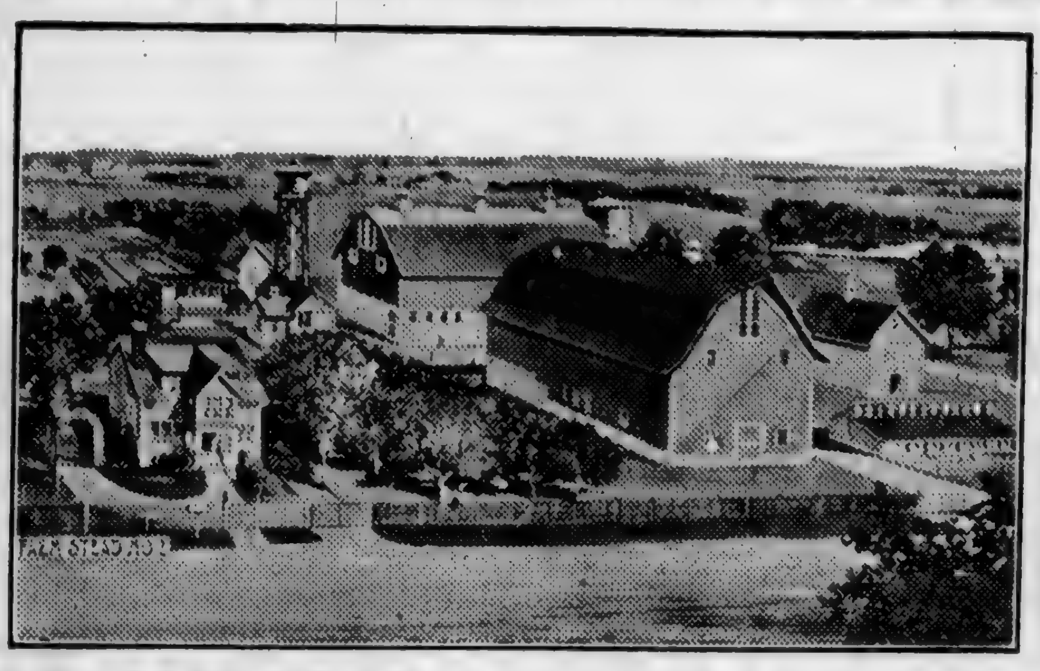
Convenient and Adequate Arrangement for Needs of a Large Farm.

HOGS ARE WELL CARED FOR

The Appointments and Practical Value of These Buildings Will Commend Them to the Progressive Farmer—Storage Space.

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building work on the farm, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

The demand for better results from farming do not constitute a theory or a fad. The demand has been met and the results are an accomplished fact, demonstrated by the outcome of work on farms which is being carried on under improved conditions and guided by the collective intelligence and knowledge of the nation.



In the United States, as in the older countries, necessity is forcing the adoption and use of improved methods to the end that production will be increased and quality improved.

Our food comes from the farm and (a few luxuries excepted) it is produced by the farmers of this country. The great problem of keeping the table supplied (with a surplus of farm products for export) cannot be solved in its entirety by bringing about larger yields of grains and tubers.

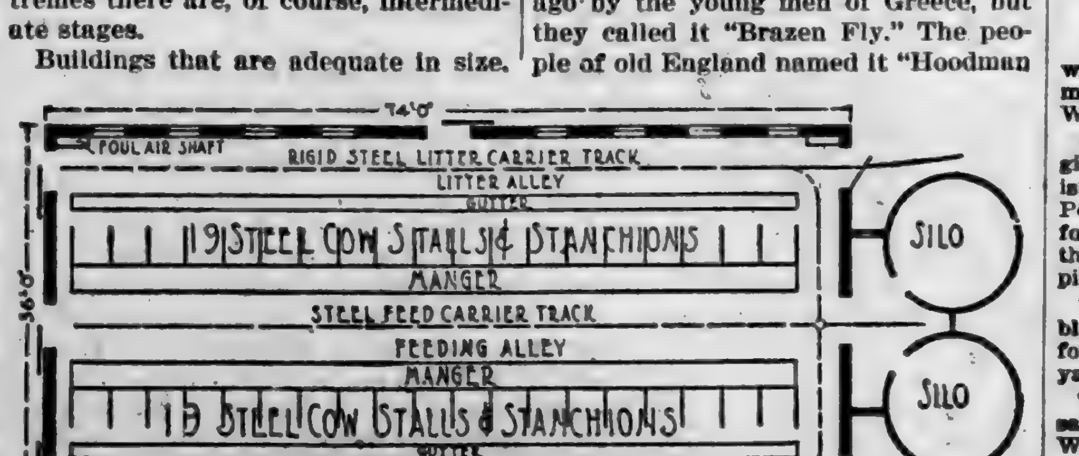
Adequate provision must be made for conserving the harvest and that calls for farm buildings which even the most progressive element is willing to concede are entitled to the characterization "Modern."

It does not greatly profit the farmer to produce a great quantity and to witness its depreciation in value while it remains in his possession.

He has found, also, that it is poor business for him to house his live stock in structures that breed disease, or whose character prevents the most rapid development and increase in weight.

Thorough tests have been made by government officials and those in charge of the agricultural colleges which have proven on a dollar and cents basis the absolute and practical economy of properly designed, constructed and appointed farm buildings.

Under the most favorable conditions, beef cattle will take on weight at a prescribed rate, while under the least favorable conditions such stock barely will hold its own though given the same ration. Between these two extremes there are, of course, intermediate stages.



Buildings that are adequate in size that are built to conform to approved methods of construction and furnished with appointments of a suitable character are a necessary adjunct to successful farming, and the most economical that can be used. They will pay many times 6 per cent on the differences between their cost and the cost of the makeshift variety.

Progressive farmers are planning for the future. Farm buildings are being arranged in a way to minimize labor and save time, and with the thought ever in mind, to insure the comfort of the stock and the safety of the products stored for use or sale.

Location of farm buildings with respect to each other in some respects is a matter of individual preference, in others it is a matter of definitely established rules. The principle is that all products should flow continuously in one direction. It should not be necessary to cart hay, grain or offal back and forth.

Farmers, country contractors, architects and those in charge of agricultural experimental work have collaborated to produce the modern farm building. The result is found in the sanitary dairy, the use of silage, better housing of live stock, the general employment of labor-saving farm machinery and building equipment, the continuous improvement in seed and stock and the yield of both.

In farm building, Radford's standard plank frame construction has been the greatest boon and the source of greatest economy of recent years. This means of construction does away with a part of the cost materials by using 2-inch plank instead of heavy timbers. A further and great economy is effected in labor for the lighter timbers are cut to pattern and placed in position by a few men, instead of being elaborately framed and raised to position by machinery or a large crew of men.

Plank-frame construction has stood the test of years of use and by authorities is pronounced suitable for farm buildings of any size or nature.

In this connection are given perspective view and floor plans for four buildings to comprise a group adequate for the needs of a large farm. Horse and dairy barns are of the favored gambrel roof type. The other two, hog house and corn crib, are designed to harmonize with the two structures first mentioned, the whole to make a complete group of farm buildings of one general type of architecture.

Reference to the floor plans will show the general arrangement of these buildings. The cow stable provides accommodations for 38 cows. The barn, of course, could be made longer or shorter (within reasonable limits) as local circumstances might warrant. In the appointments steel stanchions, litter carriers, foul-air shafts, and two conveniently-located silos stand forth prominently.

The horse barn provides room for the storage of farm implements. Farmers have learned, to their cost, that it is cheaper to take care of expensive machinery than it is to buy new equipment every third or fourth year.

The arrangement of the granary, with the elevator to carry the smaller grains to the second-story bins, leaves little to be desired or imagined.

Special attention is directed to the hoghouse. Time was when the hog was considered able to root for himself. Today Piggy, particularly Mrs. Piggy along about family time, merits and receives the very closest attention.

The hoghouse should have a concrete floor. The brood pens should have also, a portable wood floor to serve to insulate the animals from the concrete. There is more cold in the concrete than heat in the body of the animal, so the animal is chilled instead of the floor being warmed. If wood floors are not provided, an extra thick litter should be supplied.

The close study of the appointments and practical values of these buildings will place at the command of the reader some of the very latest and very best ideas in farm buildings.

GAME OF BLIND MAN'S BUFF

Under the Name of "Brazen Fly" It Was Played by Young Men of Ancient Greece.

Blind man's buff was played long ago by the young men of Greece, but they called it "Brazen Fly." The people of old England named it "Hoodman Blind," probably because the players wore headdresses resembling hoods, and the blind man turned over his face, while the others used their hoods to strike him. Some called it "Harry Racket" and "Hoodwink."

England has other blindfold games, among them is "Colin Maillard." Jean Colin was a brave warrior who lived in the tenth century. He fought in a battle after both of his eyes were put out, and so the game gets its name from him. He was surnamed "Maillard," which means "mallet-wielder," because that was the weapon he used.

The Germans call their blindfold game "Blind Cow" and "Mouse in the Dark." Italians call it "Blind Fly," while Norwegians give it the name of "Blind Thief" and "The Poles."

We add the "Buff" because of the light blows usually given to the blind man by the other players.

FRUIT LAXATIVE FOR SICK CHILD

"California Syrup of Figs" can't harm tender stomach, liver and bowels.

Every mother realizes, after giving her children "California Syrup of Figs" that this is their ideal laxative, because they love its pleasant taste and it thoroughly cleanses the tender little stomach, liver and bowels without griping.

When cross, irritable, feverish, or breath is bad, stomach sour, look at the tongue, mother! If coated, give a teaspoonful of this harmless "fruit laxative," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, sour bile and undigested food passes out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again. When its little system is full of cold, throat sore, has stomach-ache, diarrhoea, indigestion, colic—remember, a good "inside cleaning" should always be the first treatment given.

Millions of mothers keep "California Syrup of Figs" handy; they know a teaspoonful today saves a sick child tomorrow. Ask at the store for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has directions for babies, children of all ages and grown-ups printed on the bottle. Adv.

Socrates' Wise Advice.

Get not your friends by bare compliments, but by giving them sensible tokens of your love. It is well worth while to learn how to win the heart of a man in the right way. Force is of no use to make or preserve a friend, who is an animal that is never caught nor tamed but by kindness and pleasure. Excite them by your civilities, and show them that you desire nothing more than satisfaction; oblige with all your soul that friend who has made you a present of his own.—Socrates.

GAVE HIS CANE AWAY!

Dodd's Kidney Pills deserve great credit." Be sure and get "DODD'S," the name with the three D's for diseased, disordered, deranged kidneys; just as Mr. Benton did. ACTRESS TELLS SECRET.

A well known actress gives the following recipe for gray hair: To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and ¼ oz. of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. Too Ill to Walk Upright. Operation Advised. Saved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

This woman now raises chickens and does manual labor. Read her story:

Richmond, Ind.—"For two years I was so sick and weak with troubles from my age that when going up stairs I had to go very slowly with my hands on the steps, then sit down at the top to rest. The doctor said he thought I should have an operation, and my friends thought I would not live to move into our new house. My daughter asked me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as she had taken it with good results. I did so, my weakness disappeared, I gained in strength, moved into our new home, did all kinds of garden work, shoveled dirt, did building and cement work, and raised hundreds of chickens and ducks. I cannot say enough in praise of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and if these facts are useful you may publish them for the benefit of other women."—Mrs. M. O. MONROVIA NOT UGLY CITY

Unprosperous and "Shiftless," but Still in Many Ways a Place of Attraction for the Tourist.

The one word that describes Monrovia is "shiftless." Here came the former negro slave in the early eighties, backed by philanthropists who wanted to see him given a chance in his own country. And here is the former negro slave today, idling away his life in the tropical luxuriance of the jungle, which feeds him without cultivation, and watching his one big chance fall to ruins.

After all, the negro can hardly be blamed if he fails in a task that has tried the nerve of white men. Colonizing Liberia has not been all a delightful experience. There are still many lions, leopards and snakes in the jungle, which make road-building a dangerous occupation, and occasionally the interior tribes of negroes get obstreperous and eat a couple of their civilized brethren.

Monrovia is pitiful, but not ugly. Over all its shabbiness and decay grow the scarlet hibiscus, pink oleanders and other tropical flowers, decorating with their brilliant blossoms the corpse of a fine ideal.

THE BASIS OF CANADA'S RICHES

A Theme Discussed by the Wall Street Journal.

In speaking of Canada a short time ago the Wall Street Journal made the statement that "The basis of Canada's riches is the fertility of the soil, and no freak of warfare can injure that while her grain will increase in demand as the population of the world grows. As an investment field Canada is worthy of consideration." These words are well worthy of attention, especially coming from such a source as this eminent financial journal. With a land area exceeding that of the United States and with tillable areas coming under cultivation, the wealth of Canada's future can scarcely be estimated, while the wealth today is such as to bring her most prominently before the world.

During the past year thousands of farmers in Western Canada sold their crops for more than the total cost of their land. Lands at from $15 to $30 an acre produced crops worth $40 to $75 an acre. Stock raising and dairying were equally profitable.

The year 1915 saw most wonderful crops and magnificent yields over the entire country, and many farmers wiped out indebtednesses that had hung over them long before they came to the country, and the year 1916 put them in a condition of absolute independence. A report to hand verified by a high official might seem marvelous, were the particulars not well known, and where are not other cases that would seem almost as phenomenal. This is a southern Alberta story: A farmer wished to rent an adjoining farm on which a loan company held a mortgage. The applicant said he wanted the first ten bushels of wheat, after which he would divide, giving the loan company one-third. After threshing he paid into the bank at Calgary $16 per acre for every acre cultivated, to the credit of the loan company, as their share or their third of the crop. Sixteen dollars per acre rent. His two-thirds was $32 and in addition the first ten bushels of wheat. Land on this same security can be purchased for from $16 to $30 per acre. Wonderful yields are reported from all parts of this district. Recently 4,640 acres of a ranch were sold to an Illinois farmer; 300 acres of wheat in 1916 produced a yield that averaged 42½ bushels of wheat per acre. George Richard, formerly of Providence, R. I., on a southern Alberta farm got 2,052 bushels of wheat from a 50-acre field, or over 40 bushels per acre, and from a 50-acre field of oats got a return of 76 bushels per acre and still had some sheaves left over for feeding.

A report just issued by the Alberta government gives the yield of wheat in the showing of 1916 as 28 bushels per acre; 45 bushels of oats and 30 bushels of barley.

Travelers through Alberta's wheat belt have had revealed to them scenes of agricultural productiveness unapproached in any other part of the world.

Alberta farms, selected with even moderate discretion, have raised men to independence and affluence with records of wonderful development unsurpassed amongst the phenomenal industrial success of which Canada well may boast.

Many almost incredible yields have been reported by reliable authorities, wheat exceeding 70 bushels per acre and oats 145 bushels.

Numerous records show that the cost of farms has been more than repaid by this year's crop. In one instance, land purchased for $3,200 produced wheat which was sold for a little over $10,000.

During the year 1917 there will be an immense amount of labor required to take care of the crop in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

One of the problems which Western Canada has to face every year is the securing of an adequate supply of labor to handle the harvesting and threshing of its big crops. This problem, indeed, is always present in any country that has a big agricultural production; in the case of Western Canada it is enhanced by the comparative sparsity of population and the long distance from industrial districts, which can be expected to offer a surplus of labor.

In Western Canada the present difficulties are increased by the war. A very large number of Western Canada's small population have enlisted for service with the Canadian forces in Europe, and at the present time there is generally speaking no surplus of labor for the ordinary channels of industry, to say nothing of the abnormal demands of harvest time. The situation, however, has to some extent been met by the action of the Canadian militia department, who have released all such men who are still in training in the western military camps and who desire to engage in harvest work for a period of generally one month.

The actual number of men engaged in 1916 in harvest work was between forty and fifty thousand. Wages were higher than usual, running from $2.50 to $4.00 a day with board, and from $35 to $60 a month.—Advertisement.

An oil workers' trade council has been formed in the oil fields of Oklahoma.

Richmond (Va.) labor forward campaign will continue throughout the winter.

VOICE OF BUSINESS.

The Manufacturer's Journal of Baltimore is one of the leading industrial publications of the country. This is what it says of the drink traffic:

"We are absolutely, teetotally, and in every way possible, opposed to the whisky industry, not only because of its immoral influence, but from the economic standpoint. It is a curse to the country of such gigantic proportions that the sooner it is blotted out, the better it will be for mankind. The billions of dollars that are annually spent in this country constitute one of the most fearful curses ever brought upon the land, and every dollar thus expended is an economic waste and a drain upon the physical, mental, moral and financial stamina of the country. Moreover, the alliance of the saloon interests with the politics of the country is another curse, and to this influence is due much of the rottenness in American politics. . . . Whisky and the saloon business are an unspeakable curse, without one single, solitary redeeming quality."

GERMAN ARMY OFFICER'S VIEW.

"We should not discuss moderation with a man," writes Doctor Matthaei, a staff physician in the German army, and in these words he voices the general opinion of German anti-alcoholists. "The thing has long since been settled by science. The use of narcotic poisons is simply indecent and criminal. One should always decline to take part in any festival occasion where drink is used. One who makes of a well, a slightly alcohol-sick person—i. e., moderate drinker—should be punished for it socially until we can get leave to punish legally. Wills of men made in an alcoholized or slightly alcoholized state should be contested. Drunkards are made by hospital prescriptions of alcohol. The law should hold such hospitals legally liable. It must be considered incompatible with the honor of a city or government to allow the activities of poison factories, such as breweries and distilleries."

OFFICIAL'S ATTITUDE.

Mr. Newcomb Carlton, president of the Western Union Telegraph company, in an address at a dry banquet given to some of his men in Indianapolis, said:

"I want to advise you against partaking of intoxicating drinks. The business world is looking for the reliable, sober worker, who has higher things in mind than spending his money for drink. We are coming to a time in American history when the drinking man will be unable to obtain employment and I believe that within two years a measure providing for national prohibition will be passed by congress."

OSTRACIZED.

There is a brewer living in one of the best neighborhoods in an Ohio city, says the American Issue. This brewer has a wife and children and they are bright and well-behaved. But this family has no neighbors. It has no neighborhood callers. It is let alone. It is as if the house were quarantined. The wife and children are all right, but they belong to the brewer. The brewer is all right, too, except for his business. There is the stumbling block. The family is ostracized socially because of the beer business. Will the brewer say he is willing to change his business? He should at least do it for his family's sake.

YOUR TAX COLLECTOR.

Some folks like to say that Mr. Booze Business is a sort of indirect tax collector for Uncle Sam & Co. He is, and he makes money at it, too. For every $1,000 in "indirect" taxes which he turns into the treasury of the national firm, he also collects another $5,250, which he keeps for his trouble, probably as a commission or reward for his services. You know the kind of people who charge 86 per cent of the gross amount of their collections for a commission. Do you want that kind of a collector in your employ?

Again, the "collector" gets more than five times as much as your firm, for whom you imagine he is working. Is he working for you, or working you?

ANTI-ALCOHOL PLEDGES.

Bishop Carroll (Catholic) of Montana wrote thus during the Montana dry campaign: "By taking the pledge the individual prohibits the use of intoxicating liquors by himself; by passing a prohibition law the community bars the use of intoxicating drinks to itself. The community has as much right to take the pledge as the individual." And, let us add, so has the state and the nation.

MOVING TO KANSAS.

The president of the Topeka Commercial club reports as a result of an investigation made by him that at least 2,000 families who have moved to Topeka from other states in the last ten years, including many of the city's best and most useful citizens, were influenced to make the change mainly because Kansas is a prohibition state and Topeka a dry city.

LIQUOR ON TOP.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR JANUARY 28

REVERENCE OF JESUS FOR HIS FOLLOWERS' HOUSE.

LESSON TEXT—John 2:13-22.

GOLDEN TEXT—My house shall be called a house of prayer.—Matt. 21:13.

Skipping the details of genealogy, birth and boyhood, John plunges into the work and ministry of our Lord. Our previous lessons have taken up the matter of his eternal Godhead, the word made flesh, the witness of John, Jesus and John the Baptist, his first disciples and the wedding at Canaan. Some of these events have been skipped over without much consideration, yet the teacher should review them briefly. The wedding at Canaan probably occurred in March, A. D. 27, and the events of this lesson in April of the Passover week of that year, both events occurring early in the first year of the ministry of our Lord. Jesus went to the wedding for he had many things to teach by means of it. The story is familiar, and yet God is performing the same miracle every year except by somewhat slower process. John lays strong emphasis upon the "signs" which Jesus performed as evidence of his office. This miracle is an allegory. It also throws light upon Jesus' relation to the home.

I. Jesus Applies the Word of God (vv. 12-17). As the "Son of the Law" Jesus observed all of its requirements and therefore went to the Passover (Deut. 16:16; Luke 2:41). We would suggest the reading of Edersheim's "Life of Christ" at this point, especially his description of the feast. Jesus found much of interest, and also saw that which filled his spirit with indignation as he entered the temple (v. 14). Great numbers of oxen and sheep and doves were required for the sacrifices. Every family must bring for sacrifice a lamb, the sacrifices being lain in the inner court near the great altar. Those living nearer the city could bring their own sacrifices, but those who came from far distant points found it more convenient to purchase their sacrifices nearer the temple. Thus a business had grown up within the courts, which gave rise to an immense amount of covetousness and selfishness. The yearly tax due from every Jew could not be received except in the native coin; hence the money changers within the courts. The result was that the temple had become a "den of thieves" (Mark 11:17). This had undermined the power of religion, and turned men away from the truth. This place, made to be a house of prayer (Jer. 7:11; Isa. 56:7) had become a vanity fair; a show, and the very object of the temple was sacrificed to the greed of gain. The defense often made in our day, of buying and selling in the house of God that it has to do with the cause of worship will not bear scrutiny in the light of this passage. Into these surroundings this young reformer enters, and places his finger upon the heart of the matter when he quotes the scripture. The reason of his action was what the scripture said about the house of God. Present day followers of Jesus can learn a lesson from these words.

II. Jesus Fulfills the Word of God (vv. 18-22). Jesus spake as one having authority, and these merchants knew they were in the wrong. He embodied in himself, as prophet, the moral sentiment of the nation, and exerted his authority. It looked like high-handed usurpation unless Jesus were a prophet sent from God; therefore the demand for his credentials (v. 18). Jesus gave a sign, a sign which they did not understand at the time (v. 19; Matt. 12:38-40; 16:1-4). The resurrection of Jesus is God's seal to all of the claims of Jesus. He also speaks of his body as a symbol and type of what is to take place in their national temple, an event which occurred some forty years later, though they at the time did not understand it. Jesus foresaw that these leaders would destroy his body on the cross, and that for the same reason they were at the present time opposing him in what he had done. The Jews, thinking only of their temple, in whose courts they were standing, referred to the time spent in the erection of the building (v. 20), and thought that their argument was invincible, but they did not know what was to take place. Not even the disciples of Jesus understood his words at the time, but after his resurrection they remembered them and their fulfillment. The death and resurrection of Jesus was in accordance with the word of God. His whole life, birth and works can be traced in the Old Testament in type and prophecy.

Young people should be taught to be reverent in the Sunday school and in all religious meetings.

The bodies and souls are temples (I Cor. 3:16; 6:19).

Church buildings are the temples of God (Read A. J. Gordon's book on "How Christ Came to the Church").

The Sunday school is a temple of God.

Do we see to it that our pupils act in ways and manner worthy of God's true worship in the house of God? Our presentation of the lesson, our singing and our prayers—do they honor the house of God?

TO LIVE LONG!

A recipe given by a famous physician for long life was: "Keep the kidneys in good order! Try to eliminate thru the skin and intestines the poisons that otherwise clog the kidneys. Avoid eating meat as much as possible; avoid too much salt, alcohol, tea. Try a milk and vegetable diet. Drink plenty of water, and exercise so you sweat—the skin helps to eliminate the toxic poisons and uric acid."

For those past middle life, for those easily recognized symptoms of inflammation, as backache, scalding "water," or if uric acid in the blood has caused rheumatism, "rusty" joints, stiffness, get Anuric at the drug store. This is a wonderful eliminator of uric acid and was discovered by Dr. Pierce of Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y. If your druggist does not keep it send 10 cents to Dr. Pierce for trial package and you will find that it is many times more potent than lithia and that it dissolves uric acid as hot water does sugar.

NOTHING STANDS AS HIGH, as a remedy for every womanly ailment, as Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It's the only medicine for women certain in its effects.

"Favorite Prescription" is an invigorating, restorative tonic, a soothing and strengthening nervine, and a complete cure for all the functional derangements, painful disorders, and chronic weaknesses peculiar to the sex.

For young girls just entering womanhood; for women at the critical time; nursing mothers; and every woman who is "run-down," tired or overworked—it is a special, safe, and certain help.

Dr. Pierce' Pleasant Pellets regulate and invigorate stomach, liver and bowels, Sugar-coated, tiny granules, easy to take as candy.

How to preserve health and beauty is told in Doctor Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser. It is free. Send Dr. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., four dimes, or stamps, to cover wrapping and mailing.

MAKE EACH DAY PROFITABLE

Excellent Formula for Life That It Will Be Found Hard to Make Improvement On.

Charles Kingsley has given this formula in one of his books and as a certain and safe prescription it can scarcely be improved upon.

"Make it a rule," he said, "and pray God to help you keep it, never to lie down at night without being able to say: "I have made one human being at least a little wiser, a little happier, or a little better this day.' "

At first thought it does not seem as though this should be a very difficult course to pursue. The important thing is to make up your mind to live up to this ideal; then, after that, it is a matter of living one day at a time, one day of thoughtfulness, one day of helpfulness, one day of closer companionship with those who are near and should be dear to us.—Anon.

With the Fingers! Says Corns Lift Out Without Any Pain

Sore corns, hard corns, soft corns or any kind of a corn can shortly be lifted right out with the fingers if you will apply on the corn a few drops of freezone, says a Cincinnati authority.

At little cost one can get a small bottle of freezone at any drug store, which will positively rid one's feet of every corn or callus without pain or soreness or the danger of infection.

This new drug is an ether compound, and dries the moment it is applied and does not inflame or even irritate the surrounding skin. Just think! You can lift off your corns and calluses now without a bit of pain or soreness. If your druggist hasn't freezone he can easily get a small bottle for you from his wholesale drug house.—adv.

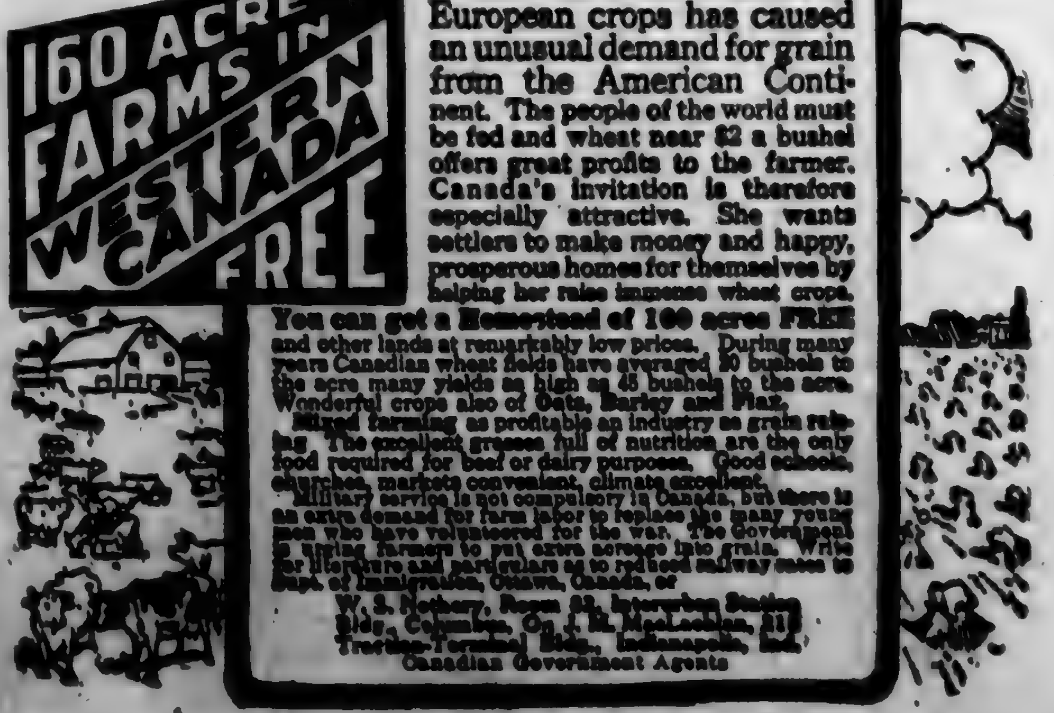
Canadian Farmers Profit From Wheat



160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

The war's devastation of European crops has caused an unusual demand for grain from the American Continent. The people of the world must be fed and wheat near $2 a bushel offers great profits to the farmer. Canada's invitation is therefore especially attractive. She wants settlers to make money and happy, prosperous homes for themselves by helping her raise immense wheat crops.

You can get a Homestead of 160 acres FREE and other lands at remarkably low prices. During many years Canadian wheat fields have averaged 20 bushels to the acre many yields as high as 45 bushels to the acre. Wonderful crops also of Oats, Barley and Flax.

Mixed farming as profitable an industry as grain raising. The excellent grasses full of nutrition are the only food required for beef or dairy purposes. Good schools, churches, markets convenient, climate excellent.

Military service is not compulsory in Canada, but there is an extra demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for the war. The Government is urging farmers to put extra acreage into grain. Write for literature and particulars as to reduced railway rates to Supt. of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or

After doctoring and trying a number of cough remedies, we began to think his case a hopeless one. He got no relief until he used Glando Pine. The first bottle relieved him. He continued its use until he was cured. He is now well, and I believe Glando Pine saved his life." For sale by Druggists.

TEST SEED WITHOUT CHARGE

Department of Agriculture and State Laboratories Will Perform Work for Farmers.

The seed laboratory of the United States department of agriculture, and also the seed laboratories of many of the experiment stations of the state colleges of agriculture, will make without charge tests of alfalfa seed and other seeds both for purity and germination. The test for purity determines the percentage of pure seed and weed seeds, including dodder.

Samples sent to the department should be addressed to the Seed Laboratory, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C. The name and address of the seller, the year and place of growth, the price paid, and the name and address of the sender of the seed should accompany the sample in so far as this information can be given.

SHED TO STORE THE MANURE

Loss by Leaching When Exposed in Winter Amounts to Considerable Sum—Keep It Covered.

Chemical analysis made during five years at the Ohio experiment station show that barnyard manure loses about one-half its potassium, one-third its nitrogen and one-fourth its phosphorus when exposed to the weather for three winter months.

At prices prevailing before the European war the fertility constituents in a ton of manure would be worth about $2. The loss by leaching three months would then amount to about 80 cents. At the present cost of potash the loss would be nearly $2 from this material alone. A shed to store the manure should pay for itself this winter.

FEED VALUE OF SUGAR CORN

Growers of Crop Give It More Attention Than Ordinary Stover—Good Winter Stock Feed.

Large growers of sugar corn think highly of the fodder derived from this crop and usually give it more care and attention than ordinary stover.

Owing to the sugar it contains, it is a good winter stock feed, since sugar is both fattening and heating.

Furthermore, if grown for the cannery or the market trade, it is apt to carry a goodly measure of small ears.

Matured sweet corn possesses practically the same feeding value as field corn.

SHAPING UP A STRAW STACK

Few Minutes Spent in Cleaning Up Will Be Well Paid For—Straw Is Valuable Property.

Every straw pile has quite a lot of straw strewn around the stack that will be covered up by snow and practically wasted if it is not taken care of. This straw is worth money, and a few hours put in shaping up the stack and picking up the scattered straw will be mighty well spent.

The Magazines Will Stop Promptly When Time Is Up

Carl Ferrel, who resided with his uncle Robert DuVall, on the Henderson farm west of Spencerville, shot himself about 10 o'clock Saturday, January 27. He was in his usual good spirits the night before as he went with the High School Students to Harlan to play Basket Ball and seemingly had a good time. He got up the next morning and while he and his uncle were about the morning chores, the boy was corrected for some things he had been doing, and he immediately left the barn and entered the house, siezing the shot gun as he passed through a room on his way to the bedroom, where he in an instant ended his life by leaning on the barrel and discharging the load, plowing its way through his young body, leaving a hole about the size of ones fist. Dr. Emme was called but when he arrived at the home the young man was dead. The Coroner was summonsed and rendered a verdict of Suicidal Intent. Carl was 17 years old and in his second year of High School. His instructors say that he was an apt pupil full of life but good in Deportment. No direct cause for the suicide is known and possibly will never be found out. It is hard to think of so bright a young man just entering life killing himself without apparent cause, yet his life is gone when scarcely begun. The funeral service was held Tuesdaa at 10 o'clock at the M. E. Church with Rev. Valentine, officiating, burial in White City Cemetery.

Mrs. Henry Milliman

Death with His Keen Scythe, Relentlessly Removes Well-Known Citizen of Our Populace

Harriet E. Monroe was born in Lorain County, Ohio, Jan. 20, 1841. Dying on Jan 29, 1917, her term of life was 76 years and 9 days. When deceased was about 15 years of age, her parents came to Indiana and settled on the farm two miles east of St. Joe, now the residence of Wm. Maxwell. About the same time she became a Christian, uniting with the church at Coburntown. Here, too, she was wedded to William Henry Harrison Milliman on Oct. 10th., 1861. They had been lovers for sometime, when he decided he must respond to his Country's call and enter the war of the Rebellion. Not knowing that he might ever return to her, and wishing to claim each other in life companionship, they were wedded before his departure. And so it was, that as war bride, he left the loved one in the home of his parents and one of her sisters, until after 14 months of faithful service for his country, he returned to her.

Her husband was one of five brothers to reach manhood. Such was the patriotism of their mother, that she declared if she had as many more sons, she would have them all respond to their Country's call. And this was how it came about that all her sons—Warren, Mortimore, Obryant, Wm. Henry Harrison, and Joel A., did in turn, answer their countries call: and this is how it came about that the beloved deceased, as war bride, found a home of welcome with her bridegroom's mother, while he went to do his duty in putting down the Rebellion.

When her husband returned from the war, they continued their residence at Coburntown until 1884. They then had a two year's residence in the state of Tennessee. After this, they had a 14 years residence in Hicksville, Ohio. After this they had a five years residence here in St. Joe. From here they moved to the farm two and a half miles north and west of St. Joe, where our sister's earthly pilgrimage came to an end.

Their children numbered three: one dying young, there remain Frank, resident on the home place; and Harry, resident in Edon, Ohio. Of immediate loved ones, the survivors are: Husband, the two sons, four grandchildren, two of each son, with their wifes. One of her father's family still survives his sister, namely: William Monroe, of Hicksville, Ohio, now aged 85 years.

One year ago last Thanksgiving Day, the deceased became a helpless invalid, and ever since has had to have care as one must care for infants. Fortunately, her husband being of kind, gentle, sympathetic nature, gave her his entire time, and cared for her with a tenderness unexcelled by a mother for her child. The deceased passed from loved ones on Monday morning with a splendid record as an affectionate wife, a loving mother, an esteemed neighbor, and as a loyal minded child of God. The funeral was held from the Christian Church at St. Joe, Wednesday at 1:30 o'clock, Rev. L. W. Spayd, officiating, with E. R. Kinsey, director. Burial in the Alton Cemetery.

A Big For Sure Surprise

M. E. Leighty and family were pleasantly surprised at their home east of town, when about 8 o'clock Saturday evening, Jan. 27th., friends and neighbors to the number of 102 poured in upon them bringing with them well filled baskets. Though this came as a complete surprise to Mr. and Mrs Leighty they soon threw open their house to the merry makers and both young and old enjoyed themselves by games and singing. About ten o'clock a bounteous lunch was had after which Rev. Hively offered prayer and all sang "God Be With You Till We Meet Again." The event was a surprise for Mr. Leightys before leaving for their new home.

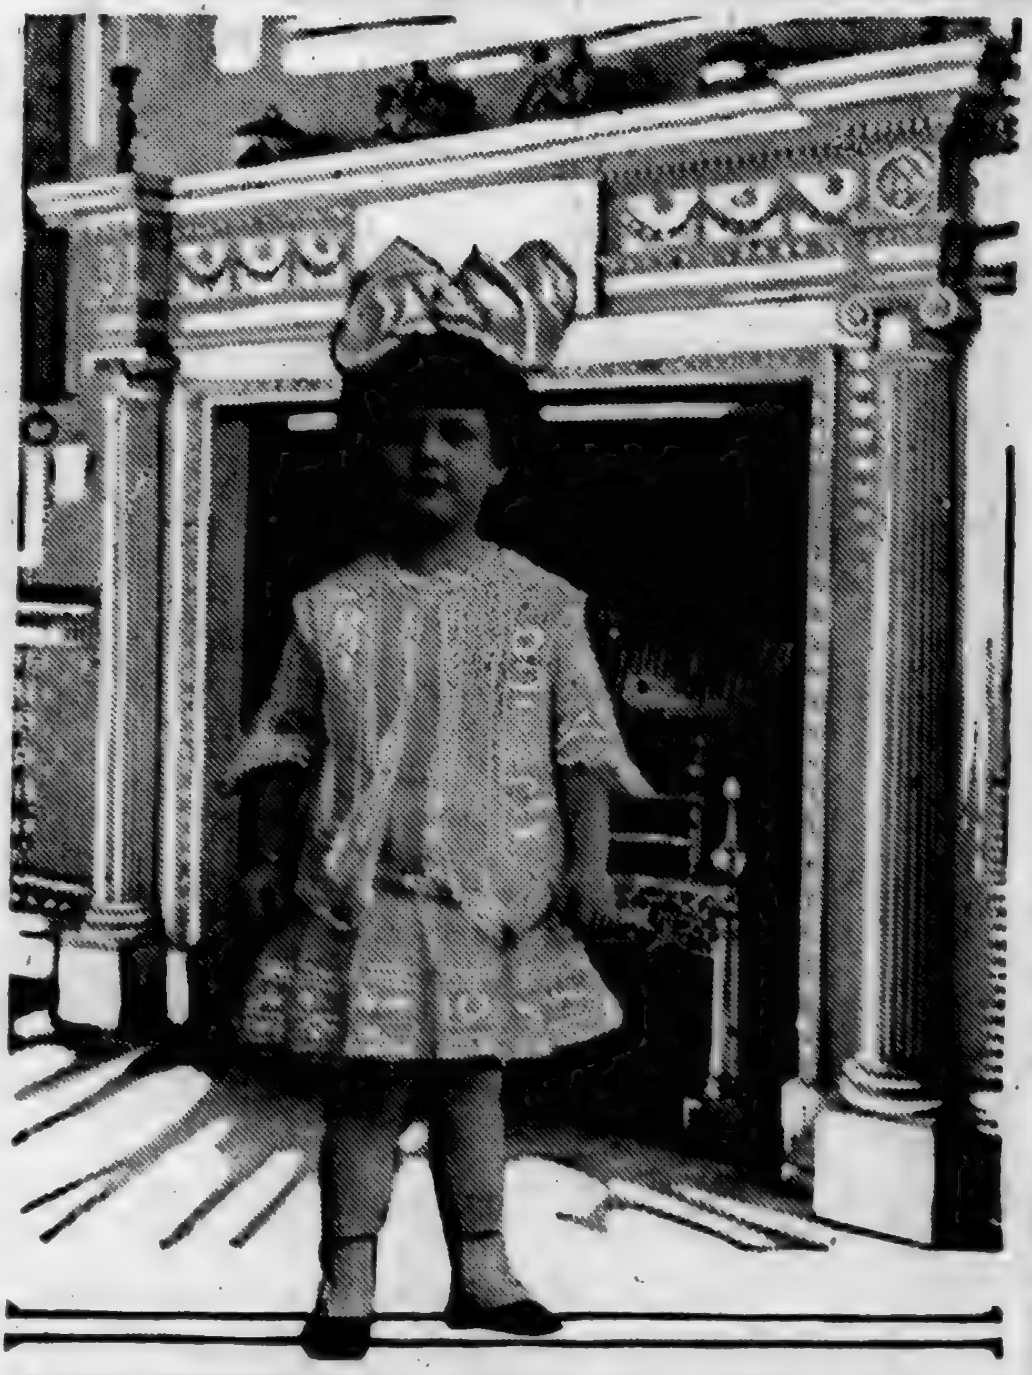
New Styles for Tiny Girls



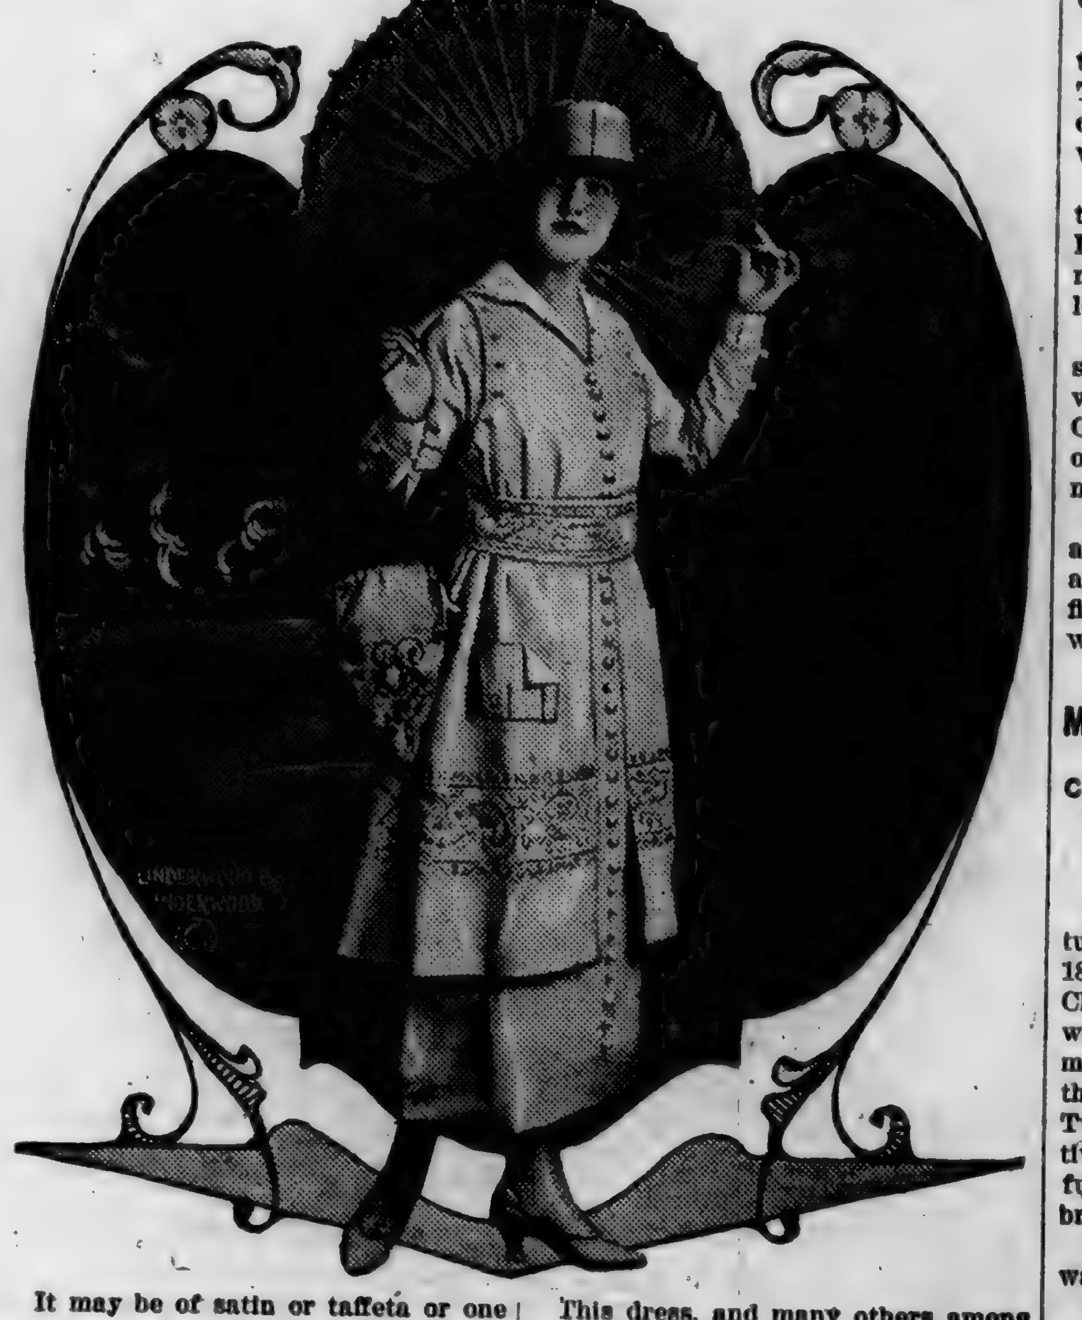
It takes considerable time to make dresses in the new styles for tiny girls, for they are made with bolero, coatees, tunics and plaited skirts. Much attention is given to good workmanship and to the details of careful finishing in these diminutive frocks, but withal they escape being fussy. Sheer white materials—with organdie a favorite—and fine, narrow lingerie laces are secure in their place as the most exquisite of materials for them. The tiniest of crochet or round pearly buttons are used for fastening and to help out in decorations on them.

For more substantial dresses linen in blue, rose or tan is made up with white batiste or other white fabric. Usually a skirt of linen is set onto a narrow belt and suspenders are made of the linen. Nearly all these "play dresses," of heavier materials, have little square patch pockets set onto the skirt, much to the joy of their small wearers. Story-book pictures, done in cross-stitch embroidery, add the fascinating qualities of rabbits, ducklings, geese, little baskets of flowers and other wonderful charms to belts and pockets.

The fine dress shown in the picture is of organdie and narrow val lace. It is a long-waisted model with short, plaited skirt, and a coatee effect at the front. The coatee fronts are joined to the bodice in the shoulder and underarm seams. A band of embroidered organdie is set in the coatee fronts and about the bottom of the skirt, with narrow insertion at each side. The pointed sleeves are cut with a flare and trimmed with insertion and edging, and a final dainty touch is added to the points of the coatee in little, pink chiffon roses.

A sash of pink ribbon is twisted about the waist and tied in a butterfly bow at the back, and another bouyant bow surmounts the head of this faultlessly dressed little beauty.

Novel and Charming Afternoon Gowns



It may be of satin or taffeta or one of the new weaves in silk, or it may be of linen or cotton, whichever you choose, and it will be correct if your last new dress is cut on the lines shown in the picture. Who would believe, except by seeing, that the smock could lodge in the brain of a clever designer and emerge in a glorified form, as it has in this handsome conception.

As shown, this dress is developed in dark sand-colored satin and ornamented with braid (which simulates embroidery) in the same color and with a little black introduced to give it emphasis.

This frock appears to be in two pieces, but the picture fails to make one entirely certain of this. The one-piece frock is the order of the day, and in frocks, as in some other things, appearances are misleading. If not in two pieces there is at least no doubt of the tunic over the skirt. Probably this and the underskirt are both joined to the bodice, but it makes no difference so long as the effect presented in the picture is attained in the making.

This dress, and many others among the new models, gives much consideration to buttons as a finish. They are round and covered with the material of the dress, so that they leave the matter of color contrast to the embroidery (or braiding that simulates it). This ornamentation is everywhere, and on dresses usually appears, as it does here, in bands.

The handsome hat is of sand-colored satin with an extension brim of melines. It is faced and corded in black, but a touch of bright color is introduced in a spray of "bleeding hearts" embroidered on the crown. A handsome tassel of black satin finishes it. These blossoms may be seen again on the handsome bag that matches the hat, and once again, in less definite form, on the parasol. It is hoping against hope, but nevertheless they may be the only bleeding hearts of which this maid has any knowledge. Matched sets of this kind are called cupid sets.

8 AMERICANS SEIZED BY MEXICAN RIOTERS

Street Cars Stormed by Angry Mob at Juarez.

MANY WOMEN JOIN IN FIGHT

Demonstration Against All U. S. Citizens Continues—Situation Is Called Serious—Withdrawal Order Out.

El Paso, Tex., Jan. 29.—Rioters in Juarez stormed four street cars during the day and seized eight American street car men. They are being held prisoners by the Mexicans. The mob on the other side of the river has assumed such a menacing attitude that Carranza soldiers are guarding the four international bridges and cavalrymen are patrolling the river front, opposite the American patrol.

The demonstration of the rioters, which was at first derisively good-natured, changed suddenly just after noon, when four shots were fired at the Mexican end of the railroad bridge. After that the mob attacked the street cars. So far no American has been harmed, but the increasing violence of the disorderly element is causing uneasiness.

Jeer All Americans.

Among the rioters are many Mexican women. These joined in the attack on the street cars and then marched to the international bridge, where they held a demonstration against all Americans.

The women joined the rioters because the United States health officers put an end to all-night traffic between Juarez and El Paso. They became infuriated when refused permission to cross the bridge.

Hundreds of excited Mexican men and women now line the banks of the Rio Grande opposite El Paso.

Mexican Reported Killed.

A report was brought to El Paso by Americans returning from Juarez that one Mexican was shot and killed during the shooting there. As he fell, it is said, he shouted:

"Vivi Villa. Death to Carranza."

The serious aspect of things in Juarez is shown most clearly by the fact that racing has been suspended. In all of the disturbances on the border, racing has continued regularly until now.

Withdrawal Order Out.

Washington, Jan. 29.—Official announcement of the withdrawal of United States troops from Mexican soil was made by the war department. Newton P. Baker, secretary of war, issued the following statement, the first official announcement of Major General Pershing's recall:

"General Pershing has been ordered to bring his troops out of Mexico. The movement is to be an immediate one and is probably already under way."

The war department announced that the northern movement of General Pershing's men began early Sunday morning with the evacuation of Colonia Dublan.

The paramount reason for supreme secrecy in withdrawing U. S. troops was based on the idea of preventing Carranza and Villista factions from obtaining possession of the military movement until it was well under way.

It will take Major General Pershing a week to get his force of 12,000 men across the border, war department officials said. The question of military withdrawal will then be taken up.

MOTHER KILLS BABE AND SELF

Chicago Husband Returns From Church to Find Bodies of Wife and Little Daughter.

Chicago, Jan. 29.—Michael Klem returned from church to his home at 1850 West Erie street to find his wife, Christina, twenty-two years old, in her wedding dress, and her eighteen-months-old baby, Olga, lying dead on the floor in the gas-filled bathroom. Two pathetic notes explained the motive of the act, which had been carefully planned. The first note was brief:

"I am doing this because I am always sick. CHRISTINA."

The second, more explicit, gave details as to the funeral.

"I am going to end my life because I see I have not anything more to do in this world. I don't want Olga to suffer and I take her with me. I don't want to write much for what I have done because you know it all. This is all until I see you again.

"CHRISTINA."

Mrs. Klem had been ill ever since the birth of her baby, according to her husband, and was frequently despondent.

U. S. Acting in Paper Tangle.

Ottawa, Jan. 29.—W. H. Parry of the United States trade commission and T. H. Chautiand, counsel for the commission, arrived here for a conference with the Canadian authorities upon the newsprint paper situation.

Gale Wrecks Coast Town.

Plymouth, England, Jan. 29.—The Devonshire fishing village of Hallsands was struck by a furious gale and all the buildings in the town except two were destroyed. There was no loss of life.

State Happenings

Edwin M. Lee Is Removed.

Indianapolis.—Governor Goodrich removed Edwin M. Lee from the Indiana public service commission, in a finding in which he said that the charge of incompetency made against Lee as a member of the commission had been sustained in the trial of the case before the governor.

Governor Goodrich again called attention informally to the fact that he considered Lee's political standing only in so far as it was an evidence of the moral qualities of the man. The governor said that if Lee had been a straightout Democrat and competent otherwise, the question of his Democracy would not have been taken into consideration against him in these proceedings.

In his formal finding in the case the governor said the charge that Lee was incompetent when he was appointed now was sustained.

Before making the announcement the governor overruled motions filed during the hearing by the defense, in which it was contended that the removal of Lee would be a judicial act and not an executive act, and that therefore the governor did not have jurisdiction.

The governor said no appointment of a man to succeed Lee on the commission would be announced at this time.

Valparaiso.—Mrs. Henry Blocker died of shock after falling from her bed and fracturing a hip she had broken in a fall two weeks ago.

Franklin.—The annual meeting of District E of the Indiana Library association will be held in this city February 7. Twenty-nine towns are included in the district.

Newcastle.—Z. A. Dougherty was wounded with a knife by Lawrence Nicholson when the two men became involved in a quarrel at New Lisbon. Nicholson was arrested.

Corunna. — John Becker, sixty, was killed instantly at a railroad watering station a mile west of here. Mr. Becker had been a track laborer on the Lake Shore railroad 24 years.

Bicknell. — Harry Hill, a miner at the American mine, was caught under falling coal and suffered a fracture of his left arm, which was crushed so badly it will have to be amputated.

Morristown.—Dr. J. A. McCulag of the National Young Women's Christian association has concluded a five days' series of meetings here. His talks have been on eugenics and euthenics. All drew large crowds.

New Albany. — Alfretta Cissel, a colored woman, fatally wounded Stafford Taylor, thirty-two, colored, when she stabbed him in the heart. He died in a few minutes. The woman fled and no trace of her has been found.

Veedersburg.—D. D. Duncan, colored, tried to sell a horse and buggy to Policeman Scherer, who was in plain clothes, for $10. Scherer arrested the man and held him until the owner arrived and told of the theft of the horse and buggy.

Jasper.—Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Bretz, Sr., of Bretzville, celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary at their home, five miles east of Huntingburg. Mr. Bretz was born on the farm he now owns and has spent all his life in Dubois county.

Fort Wayne.—The water supply of schools, theaters and other large users was cut off and State Chemist Diggs hurried here to investigate the pollution of the water. The board of health has recommended that all water be boiled.

Columbus.—Mice gnawing matches caused a fire in the bath and dressing rooms at the waterworks here. The fire was extinguished by employees. Clothes belonging to Landy H. Tooley, engineer, and some other employees, were burned.

Jeffersonville.—Mr. and Mrs. William Dreyer celebrated their golden wedding anniversary at their home near Sellersburg. Six sons, two daughters and 17 grandchildren were present. Mr. Dreyer is seventy-four years old and Mrs. Dreyer sixty-seven.

Seymour.—After deliberating more than 20 hours, a jury in the suit of John Gossett against Dr. George G. Graessle for $5,000 damages, returned a verdict for the defendant. The plaintiff alleged Doctor Graessle did not properly reset a fractured hip bone.

Indianapolis.—Development of hydro-electric power for many communities in northern Indiana is planned by the Farmers' and Merchants' Light and Power company of Mongo, which has been incorporated for a half million dollars. It is proposed to consolidate and enlarge five waterpower plants and dams in the St. Joseph and Fawn rivers in Northern Indiana and southern Michigan. John L. Hawk is president of the company.

Fort Wayne.—Bert Weston, twenty-four, a train messenger, was found dead in his room of asphyxiation. It is the coroner's opinion that Weston committed suicide.

Lafayette.—Richard A. Hawkins, fifty-six, died in a hospital here of injuries he suffered nearly a month ago when he fell down steps at the home of the Elks lodge here.

Valparaiso.—Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Zea celebrated their fifty-fifth wedding anniversary. Since their marriage, when Mr. Zea was on a furlough during the Civil war, this county has been their home.

SAVINGS IN MAINE.

"It is a good showing for Maine—better still, Maine can say, can any other state make the claim?—that no depositor in a Maine savings bank has ever lost a dollar that he deposited there. It is to be noted, moreover, that the savings banks by no means represent all the savings of the Maine people that are at interest. The savings departments of the trust companies have 90,322 depositors with deposits of $30,000,000, or twice as much as the demand deposits in the same institutions. The national banks have millions in their savings departments, and the 11,829 shareholders in the loan and building associations have to their credit an accumulated capital of $4,380,000. These and other totals make a showing for the thrift and industry of Maine people that no state can better."

This remarkable testimony to the prosperity of prohibition Maine comes from a newspaper avowedly hostile to prohibition, the Boston Herald. It is a complete answer to the oft-repeated falsehood of the brewers and distillers that Maine has been impoverished because she has steadfastly refused to legalize the dramshop. In population Maine ranks as the thirty-fourth state in the Union. But on June 30, 1915, the deposits in her savings banks amounted to $97,423,088.63, a total exceeded by only 11 other states. The amount of depositors—238,580—represents nearly one-third of the total population of the state, including men, women and children. Only ten states exceed Maine in the actual number of depositors. The total proportion of depositors to population is equalled by only five states. Deposits in building and loan associations amounted to $5,558,289, with 12,113 depositors. Add to this the savings deposited in trust companies and national banks, and the per capita individual deposits amount to $244.50 for every man, woman and child in the state. In 1914 the average per capita individual deposits in all the states was $188, which average Maine leads by over $56.

VICTORIES ON NOVEMBER 7.

Michigan, Montana, Nebraska, South Dakota and the territory of Alaska voted by large majorities to outlaw the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors.

Arkansas and Arizona defeated the liquor interests' efforts to substitute a local option law for the state-wide prohibition law.

Idaho voted for constitutional prohibition.

Oregon, Colorado and Washington rejected by overwhelming majorities the beer measures initiated by the brewers.

Oregon gave a substantial majority vote for an amendment prohibiting the importation into the state of alcoholic liquors for beverage purposes.

Utah, Wyoming and Florida elected legislatures pledged to pass at their next session prohibitory laws.

DEWEY ON WINE.

George Creel recently interviewed Admiral Dewey for the New York World. The admiral gave his opinion about the "wine mess" in answer to the question, "What about the famous drinking order?"

"A good thing." His answer was instant. "There was some feeling about it at first, because the papers made fun of it, and there was also an attempt to make it appear that Secretary Daniels was charging officers with intemperance. I think that the feeling has disappeared completely. Every railroad, every great corporation, has long had an ironclad rule forbidding men to drink while on duty. Isn't a ship as important as a locomotive? Practically every European power has copied the order, by the way."

TAP-ROOT OF EVIL.

The late Gen. William Booth of the Salvation Army summed it all up as follows: "The drink difficulty lies at the root of everything: Nine-tenths of our poverty, squalor, vice and crime spring from this poisonous tap-root. Many of our social evils which overshadow the land like so many upas trees would dwindle away and die if they were not so constantly watered with strong drink. There is universal agreement on that point."

BIG DEFICIT IN CHICAGO.

Chicago, which gets $7,000,000 from its saloons, will, it is said, have a deficit of about $400,000 at the end of the present year. Cincinnati, another very wet town, is also practically bankrupt. Meanwhile prohibition states and cities are prospering because they do not have to sink so much money in caring for the crime and poverty caused by drink.

WASH WOMEN SCARCE.

Wash women are getting very scarce in Des Moines, says an Iowa paper. Two dollars per day, car fare and meals is no temptation to a woman who has a husband to support her and little children to care for in the home. Many men who drank up their wages and spent their spare time in saloons, are now supporting their families, buying ground and building homes, and have become respectable citizens, although a lawless floating tramp element would try to make it appear that prohibition does not prohibit.

MOTHERHOOD WOMAN'S JOY

Suggestions to Childless Women.

Among the virtues of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the ability to correct sterility in the cases of many women. This fact is well established as evidenced by the following letter and hundreds of others we have published in these colums.

Poplar Bluff, Mo.—"I want other women to know what a blessing Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been to me. We had always wanted a baby in our home but I was in poor health and not able to do my work. My mother and husband both urged me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so, my health improved and I am now the mother of a fine baby girl and do all my own house work."—Mrs. ALLIA B. TIMMONS, 216 Almond St., Poplar Bluff, Mo.

In many other homes, once childless, there are now children because of the fact that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound makes women normal, healthy and strong

Each in His Little Cot.

The scene was the clubroom; the hour advanced. Serious, gloomy, cheerful, elated were the earnest faces of the talkers by turn, as the arguments for and against came thick and fast.

And the subject under debate—"Do Fish Sleep?" That was all; but it was sufficient to keep them at it till a late hour of the night, while patiently waited their respective wives at home.

So fiercely waged the controversy that it burnt itself away. There came a lull; most of the debaters were played right out.

It was then that the "cheerful idot," who had played the listener's role, chipped in. Rising from his roomy arm-chair, where he had lain unobserved, he stretched, yawned, then spoke:

"Gentlemen, the hour is late; I, for one, must hie me to my cot. Do fish sleep? I do not know. But, if they don't why river-beds?"

WESTERN CANADA LEADS AS WHEAT PRODUCER

342,000,000 Bushels Wheat in 1915; In 1916 Many Farmers Paid for Their Land Out of Their Crop.

That Western Canada is indeed "Mistress of Wheat" to the extent that its 1915 crop exceeded, acre for acre, the production of any country on this continent is a striking fact proved by the following figures:

In 1915 the Dominion of Canada produced 376,000,000 bushels of wheat, which represented an average yield of 29 bushels to the acre. The United States produced 1,011,505,000 bushels, yield of 17 bushels per acre. The only serious competitors in wheat production in South America were Argentine, with 178,221,000 bushels, or less than 12 bushels per acre, and Chile, with 19,000,000 bushels or 13 bushels per acre.

The three Western Canadian prairie provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta produced between them 342,000,000 bushels out of the total Canadian 376,000,000 bushels. It will be seen, therefore, that, outside of the United States, Western Canada produced considerably more than the combined production of North and South America. Canada is of course a new-settled country, and the fact that the crop of the United States was practically three times as much is no discouragement. The United States has at present more than twelve times the population of Canada in approximately the same area.

To illustrate further the greater productiveness of Western Canadian land, we submit the following figures, showing the 1915 yields per acre in the three provinces of Western Canada and in the states which in that year produced the greatest quantity of wheat. The figures are taken from the U. S. department of agriculture's annual report and from the figures of the Dominion census bureau:

	Bushels per acre 1915
All Canada	29
Western Canada only	29 1-5
Province of Manitoba	28 4-5
Province of Saskatchewan	28 1-2
Province of Alberta	32 4-5
United States, all	17
Montana	26 1-2
Washington	25 1-5
Wisconsin	22 3-4
Ohio	20 2-5
Iowa	19 4-5
Illinois	19
Pennsylvania	18 1-2
Nebraska	18 2-5
North Dakota	18 1-5
Indiana	17 1-5
South Dakota	17 1-10
Minnesota	17
Texas	15 1-2
Virginia	13 4-5
Kansas	12 1-2
Missouri	12 3-10
Oklahoma	11 3-5

In 1916 the crop was not as heavy, but the yields in many districts were very large. So large, indeed, was the acreage under cultivation in 1915 that the resulting crop proved too large to be all threshed the same fall. It overloaded railroads, and made marketing slow. A less amount of fall plowing was done than would have been done in a less heavy year, because the average farmer was too busy with his threshing. All these conditions necessarily reacted upon the acreage seeded in the spring of 1916. Add to this that labor last year, owing to the great number of Canadians who have enlisted, was scarce and high-priced, and one factor in the decreased yield—smaller acreage under crop was evident.

Another factor is that this year Western Canada has experienced, in common with the entire North American continent, conditions that tave been less favorable to the production of big crops. The conditions have resulted in smaller yield per acre and reduced grade of grain in certain localities.

The average yield of wheat in the three western provinces is estimated by the government at about 16 bushels per acre, oats 43 bushels, and barley 27 bushels.

The financial value of their crops to Western Canadian farmers has been greater this year than ever before. Owing to the high prices of grain that are prevailing, returns have been received that are extremely profitable. With wheat standing at the present time at over $1.90 per bushel at the Great Lakes, a wheat crop at present figures would pay the farmer, even supposing he had only the average of 16 bushels per acre, over $30.00 per acre. A large number are receiving $50.00 per acre—some have received $75.00, and a few even more than that.

This price, of course, is not all profit: it represents the gross return, and the cost of operation must be deducted. But it does not, even at the highest figures, cost more than 65 cents to raise a bushel of wheat in Western Canada, so that the profit can be figured accordingly. It must be emphasized that the acre which produces a $30.00 crop costs in the first case, probably less than that. In the United States the same class of land would cost in many districts from $100 to $200 per acre, and even then a return of $30.00 would be considered extremely satisfactory. In Western Canada the best class of agricultural land, capable of producing crops that in size compare with any country in the world except, perhaps, some European countries, can be obtained at, on the average, from $20 to $30 per acre, with irrigated lands somewhat higher. It is no exaggeration whatever to say that a number of Western Canadian farmers have paid for their land entirely from the proceeds of last year's crop, and this includes men who last year began for the first time.—Advertisement.

Couldn't Remember.

"Before we were married," sobbed Angelina, "did you not always call me your little drop of cream?"

"Well, you know," answered Harold, "cream turns sour if you keep it long enough. I was a fool when I married you."

"And didnt' you tell me you had plenty of money behind you?" asked Angelina.

"That was correct. I lived in front of a bank," the wily Harold replied.

"And you never take me out now," said the wee wifie.

"Not since you took me in," was Harold's cold rejoinder. "I used to enjoy single life, but now I'm that miserable I don't know myself until I feel in my empty pockets; then it's easy to remember who I am."

IS CHILD CROSS, FEVERISH, SICK

Look, Mother! If tongue is coated, give "California Syrup of Figs."

Children love this "fruit laxative," and nothing else cleanses the tender stomach, liver and bowels so nicely.

A child simply will not stop playing to empty the bowels, and the result is they become tightly clogged with waste, liver gets sluggish, stomach sours, then your little one becomes cross, half-sick, feverish, don't eat, sleep or act naturally, breath is bad, system full of cold, has sore throat, stomach-ache or diarrhea. Listen, Mother! See if tongue is coated, then give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the constipated waste, sour bile and undigested food passes out of the system, and you have a well child again.

Millions of mothers give "California Syrup of Figs" because it is perfectly harmless; children love it, and it never fails to act on the stomach, liver and bowels.

Ask at the store for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly printed on the bottle. Adv.

TAKES OFF DANDRUFF HAIR STOPS FALLING

Girls! Try This! Makes Hair Thick, Glossy, Fluffy, Beautiful—No More Itching Scalp.

Within ten minutes after an application of Danderine you cannot find a single trace of dandruff or falling hair and your scalp will not itch, but what will please you most will be after a few weeks' use, when you see new hair, fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair—growing all over the scalp.

A little Danderine immediately doubles the beauty of your hair. No difference how dull, faded, brittle and scraggy, just moisten a cloth with Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. The effect is amazing—your hair will be light, fluffy and wavy, and have an appearance of abundance; an incomparable luster, softness and luxuriance.

Get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any store, and prove that your hair is as pretty and soft as any—that it has been neglected or injured by careless treatment—that's all—you surely can have beautiful hair and lots of it if you will just try a little Danderine. Adv.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

LESSON FOR FEBRUARY 4

JESUS THE SAVIOR OF THE WORLD.

LESSON TEXT—John 3:1-18.

GOLDEN TEXT—For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten son, that whosoever believeth in him, should not perish, but have everlasting life.—John 3:16.

This most famous interview in history occurred probably in some room in Jerusalem where Jesus was a guest, a room reached by an outer stairway so that he could receive visitors privately.

I. The Teacher of the Jews (vv. 1, 2). Nicodemus was a member of the sanhedrin (Ch. 7:50). He belonged to the Pharisees who were much devoted to the scriptures, and in whose hand the political affairs were largely placed by the Romans. There are several reasons why Nicodemus came to Jesus by night. Prudence dictated secrecy, but that he came at all was encouraging. He was more apt to find Jesus at home in the evening. He had much that he wished to learn, and needed a quiet hour, removed from the crowd. The things that Jesus had done and taught made Nicodemus think that Jesus might be the Messiah. Nicodemus wanted to know how to be blessed or happy.

II. A Teacher From God (vv. 3-8). A great majority of the disciples of Jesus came from the common people (I Cor. 1:26) yet for all classes he had the same message, "Ye must be born again." The answer of Jesus was according to the condition of the man before him, the deepest need of his soul. Literally, he said, "Most assuredly, except a man (anyone) be born again (anew or from above) he cannot enter the kingdom of heaven." To be born anew means to be born again. It matters not what your parentage may have been. If any man could do without a new birth, Nicodemus was that man. He was moral, religious and sincere. The instrument through which this birth is effective is the word of God (I Peter 1:23; James 1:18; John 15:3) and the author is the Holy Spirit (v. 5; Titus 3:5). Water is a symbol of the word (Eph. 5:26). Literally translated, this passage would read, "Except one be born of water and wind." And as wind "by universal consent refers to one factor in regeneration, the Spirit, so the water manifestly refers to the other element of regeneration, the word." The main contention is that the word is the instrument in the regeneration. Although not expressly mentioned here, it is elsewhere. Nicodemus was a teacher of Israel (v. 10 R. V.) and yet he did not know so fundamental a truth as the new birth, though the Old Testament taught it.

III. The Pupil's Difficulty (vv. 9-13). The works of the flesh as contrasted with the fruits of the Spirit are brought out in the Epistles, yet, like Nicodemus, people are asking today, "How can these things be?" Jesus challenges Nicodemus with the words, "Art thou a teacher of Israel and understandest not these things?" What Jesus said to Nicodemus (vv. 11-18) is true of the scriptures now, especially of the New Testament. They testify to the facts which Jesus knew and revealed, he having been in heaven, and come down from heaven for the purpose of making them known. To be born implies that it is the starting point of a new life, that we must grow as a child grows to be a man until it reaches to "a perfect man unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ" (Eph. 4:13).

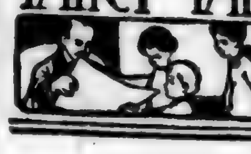
IV. The Lesson Illustrated (vv. 14, 15, 18). Jesus believed in objective teaching, and he here refers to a memorable event in the early history of the Jews as illustrating his teaching. The journey through the wilderness to the promised land became weary and discouraging, and the Israelites complained bitterly of their hardships, complaining against God and against Moses. Punishment came in the form of fiery serpents, called fiery from the burning, stinging sensation caused by their bite. So intense was the venom of the bites that they became fatal in a few hours. This punishment made the people realize the awful evil of sin. They acknowledged their sin, and prayed for forgiveness. Moses made a brazen serpent, and carried it through the camp so that all could see, and looking became an act of faith, implying repentance and return to obedience and to God. Thus our salvation is literally, "Look and live;" believe and have eternal life; doubt and perish (Mark 16:16; John 3:36).

V. God's Greatest Gift (v. 16). This is probably the most familiar verse known to the Christian world, and has led more souls to salvation than any other in the Bible. In it is revealed the mighty God—"For God;" a mighty motive—"God so loved;" a mighty scope—"God so loved the world;" a mighty sacrifice—"God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son;" a mighty escape—"should not perish;" a mighty gift—"eternal life."

This verse is the gospel in a nutshell; the origin and grounds of his salvation.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER



SNOWBALL FIGHT.

"The Fairies," said Daddy, "were singing this song the other day:

How the snow falls,
We'll make snow-balls,
It's a real winter's day,
Hurrah, hurrah!

"And how happy and jolly they were. The snow kept falling, falling all the time, and the Fairies sang their little song over and over again.

"'But we mustn't just talk about making snowballs,' said the Fairy Queen. 'We must make some.'

"'That's so,' agreed the Fairies. 'We must certainly make some right away.'

"And to work they went. Snowball after snowball they made, until finally the Fairy Princess Joy said: 'What will we do with so many? We'll have such a lot we'll never know what to do with them.'

"'Let's have a good old-fashioned fight,' said Fairy Ybab.

"'Splendid!' shouted the Fairy Queen.

"'Shall we ask the Brownies, the Gnomes, the Elves and all of our Friends?' asked the Fairy Princess Joy.

"'Yes,' said the Fairy Queen. 'Let's have them all.'

"So some of the Fairies flew off to ask their Friends to the party.

"Soon they were back again, and all the Elves, Gnomes and Brownies were with them.

"'What quantities of snowballs,' said the Brownies. 'How could you ever make so many?'

"'Well,' said the Fairies, 'We kept singing and were so happy that we seemed to make them without thinking. Even work is pretty nice when People sing, you know.'

"'But everyone can't sing when working,' said Billie Brownie thoughtfully.

"'No,' said one of the Fairies, 'but happiness is almost like a song, you know—and often when we're not really singing we can hear a little cheerful tune in our hearts.'

"'Oh, you're always happy,' said Billie Brownie.

"'And you're always jolly,' said the Fairy.

"'Best way to be,' said Billie.

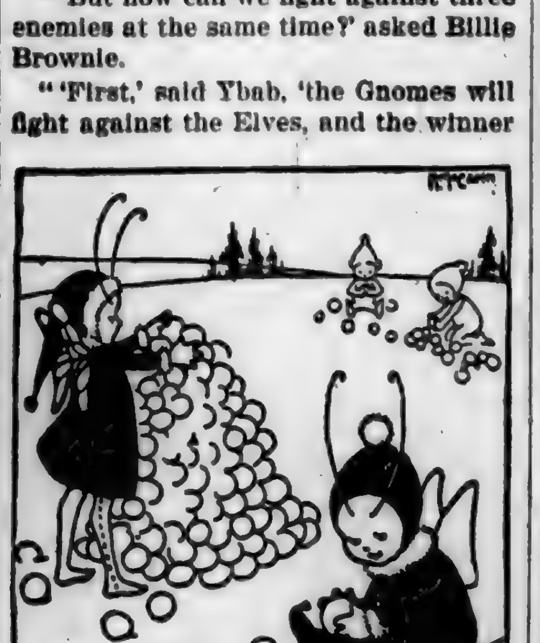
"'Quite right,' said the Fairy.

"'How are we going to arrange about sides?' asked the Fairy Queen.

"'Well,' said Ybab, 'instead of having two Forts as we usually do, let's have four Forts. The Brownies will take one, the Elves one, the Gnomes the third, and we'll take the fourth.'

"'But how can we fight against three enemies at the same time?' asked Billie Brownie.

"'First,' said Ybab, 'the Gnomes will fight against the Elves, and the winner will fight aginst the Brownies. Then the winner of that battle will fight against us.'



Snowball After Snowball They Made.

"'A fine new scheme,' they all shouted. And the battle commenced.

"Of course the Forts had been made while the Snowballs were being made, for they had to be put somewhere, and there is no place better for Snowballs than a Snow Fort.

"And when they had found they were making so many Snowballs they made two extra Forts to hold them all.

"Well, the Gnomes won the first battle, and the Elves sat down in their broken Fort and panted for breath—for they had been fighting very hard even though they had lost. They were rather glad that they had lost, for they wanted to watch some of the battles.

"The Gnomes next fought the Brownies, and they won again.

"'Dear me,' said the Fairy Queen, 'it looks as though the Gnomes would be the Great Winners.'

"The Gnomes laughed and said they hoped they would be, for it was some time since they had won a Snowball fight. The Brownies said that they hadn't been able to win for they got out of breath almost before the battle commenced and sometimes they had forgotten and turned somersaults over the side of their Fort—and so had lost many Balls that way.

"The Gnomes did win the whole fight, and for a prize the Fairies gave them some new magic sleds."

Don't Call on Pneumonia Patient.

"Kissing a pneumonia patient is almost as hazardous as to kiss a diphtheria or scarlet fever patient," Health Officer J. H. He declares that "numerous physicians have referred to the unusual prevalence of the disease and the severe type that prevails."

Why Rheumatism Comes With Cold Weather!

BY VALENTINE MOTT PIERCE, M. D.

A close connection exists between these two—cold weather and rheumatism. Prof. Alex. Haig, of London, has the most followers in the medical profession in the belief that the presence in the system of uric acid, or its salts in excess, is the real cause of rheumatism. Everyone has recognised the difference in the appearance of their water as soon as it gets cold; there is often a copious sediment of brickdust.

Several causes may lead up to an accumulation of uric acid in the system, which, in turn, causes rheumatism or gout, or creaky joints, or swollen fingers, or painful joints. For one reason the skin does not throw off the uric acid, by profuse sweating, as in the hot weather, and the kidneys are unable to take care of the double burden. Another reason is that people do not drink as much water in cold weather as in summer, which helps to flush the kidneys. Again, they eat more meat in cold weather, and some people are so susceptible that they soon develop rheumatism after eating meat.

At all such times persons should drink copiously of hot water, say, a pint morning and night, and take Anuric three or four times a day. This Anuric comes in tablet form and can be had at almost any drug store. It dissolves the uric acid in the system and carries it outward. I would advise everyone to take Anuric occasionally, and continue for three or four weeks, and in that way avoid rheumatism, gout and many of the painful disorders due to uric acid. —Adv.

SALTS IS FINE FOR KIDNEYS, QUIT MEAT

Flush the Kidneys at once when Back hurts or Bladder bothers—Meat forms uric acid.

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which clogs the kidney pores so they sluggishly filter or strain only part of the waste and poisons from the blood, then you get sick. Nearly all rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, constipation, dizziness, sleeplessness, bladder disorders come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts, or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any reliable pharmacy and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to activity, also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer causes irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which all regular meat eaters should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and the blood pure, thereby avoiding serious kidney complications.

A paper was handed around for the ladies to sign in the interest of the enfranchisement of Indiana women. Meedames Hathaway and Leighty then sang a beautiful duet. Farmer's Club Is Organized

An interesting Community Meeting was held at the Fairview Church on Wednesday evening, January 24th. A neat invitation card had been gotten out by the committee on arrangements which met with a ready response from the people of the community and the church was comfortably filled. A program was arranged consisting of Congregational singing, Invocation, Instrumental music by Mr. and Mrs H. A. Pond; a duet by Ford Jackson and Roy Koch; and an Address by County Agent A. Z. Arehart on the subject of "The Farm Club". It was voted to form a Farmer's Club and an after meeting was held to perfect the organization for which about thirty remained.

The officers elected were:-Frank E. Johnson, president; Albert Ginther, Vice-president; and Mrs. H. A. Pond, Secretary-Treasurers. H. A. Pond, B. W. Markin and Mrs. Lina Knight were appointed a committee on Entertainment; and J. W. Shearer, Samuel Feller and Mr. Shrader, a committee on program for next meeting. Mr. Hindman Is Released

Samuel Hindman, of Jackson township, has been released from the county jail where he has been confined for the past few weeks because of mental disorders resulting in violent conduct while he was at large. He was held in the jail pending action on an application to have him committed to the Easthaven hospital for the insane at Richmond.

Don P. Hindman, his son, who was formerly guardian for his father's estate, made an affidavit that he believed his father could be better cared for at his home in this county than in the state hospital for the insane. He says that the father no longer gives evidence of the violent actions and dangerous tendencies he displayed before he was placed in jail and that he believes his father would not be a dangerous menace to the community. He says he will undertake to care for and manage the person of his father.

On filing this affidavit with the county clerk, Sheriff Baltz consented to release Mr. Hindman, who has suffered mental disorders for some time past. Last September, his soon, Don, was appointed guardian because of his mental derangement, and later, on a proper showing, Mr. Hindman was again restored to the management and use of his own property. Soon after this he gave evidences again of mental unbalance which resulted in the steps taken within the past few weeks.—Star.

HOGS INFESTED WITH WORMS

Animal Cannot Produce Pork Economically While in Weakened Condition—Remedy Is Given.

A hog that is infested with worms cannot produce pork economically, because its system is not in normal condition. Furthermore, such a hog is also more susceptible to contagious and other diseases than one not affected in that manner. We have often made the statement that worms are frequently the indirect cause of cholera. Do not understand us to say that worms will produce cholera, says a writer in an exchange. Far from it. Cholera is a germ disease and can be produced only by the cholera germ, but a strong, vigorous hog is not nearly so susceptible to cholera as is one whose system is in a run-down condition.

A very good, practical remedy for worms consists in feeding one pound of copperas to 100 pigs for a period of five days. Then feed no copperas for six weeks; after that feed copperas for five days again as before and continue this intermittent copperas feeding from birth to block. The copperas should be dissolved in water and mixed with the grain, preferably ground grain of some kind. Many hog feeders are using this remedy and recommend it very highly.

PREPARING SOIL FOR WHEAT

Quite as Much Depends on Preliminary Work for Best Development as on Use of Fertilizer.

Quite as much depends upon the proper preparation of the soil for the best development of plants as the use of fertilizers. A case in point is that of an intelligent Missouri farmer who lived in a section where the idea prevailed that wheat could not be profitably grown there. He had tried to raise wheat on his farm, in the old, rough way, and could get but ten or twelve bushels per acre. He visited the state experiment station at a time when a plot of ground was being prepared for wheat and became so impressed with their thorough methods of soil preparation that he prepared a field on his farm in the same way, and from this harvested a crop of 35 bushels of good wheat per acre, the only fertilizer used being stable manure.

BEES ARE GREAT TRAVELERS

To Collect a Pound of Clover Honey Insects Must Get Material From 62,000 Blossoms.

The bee is famed for industry, but to show how much work the bee really does a naturalist says that to collect a pound of clover honey the bees must deprive 62,000 clover blossoms.

The flowers must be visited by 3,750,000 bees, or, in other words, to collect his pound of honey one bee must make 3,750,000 trips to and from the hive.

As bees are known to fly for miles in their quest of suitable fields of operation, it is clear that a single ounce of honey represents millions of miles of travel.

COMPOSTED MANURE IS GOOD

Better Than Well-Rotted Article and Very Much Cheaper—Is Well-Balanced Plant Food.

Composted manure is as good or better than the ordinary well-rotted article and very much cheaper because more can be saved and much less is wasted by being washed away or leaching into the soil while rotting. It is a better balanced plant food and does not produce so much leaf and vine instead of the fruit or roots for which most garden crops are grown.

Were you there? Where? Why, up to see Antwerp trimmed to the tune of 42—20 by the local High school quintet. Antwerp had won seven straight games previous to their appearance here, and came all cocked and primed ready to hand out another lemon, but were sadly disappointed. The local boys went into them like a shot out of a cannon, and certainly made things miserable for them. With Coburn and Curie at forward hitting the basket with clock-like precision; "Happy" at Center, making their middle man look like he was under the weather, and Hathaway and Morr at guard, scarcely letting their opponents breathe unless by their permission. The visitors had no chance, although putting up a game fight to the finish.

That's one thing the editor has been afraid of happening to him, but if it should the Mrs. will have all the work to do. Then too, men have no business trying to do the washing, they are too awkward about the house work.

SAGE AND SULPHUR DARKENS GRAY HAIR

It's Grandmother's Recipe to Restore Color, Gloss and Attractiveness.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, for about 50 cents.

Don't stay gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy and attractive.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire dark hair and a youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

IF

you are a business man, if you are a professional man, if you are employed at a daily wege, make up your mind to deposit weekly a certain sum of money in the bank. You'll be surprised how the sum will grow. Cash in bank gingers up the man who has it there. He has more confidence in himself. The business man is ready for a dull season. He is ready for an opportunity.

So is the professional man. The man who is working for a daily wage and who hasn't any money in bank frequently is fearful of a loss of his situation. He does not work as well or with the confidence in himself as does the man with something laid aside for a rainy day.

WHEN YOU WAKE UP DRINK GLASS OF HOT WATER

Wash the poisons and toxins from system before putting more food into stomach.

Says inside-bathing makes anyone look and feel clean, sweet and refreshed.

Wash yourself on the inside before breakfast like you do on the outside. This is vastly more important because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, causing illness, while the bowel pores do.

For every ounce of food and drink taken into the stomach, nearly an ounce of waste material must be carried out of the body. If this waste material is not eliminated day by day it quickly ferments and generates poisons, gases and toxins which are absorbed or sucked into the blood stream, through the lymph ducts which should suck only nourishment to sustain the body.

A splendid health measure is to drink, before breakfast each day, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, which is a harmless way to wash these poisons, gases and toxins from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels; thus cleansing, sweetening and freshening the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach.

A quarter pound of limestone phosphate costs but very little at the drug store but is sufficient to make anyone an enthusiast on inside-bathing. Men and women who are accustomed to wake up with a dull, aching head or have furred tongue, bad taste, nasty breath, sallow complexion, others who have billious attacks, acid stomach or constipation are assured of pronounced improvement in both health and appearance shortly.

HE CAN'T BE FOOLED AGAIN

Next Person Who Goes Into This Grocery Store With Pot Will Be Looking for Trouble.

Into the grocery store walked an ancient lady with a slow and halting tread, and carrying on her arm a basket containing a large earthenware pot with a lid.

Placing the basket on the counter, she made various purchases, which she put carefully in the pot and had her bill made out.

"By the way," she said, "do you mind keeping this pot with the purchases in it until I come back and pay for them, as I have to buy other things some distance off, and it will be more convenient for me to leave the things here till later?"

This request was willingly acceded to, and, lifting the pot carefully out of the basket, the old dame placed it, with an effort, in a corner; then, putting her basket on her arm, left the shop.

Hours went by, day ripened into evening, and evening gave way to night, but the old woman did not return.

At last the proprietor thought of examining the earthenware pot to see if by any chance it had its owner's address upon it, and great was his astonishment, not untinged with dismay, to find that it possessed no bottom!

Nowadays that shopkeeper is very suspicious of pots in baskets.

M'CRAY BILL IS KILLED IN SENATE

Measure to Abolish Capital Punishment Voted Down.

VOTE WAS 29 NOES, 18 AYES

Dry Forces Win First Victory When House Adopts Favorable Report From Committee on Prohibition Bill.

Indianapolis.—The Indiana senate refused to abolish capital punishment in this state. A bill to abolish this form of punishment was introduced by Senator McCray of Indianapolis and it was the subject of debate for a full day. On roll call it was killed, the vote being 29 noes and 18 ayes. favorable report from the committee on the state-wide prohibition bill. The supporters of the bill said they would try to have the bill brought out for passage later.

A big squabble has developed over the highway commission bill and the bill to repeal the three-mile road law, and the road committees of the house and senate will hold a joint public hearing Thursday night.

Twelve more lobbyists have registered with the secretary of state. They are as follows: George H. Graham, Logansport, for the Glutrin Paving company of Columbus, O.; Ross F. Lockridge, Indianapolis, for the Citizens' League of Indiana, in the interests of a constitutional convention; T. J. Croak, Hammond, for the State Building Trades council of Indiana; William F. Wilson, Indianapolis, for the Indiana State Council of Carpenters; A. M. Bickel, Elkhart, for the New York Central Railroad company; Charles E. Rose, Toledo, O., for the Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railroad company; Hugh B. Reynolds, B. H. Banchene, John W. Coneys, S. O. Pickens and Charles L. Nesbit, all of Indianapolis, for the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad company.

The resolution introduced early in the legislative session by Senator Porter of Washington for an amendment to the state constitution to abolish the manufacture of liquor was recommended for passage in the senate by the committee on constitutional revision. The drys are opposed to a constitutional amendment on the liquor question unless there is a statutory prohibition bill passed along with it. The resolution would have to pass both houses at this session and the session in 1919 and then be adopted by a majority of the voters of the state before it would become effective.

The committee also reported favorably on the resolution fixing the number of supreme court judges, making a minimum number of three and a maximum number of thirteen. The resolution prohibiting the increase of salaries of any state official for the term for which he is elected was recommended for passage.

In the house the Turner bill, to give six peremptory challenges in the formation of juries in civil trials, being defeated by a vote of 66 to 25. The Wood bill, prohibiting the sale of liquor on trains in Indiana, was passed, 87 to 6, and the Williams bill, prohibiting the killing of quail for three years, was passed 79 to 12.

Resolutions have been introduced in the senate and the house requesting the governor to direct the state board of accounts to make an investigation of the expenditure of the more than $100,000 which was appropriated to pay the expenses of the Indiana exhibit at the Panama-Pacific exposition at San Francisco. The bills appropriating this money did not require any accounting from the commission which spent the money and this legislature wishes to have an accounting and ascertain how the money was spent.

Data of State Inspection.

Percentages obtained from the figures in the annual report of the state department of weights and measures indicate that the proportion of inaccurate scales and measures in Indianapolis is low in comparison with other cities of the state and the rural districts, where there is no systematic inspection.

About one-third of the population of Indiana is protected by official scale and measure inspection. Almost 2,000,000 persons, however, are unprotected from incorrect scales and measures. The work of the state department reaches fourteen cities and towns, seven counties and all state institutions.

In 1916, weighing machines numbering 22,785 were inspected under the direction of the department by its deputies and by local inspectors. The number of dry measures inspected was 12,645 and the number of liquid measures, 8,735. Boxes, automatic pumps and gauges such as are used for retailing gasoline, kerosene and oil, to the number of 1,986 were inspected. Milk jars, gas, water and electric meters, yard and counter measures, and oil and milk can inspections swell the total number of inspections to 80,735. Included in the total, also, are the results of an inspection survey in November and December, made with a small automobile and trailer through the territory surrounding Marion county, within a radius of 50 miles of Indianapolis, where no inspectors work.

The percentage of incorrect scales found in Indianapolis in 1916 was 3.7 per cent of the total number of 5,364 inspected; the percentage of inaccurate measures was 2.7 per cent of the total number inspected. The percentages of inaccuracies on all the inspections made in the state were 20.34 and 15 per cent, respectively. One-third of the scales tested, including wagon and grocery store scales, on the November and December survey, were found to be inaccurate, and 46 per cent of the measures tested were found to be incorrect. The system of scale and measure inspection is best developed in Indianapolis, and the percentage figures on inaccurate scales and measures are correspondingly low.

The inaccuracies discovered on the inspection survey were both overweight and underweight inaccuracies. The general conclusion drawn by John T. Willett, chief inspector, is that lack of knowledge of whether scales are right or not and a "trust to luck that they are" attitude is responsible for the gross inaccuracies discovered. Many farmers' scales and large scales used in buying grain and cattle are exposed to the weather and are not cared for properly. That they should fail to register correctly is to be expected, according to Willett. Many old measures, dented and battered, were found. Many of the old-style high measures, placed under a ban, because they permit stacking and pyramiding, which broader, flatter measures do not, also were found.

In contrast to the percentages in unorganized territory, the report calls attention to the following percentages of inaccurate scales found in cities where periodic and systematic inspections are made: Indianapolis, 3.7; Evansville, 7.4; South Bend, 19.1; Marion, 3.7; Lafayette, 5.4; Hammond, 12.2; Richmond, 9.5; Elkhart, 11.1; Kokomo, 21.7, and Columbus, 13.1. The two Indiana cities that show percentages of incorrect scales found out of proportion with the average percentage are Terre Haute, with a percentage of 43.2 of the scales inspected found incorrect, and Gary with a percentage of 36.3 found incorrect. The percentages in the seven counties included were higher than in the cities accounted for by the department, with the explanation that the inspection systems outside the cities and towns are not organized so thoroughly.

The survey made in unorganized territory, which disclosed such large percentages of inaccurate scales and measures, included Cicero, Noblesville, Arcadia, Pendleton, Greenfield, Fortville, Morgantown, Martinsville, Danville, Lebanon and smaller towns. In the larger cities, the use of tall, narrow measures, condemned by the department, practically has been discontinued.

More than four-fifths of the baskets and berry boxes inspected under the department's direction were found to be giving short measure. This poor showing was explained by Willett as due to the fact that berry boxes were inspected only where complaints reached the office. The percentage on scales and measures, however, were obtained by the inspection of all the scales and measures that the inspectors found in their work. The percentage of oil and milk cans found to be inaccurate was 4.06.

Eighty-three prosecutions were instituted under the direction of the department, and fines amounting to $1,021 were collected. Harry E. Barnard is the state commissioner of weights and measures.

Special Election Called.

Governor Goodrich has called a special election for February 6 in Steuben, LaGrange and Noble counties, to fill the vacancy caused by Senator Green's death.

The results of the last election in Senator Green's district show that the district is safely in the Republican column. He carried his district by a plurality of 2,004 and received a larger number of votes in each county than did his Democratic opponent, Clement G. Routsong. Following is the vote in each county as shown by the records in the office of the secretary of state:

Steuben county—Green, 2,414; Routsong, 1,370.

LaGrange county — Green, 1,903; Routsong, 1,423.

Noble county — Green, 3,414; Routsong, 2,939.

These figures indicate that the district would elect another Republican senator at the special election, this placing the senate back equally divided between the Democratic and the Republican members.

Whiteley Malleable Castings company, Muncie, has increased its capital from $250,000 to $450,000.

THE DESTROYING ANGEL

By LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

There was no lack of fodder for the flames. By dint of several wheelbarrow trips between the knoll and the farmyard, he had presently constructed a pyre of impressive proportions; and by that time it was quite dark—so dark, indeed, that he had been forced to hunt up a yard lantern, carrying the which the girl had accompanied him on his two final trips.

"Here," he said clumsily, when all was ready, offering her matches. "You light it, please—for luck."

Their fingers touched as she took the matches. Something thumped in his breast, and a door opened in the chambers of his understanding, letting in light.

Kneeling at the base of the pyre, she struck a match and applied it to a quantity of tinder-dry excelsior. The stuff caught instantly, puffing into a brilliant patch of blaze; she rose and stood back, en silhouette, delicately poised at attention, waiting to see that her work was well done. He could not take his gaze from her.

So what he had trifled and toyed with, fought with and prayed against, doubted and questioned, laughed at and cried down, was sober, painful fact. Truth, heart-rending to behold in her stark, shining beauty, had been revealed to him in that moment of brushing finger-tips, and he had looked in her face and known his unworthiness; and he trembled and was afraid and ashamed. . . .

The girl retreated to his side, returning the matches.

A tongue of flame shot up from the peak of the pyre, and a column of smoke surpassed it, swinging off to leeward in great, red-bosomed volutes and whorls picked out with flying regiments of sparks.

They seated themselves with their backs to the fire and at a respectful distance from it, where they could watch the jetting blades of light that ringed the far-off headland. Whitaker reclined on an elbow, relapsing into moody contemplation. The girl stirred uneasily, turning her head to look at Whitaker.

"You know," she said with a confused attempt to laugh: "this is really so canny, this place. Or else I'm balmy. I'm seeing things—shapes that stir against the blackness, off there beyond the light, moving, halting, staring, hating us for butchering their age-old peace and quiet. Maybe I'll forget to see them, if you'll talk to me a little."

"I can't talk to you," he said, ungracious in his distress.

"You can't? It's the first time it's been noticeable, then. What's responsible for this all-of-a-sudden change of heart?"

"That's what's responsible." The words spoke themselves almost against his will.

"You're very obscure. Am I to understand that you've taken a sudden dislike to me, so that you can't treat me with decent civility?"

"I've always understood women knew what men meant before the men did, themselves." His voice broke a little. "Oh, can't you see how it is with me? Can't you see?" he cried. "God forgive me! I never meant to inflict this on you, at such a time! I don't know why I have . . ."

"You mean," she stammered in a voice of amaze—"you mean—love?"

"Can you doubt it?"

"No . . not after what's happened, I presume. You wouldn't have followed—you wouldn't have fought so to save me from drowning—I suppose—if you hadn't—cared. . . . But I didn't know."

"Then you're not—offended?" he asked, sitting up.

"Why should I be?" The firelight momentarily outlined the smiling half wistful countenance she turned to him. "What woman would be who received as great and honorable a compliment—from you, Hugh? Only"—again the whimsical little laugh that merged into a smothered sigh—"I wish I knew!"

"Wish you knew what?"

"What's going on inside that extraordinary head of yours; what's in the mind behind the eyes that I so often find staring at me so curiously."

He bowed that head between hands that compressed cruelly his temples. "I wish I knew!" he groaned in protest. "Since you called me to supper, a while ago, by name—I don't know why—your voice, as you used it then, has run through my head and through, teasing my memory like a strain of music from some half-remembered song. It half-maddens me; I feel so strongly that everything would be so straight and plain and clear between us, if I could only fasten upon that fugitive, indefinable something that's always fluttering just beyond my grasp!"

"You mean all that—honestly?" she demanded in an oddly startled voice.

"Most honestly." He looked up in excitement. "You don't mean you've felt anything of the sort?"

"No, I"—her voice broke as if with weariness—"I don't mean that, precisely, I mean . . . Probably I don't know what I do mean. I'm really very tired, too tired to go on, just now—to sit here with you, badgering our poor wits with esoteric subtleties. I think—do you mind?—I'd better go in."

She rose quickly, without waiting for his hand. Whitaker straightened out his long body with more deliberation, standing finally at full height, his grave and moody countenance strongly relieved in the ruddy glow, while her face was all in shadow.

"One moment," he begged humbly—"before we go in. I . . I've something else to say to you. If I may."

She waited, seriously attentive.

"I haven't played fair, I'm afraid," he said, lowering his head to escape her steadfast gaze. "I've just told you that I love you, but . . ."

"Well?" she demanded in an odd, ringing voice. "Isn't it true?"

"True?" He laughed unnaturally. "It's so true I—wish I had died before I told you!"

"Please explain," she urged a trace wearily.

"I," he stammered—"I am already married."

She gave a little, stifled cry—whether of pain or horror or of indignation he could not tell.

"I'm sorry—I—" he began.

"Don't you think you might have thought of this before?"

"I . . . you don't understand—"

"So it would seem," she put in cruelly.

"Please hear me! It was several years ago I married a girl I'd never seen before, to help her out of a desperate scrape she'd got into. We never lived together, never even saw one another after that hour. She had every reason to think me dead—as I should have been, by rights. But now she knows that I'm alive—is about to sue for a divorce."

After a long pause, during which neither stirred, she told him, in a faint voice: "Thank you."

She moved toward the house.

"If you will forgive me—"

"Oh, I forgive you, Mr. Whitaker. My heart is really not quite so fragile as all this implies. I think I'll go to bed. I'm very, very tired, in spite of my sleep on the sands. That didn't rest me, really."

They returned to the kitchen.

In silence, while Whitaker fidgeted about the room, awkward and unhappy, the girl removed a glass lamp from the shelf above the sink, assured herself that it was filled, and lighted it. Then over her shoulder:

"I hope you don't mean to stay up all night."

"I—well, I'm really not sleepy."

"As soon as you feel the least need of sleep, you'll go to bed?"

"I promise."

"Very well, then."

The insistent note faded from her tones. She moved toward the table, put the lamp down, and hesitated in one of her strange, unpresaged moods of diffidence, looking down at the finger-tips with which she traced a meaningless pattern on the oil-cloth.

"You are kind," she said abruptly, her head bowed, her face hidden from him.

"Kind!" he echoed, dumfounded.

"You are kind and sweet and generous to me," she insisted in a level voice. "You have shown me your heart—the heart of a gentleman—without reserve; but of me you have asked nothing."

"I don't understand—"

"I mean, you haven't once referred to what happened last night. You've been content to let me preserve my confidence, to remain secretive and mysterious in your sight. . . . That is how I seem to you—isn't it?"

"Secretive and mysterious? But I have no right to your confidence; your affairs are yours, inviolable, unless you choose to discuss them."

"You would think that way—of course!" Suddenly she showed him her face illuminated with its frank, shadowy smile, her sweet eyes, kind and as fearless as the eyes of a child. "Other men would not, I know. And you have every right to know."

"I—!"

"You; and I shall tell you. . . . But not now; there's too much to tell, to explain and make understandable; and I'm too terribly tired. To-morrow, perhaps—or when we escape from this weird place, when I've had time to think things out—"

"At your pleasure," he assented gently. "Only—don't let anything worry you."

Impulsively she caught both his hands in a clasp at once soft and strong, wholly straightforward and friendly.

"Do you know," she said in a laughing voice, her head thrown back, soft shadows darkening her mystical eyes, the lamplight caressing her hair until it was as if her head were framed in a halo of pure gold, bright against the somber background of that mean, bare room—"Do you know, dear man, that you are quite blind?"

"I think," he said with his twisted smile, "it would be well for me if I were physically blind at this instant!"

She shook her head in light reproof.

"Blind, quite blind!" she repeated. "And yet—I'm glad it's so with you. I wouldn't have you otherwise for worlds."

She withdrew her hand, took up the lamp, moved a little away from him, and paused, holding his eyes.

"For Love, too, is blind," she said softly, with a quaint little nod of affirmation. "Good night."

He started forward, eyes aflame; took a single pace after her; paused as if against an unseen barrier. His hands dropped by his sides; his chin to his chest; the light died out of his face and left it gray and deeply lined.

CHAPTER XV.

Discovery.

He was up and out in the cool of dawn, before sunrise, delaying to listen for some minutes at the foot of the stairway. But he heard no sound in that still house, and there was no longer the night to affright the woman with hinted threats of nameless horrors lurking beneath its impenetrable cloak. He felt no longer bound to stand sentinel on the threshold of her apprehensions. He went out.

The day would be clear. In the white magic of air like crystal translucent and motionless, the world seemed more close-knitted and sane. What yesterday's veiling of haze had concealed was now bold and near. In the north the lighthouse stood like a horn on the brow of the headland, the lamp continuing to flash even though its light was darkened, its beams outstripped by the radiant forerunners of the sun. On the nearer land human life was quickening; here and there pale streamers of smoke swung up from hidden chimneys on its wooded rises.

Whitaker eyed them with longing. But they were distant from attainment by at the least three miles of tideway through which strong waters raced. He wagged a doubtful head, and scowled; no sign in any quarter of a boat heading for the island, no telling when they'd be taken off the cursed place!

In his mutinous irritation, the screaming of the gulls, over in the west, seemed to add the final touch of annoyance, a superfluous addition to the sum of his trials. What was the matter with the addle-pated things, anyway?

There was nothing to hinder him from investigating for himself. The girl would probably sleep another hour or two.

He went forthwith, dulling the keen edge of his exasperation with a rapid tramp of half a mile or so over the uneven uplands.

The screaming was well-nigh deafening by the time he stood upon the verge of the bluff; beneath him gulls clouded the air like bees swarming. And yet he experienced no difficulty in locating the cause of their excitement.

Below, a slow tide crawled, slavering, up over the bowlder-strewn sands. In a wave-scooped depression between two of the large bowlders, the receding waters had left a little, limpid pool. In the pool lay the body of a man, face downward, limbs frightfully sprawling. Gulls fought for place upon his back.

The discovery brought with it no shock of surprise to the man on the bluff; horror alone. He seemed to have known all along that such would be the cause. But he shrank shuddering from the thought of the work that lay to his hand—work that must be accomplished at once and completely; for she must know nothing of it. She had suffered enough, as it was.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

No Trouble at All.

Friend—I suppose if people would do just what you tell them you would have a great deal less trouble.

Doctor—Yes, indeed! I would tell some of them to settle their accounts.

SHAUGHNESSY'S NEW TASK

Lord Shaughnessy, the only Canadian who is a member of the British house of peers—the same Shaughnessy who was born in Milwaukee on October 6, 1853, and who began his wonderful railroad career in the purchasing department of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railway—is the man picked by the powers-that-be in England to solve Britain's hundred-year-old problem, the Irish question.

Baron Shaughnessy of Montreal, Canada, and Ashford, County Limerick, Ireland, was born plain Thomas Shaughnessy sixty-three years ago, and for many years thereafter was known as "Tom." Like many another American boy, railroading attracted him, and when sixteen years old he applied to the office of the St. Paul railroad in Milwaukee for a job. He got it—a place as a clerk.

For a number of years the Milwaukee lad remained with the St. Paul road, being promoted slowly until he became general storekeeper. Then he attracted the attention of Sir William Van Horne, a native of Illinois and then president of the Canadian Pacific railroad. At Sir William's suggestion "Tom" Shaughnessy joined forces with the men building the great rail system through the Dominion.

In time he was made vice president of the system, and when later Sir William retired, he was succeeded by the American-born vice president he had been instrumental in taking to Canada.

In recognition of his services he was made a knight in 1901, and in 1907 was made a knight chancellor of the Victorian order. Near the close of last year he was elevated to the peerage.

WHY ROYAL JOHNSON ROSE

© HARRIS & EWING

Obviously there must be some reason why a man should become the attorney general of his state and the youngest attorney general in the country at the age of twenty-nine elected to congress when only thirty-two. Before proceeding further it may be only fair to state that the subject of discussion is Representative Royal C. Johnson of South Dakota.

Just in a nutshell, the primary reason for the rise of young Royal Johnson in public life appears to be a pair of spectacles.

Johnson was a baseball player. He played primarily in college, but in summer sold his service for mere gold to semiprofessional teams in his native state. His specialty was catching behind the bat. Being a wee trifle nearsighted he found it advantageous to wear a pair of nose glasses. It was the first time the people of South Dakota had seen a catcher wearing glasses, and they talked about it. Soon Johnson's name was a household word throughout the state, as the "catcher with the specs."

Then he set out to run for attorney general. His ball playing did not necessarily qualify him for the job he was seeking, but it had served to get his name up. Everybody knew who he was. Many took the view that a man who would catch behind the bat with nose glasses on, would be a courageous, upstanding young attorney general. So they elected him.

THOMAS COCHRAN

International Film Service

Thomas Cochran on January 1 achieved the blue ribbon for which young financiers strive, a partnership in the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co.

Mr. Cochran is forty-five years old, a Yale man, who rose from the ranks without money or influence. Henry P. Davison of the Morgan firm is said to have "had an eye on" Mr. Cochran for some time.

Cochran's parents were New Yorkers, who moved to St. Paul, Minn., where he was born. In Yale he "made" the football team and Skull and Bones. During his third year his father lost his fortune. Young Cochran worked his way through his fourth year. Seventeen years ago he went to New York with no money but any amount of energy. Henry P. Davison was vice president of the First National bank when he first met young Cochran. He picked two young men to help him organize the Astor Trust company. One of these was Thomas Cochran. He was vice president from 1907 until 1914, and the company was very successful. Then he was offered the presidency of the Liberty National bank. Under his direction it has since become the most profitable national bank in the United States.

PREMIUM LIST, CORN AND BREAD SHOW

The second annual Corn and Bread Show of the Tri-Townships will be held in connection with the Tri-Township Farmers' Institute Association's annual Institute, February 1st and 2nd, 1917. The object of this show is strictly educational.

Exhibitors have the opportunity to compare their exhibits with those from other parts of the townships and to secure experts opinion on their product. Everyone is interested in the betterment of crops. Everyone is interested in the betterment of food preparation. This show can be most helpful. Become a part of this forward movement.

Prepare and send an exhibit to this show. You are sure to profit from any efforts made in connection with this movement. Although your corn or bread may not be as good as you would like, it will rank with other exhibits and may win a premium. Make an exhibit and determine where you stand.

Note:—Exhibits must be in show room Wednesday, January 31, 1917, at 6:00 o'clock p. m.

RULES FOR ENTRY

1. All exhibits of corn will be classified as white or yellow, and each must be entered in its proper class.

2. Bread and cakes must be entered in their proper class.

3. No exhibitor will be allowed to make more than one entry in any one class.

4. Only residents of Newville, Spencer and Concord townships may enter exhibits in adult classes. Only children in the Public Schools of the three townships named may participate in boys and girls classes. Girls under thirteen and none other may make cake exhibits. Only girls over thirteen and in school (common or High) may enter girls bread exhibit.

5. All exhibits of corn must consist of ten ears each.

6. Every exhibit in the Mens Class must have been produced on the exhibitors own farm in 1916. (Renters will be considered owners of their 1916 farm.)

VIOLATION OF THIS RULE IN WHOLE OR IN PART WILL BE CLOSELY WATCHED AND GUILTY PARTIES WHOLLY EXCLUDED FROM PARTICIPATION IN ANY PART OF THE SHOW.

7. Each exhibitor in the boys class must sign a statement that he chose his exhibit himself without advice or help, and that the corn was produced in the season of 1916 on his fathers or guardians farm. (This does not mean that the boys cannot inquire regarding good seed corn but it does mean that after they once have the necessary information they must choose their exhibit without any coaching or advice so that the sample will represent their idea of good corn.)

8. One loaf of bread shall constitute a bread exhibit and one loaf cake, a cake exhibit.

9. All bread and cake must be baked in pans about 8 to 9½ inches long by 3½ to 4 inches wide and 3 inches deep. See bread and cake score cards elsewhere herein.

10. Every Bread and Cake exhibit must have been produced by the exhibitors own hands and management. A statement to this effect must be signed by exhibitors in the girls classes.

11. All cakes must be baked after recipe found elsewhere in this circular.

12. All exhibits must be placed in the hands of the superintendent of exhibits in the show room not later than 6:00 p. m., Wednesday, January 31, 1917.

13. Exhibits must be left in the show room until 7:00 a. m., Saturday, February 3rd, 1917.

14. All School Exhibits are entered as displays to show what the schools are doing along certain lines and will not be judged or placed in this show.

15. The committee in charge of the show reserves the right to make such other rules as may be found necessary.

PREMIUMS

The premiums offered by the Tri-Township Farmers' Institute Association have been secured from farmers and business men of our community, who are interested in corn improvement and better home making.

To these individuals and firms the Tri-Township Association wishes to extend thanks and to express its appreciation of the liberal contributions.

Select a sample of corn or prepare an exhibit of bread or cake and try for a place on the list of premium winners and help make our show a grand success.

After doctoring and trying a number of cough remedies, we began to think his case a hopeless one. He got no relief until he used Glando Pine. The first bottle relieved him. He continued its use until he was cured. He is now well, and I believe Glando Pine saved his life." For sale by Druggists.

LAYING QUALITY OF PULLETS

Purchase a Purebred Male and Stop Trying to Keep Flock of All Kinds and Colors.

The thinking poultryman realizes that the male is "half of the pen." The chickens have one father in common and may have separate mothers, so the male's vigor and personality is in every chick.

Get a purebred male. Stop this keeping a flock of all kinds and colors. Be careful to choose a male of real merit, bred with care and for a purpose.

Whichever of the two aims—eggs or meat—is the best with you, select for that purpose, but never forget that a well-bred cockerel, one bred from meat-producing and egg-laying ancestry, will decidedly improve the laying quality of the pullets, even if you are aiming and have chosen for the purpose of size.

ATTENTION TO COLT'S FEET

Uneven Growth Will Often Result in Misshappen Joints and Bones—Use Rasp and Nippers.

The colt's feet require attention. An uneven growth of the feet at this period will often result in mishapen bones and joints that will prove to be permanent injuries. If the colt will let you handle him at all it is easy to keep the feet correctly proportioned with nippers and a rasp; practice and observation will soon enable a man who has fair judgment to determine what trimming the feet of each colt need.

As a general rule the feet should be examined every six or eight weeks. If the colt's owner can't look after this matter himself he should obtain the services of someone who can, for it may mean the difference of fifty or one hundred dollars in the value of the animal later in life.

CHARCOAL GOOD FOR CHICKS

Given to Poultry as Corrective, Not as Feed, Says Expert of Kansas State College.

Charcoal is given to poultry as a corrective, and not as a food, asserts R. M. Sherwood, acting head of the department of poultry husbandry in the Kansas State Agricultural college.

"In case of improper feeding it is well to give charcoal to absorb intestinal gases," said Mr. Sherwood. "It is generally fed to growing chicks only, because of its high cost.

"When there is a supply of cobs on the farm, charcoal can be made from them, and this would be cheap enough to warrant feeding it to hens as well as chicks."

CUTTING PEAS WITH MOWER

Machines Run Better if Land Is Smooth—Harrow Will Put Land in Good condition.

Farmers should always remember that in sowing peas they must be cut with a mower.

Mowing machines run better if the land is smooth. By using a harrow on the land, it can easily be put in good condition for the mower. In cutting peas on rough land, it is hard on the driver, the mower and the stock.

Successful Farmers' Week

2nd. Annual Tri-township Farmers' Institute Opened With Enthusiasm and Fine Audiences-Speaker Good-Displays were Beyond Anticipation.

The event long hoped for, and the one that we are all interested in is again a part of the history of the Tri-townships, namely the Farmers' Institute. While institutes have been in vogue here for years yet this is only the second one under the Tri-township organization. The day dawned bright, the sun sending forth its bright sunny rays, with occasional snow flurries. Thursday morning was one that the Executive committee, on whose shoulders the responsibility of success or failure of this meeting rested, was glad to see so bright and prosperous for success. The morning session began a little late on account of the crowd being somewhat slow in assembling Chairman B. V. Widney made a plausable excuse for the delay, and opened the program with the Farmers' song as given below.

Here is very plainly set forth the desire of the 20th. Century farm in the few words as composed by our County Agent, A. Z. Arehart. Devotional by Rev. L. W. Spade, Farmers' Song.

Tune America

We farmers want to learn,
How we can better earn
Our daily bread.
How we can treat our soil,
Without so much hard toil,
And harmful insects foil,
Get good seed bed.

We want to know the cause,
Of some of natures laws,
When drouths prevail.
How we can best proceed,
To get the rain we need,
To sprout our pumpkin seed,
When all crops fail.

How we shall feed our sows,
What care give we our cows,
For best results.
Sows that are red or white,
Cows that with horns do fight,
In fact we want more light,
We are adults.

The farmers' wifes would learn,
How to proceed to burn,
Green El-m-wood.
How make the home more bright
Get wood-box filled at night,
Keep boys and girls in sight,
Her cause is good.

"An Efficient Kitchen" demonstration staged by the Rural Housewives Club, of Coburntown, the one big feature of the morning session—being one of the more practical, helpful, convincing appeals for better kitchen and home equipments ever staged at any meeting In this, the ladies displayed the modern kitchen and the dialogue was original, each lady appearing in the drama had prepared her own remarks, and say it was great. The story was something like this. The mother had gone away on a visit and left the children home to run the farm, and as they had always had things so unhandy—just as they were when father and mother were married, they decided to have things changed now while mother was away and be able to do their work so much more easy and then have more time for the social features, such as their R. H C Meetings Water was piped in from the well and cistern, a new up-to-date range was installed, Perfection oil stove, kitchen cabinet, tea wagon, work table, and more convenient cooking utensils were purchased to lighten their work A wash room was built at the rear and a gas engine installed to do the work.

Mother comes home and finds it completely changed even down to her own bed room. Her amazement of what had taken place, and being of the disposition to be willing to fall in exactly with what had taken place, was somewhat of a surprise to the writer, because old folks are not always ready to change their mode of work when they are "shown" She looked at life differently; not to see how much she could do but how easy and more quickly she could do what was expeoted of her. Not many kitchens are equipped like "mothers" but it is possible and the time is coming when she will have things to work with just as well as dad. One pleasing thing to the writer was,—a relative came to visit Mother, thoroughly disgusted with her lot as a farmer's daughter, and she was on her way to the city where she could have the conveniences of life and get away from the drudgeries of the poorly equipped kitchen on the farm where she spent the most of her time Mother at once began to explain to "Aunt Mary" the possibilities of the farm and that more hardships await those in the city.

Many good things may be said more of this demonstration but Prof. Phillips said that in all his work, he had never seen anything staged that equalled this at anywhere Enough said.

At 10:45, Prof. A G. Phillips gave the question of "Incubation and Brooding of Chicks" a very thorough consideration. The poultry business is the most profitable of any line on the farm for the amount of money invested, was his first statement, and has proven to be a fact by a test of 1,000 farmers in Indiana The popular way to produce chicks is with the old hen, because you don't have to watch her, and she will bring out more vigorous chicks. There is some objections to the hen as set forth by Phillips and the first one was that she does not set when you want her to. In order that pullets may lay in October, November and December they must be hatched early. Big prices prevail in those months for eggs, but of course, this year is an exception. Leghorns will lay at 6 months and Plymouth Rocks from 7 to 8 months.

The average of all hatchings will be 50—50, half pullets and half roosters, and the latter should be disposed of by May and June at 30c. per pound and even more. With the use of the incubator you control the time of hatching and then you hatch in larger numbers than the hen. Of course this method requires close attention and one must stay home nights 6 a m., and 8 p. m, should be the regular hours in caring for the incubator An important thing in the artificial method is to have an even temperature in the room and just where the machine is located does not matter so much. Adhere closely to instructions of machine and have plenty of moisture in machine If in doubt as to temperature in machine run lower rather than too high. Poor hatching does not always prove the incubator as being worthless, because the real cause may be laid to the flock that you are producing from. Weak, poorly bred hens will lay an egg that does not contain a strong, healthy germ. That's your fault. The question of good chickens is the same as in the breeding of other animals.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

Program opened with the song,

Indiana.

In-di-an-a, praise to thee!
In-di-an-a, proud and free!
Glo-ri-ous In-di-an-a!
Nature by the hand of God
Gave a wealth of virgin sod;
Symbol of His charity
For thy great prosperity.
O Indiana! O Indiana!
We sing to thee alone.

O'er thy head the lake breeze blows;
At thy feet the river flows:
Lauding thee, Indiana!
Flowing stream and forest bold;
Rocks their hoary heads uphold;
Valleys rich their grain enfold;
Treasures in thy hills untold;
O Indiana! O Indiana!
We sing to thee alone.

From thy gates come men of fame
Proud the nation is to claim.
Glorious Indiana!
Great in story and in song,
Placing right against the wrong,
Noble sons and daughters pure
Make thy future promise sure.
O Indiana! O Indiana!
We sing to thee alone.

'Hog Cholera and It's Control" was given by Dr. L. H. Frye, of Washington, D. C., who is a government expert along this line. The past year he has spent in Indiana studying our conditions, and his lecture was illustrated by slides, making it very valuable to our farmers. Cholera is in two forms, Acute and Chronic, and in many instances the spread is laid to birds, dogs, farmers visiting other premises, horses carry it on their feet, rats, etc It is as necessary to rotate the hog crop as any other crop. Do not have pens located permanently Use portable shelter. Hogs afflicted with cholera should be in close quarentine, and dead ones should be properly disposed of by burning Vacination and sanitation are about the only remedy.

After a short intermission, Prof. Phillips again talked chicken, "Sanitation, Disease Prevention." He believes more in prevention than cure, be sanitary with the flock and thus you will not be bothered with all the diseases subject to chickens. The first pest named was the mites, which lives in the cracks about the "henry"; but they are different from the lice in a respect, that they live only on the body when sucking blood, and the lice live on the body all the time but do not suck blood A complete housecleaning is necessary with coal oil or spray, while blue ointment is all that the lice need Keep only good healthy chickens, and don't bother with cripples and weaklings. Housing, ventilating and feeding are necessary and clean coop frequently.

PREVENTION OF DISEASE

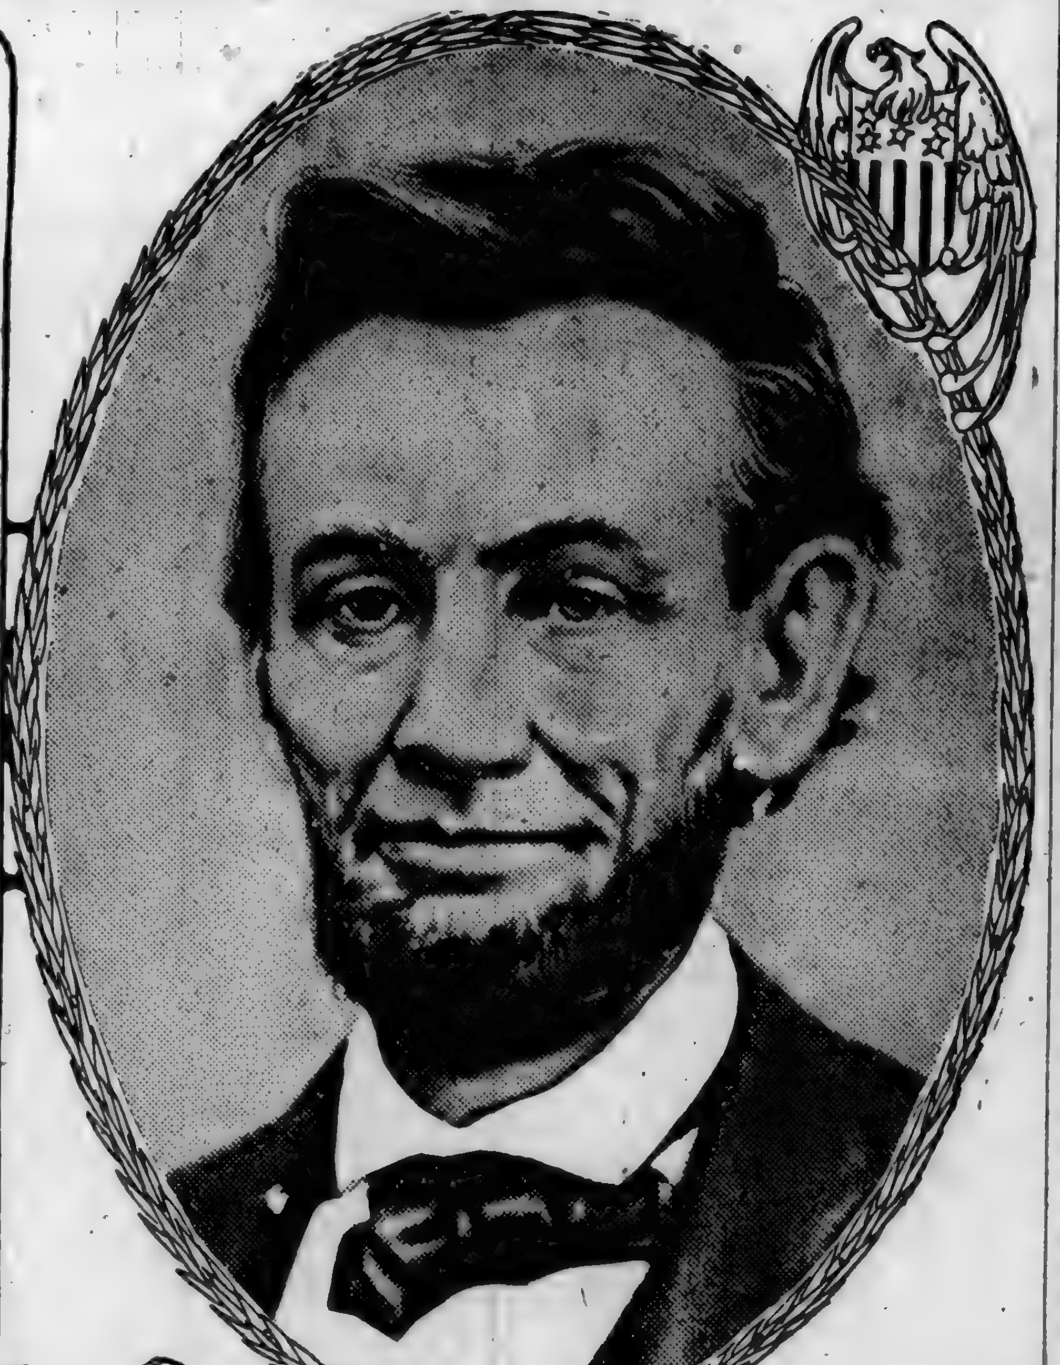
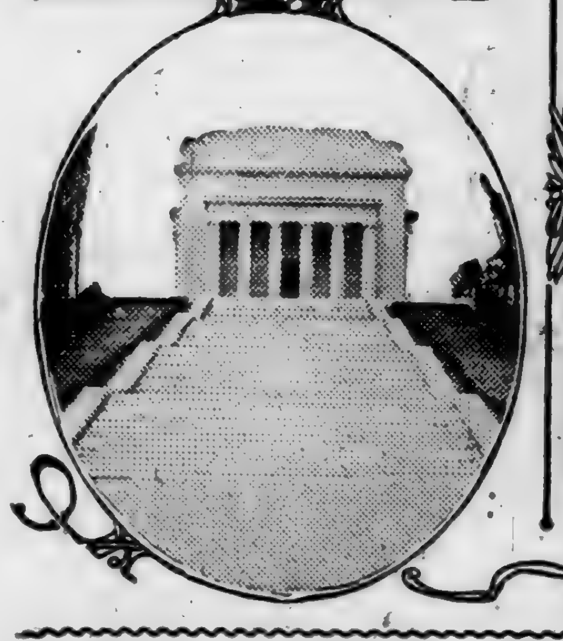
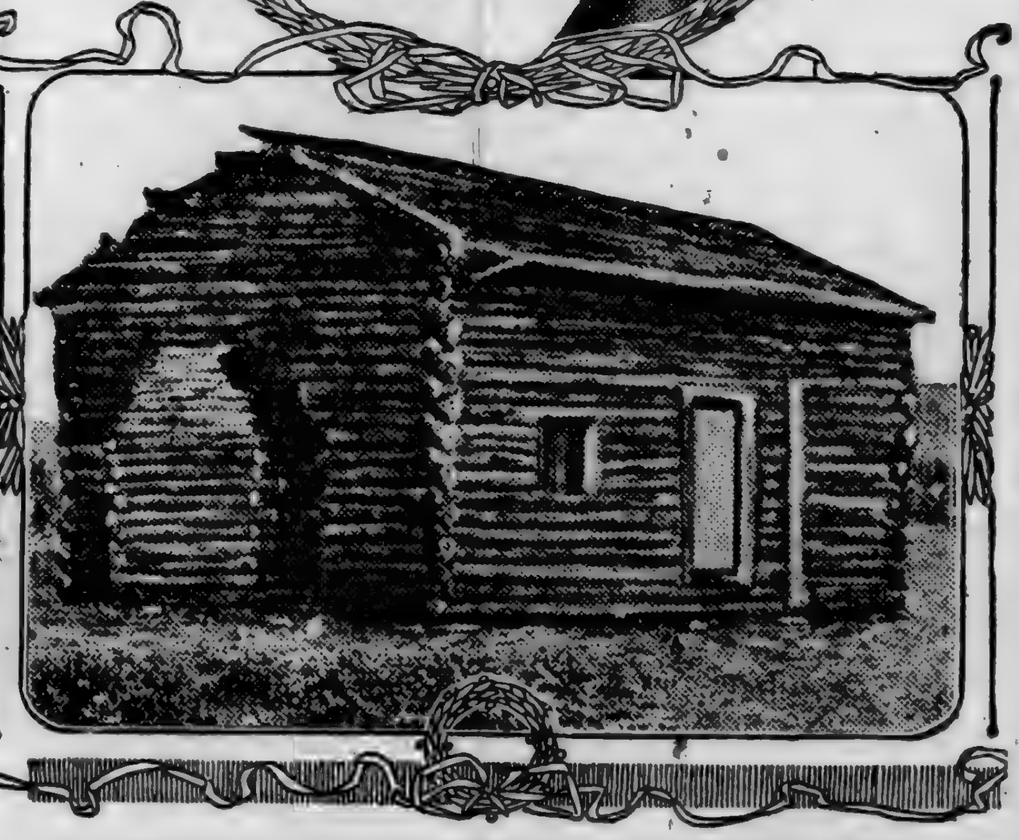
Fourscore and seven years ago our fathers brought forth upon this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal. Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battlefield of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field as a final resting place for those who here gave their lives that that nation might live.

¶ It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this. But, in a larger sense, we cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow, this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here have consecrated it far above our power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us, that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion: that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth.







LINCOLN HAPPY WITH MARY TODD

Reports That the Great President and His Wife Were Incompatible Are Without Truth, According to One Who Knew Them Well.

THERE are stories, some of them written into the biographies of the martyred president; that the married life of Abraham and Mary Todd Lincoln was unhappy. These stories go so far as to say that when the wedding day came around—

Mary Todd Lincoln, as She Appeared in the White House.

they fix the date in 1840—the guests arrived and the bride appeared in her finery, but the groom remained away; that finally, when they did marry, Mary Todd accepted Lincoln and "married him in a spirit of pique and petty spite to wreak vengeance on him through their married life;" while with Lincoln it was a case of a "willing sacrifice."

"A cruel fiction," Henry B. Rankin calls this in his book, "Personal Recollections of Abraham Lincoln."

Mr. Rankin was a schoolboy who acted as court messenger at Petersburg, Ill., while his father was sheriff, when he first met Mr. Lincoln, then a rising young lawyer. Later he was a student in the Lincoln and Herndon law office in Springfield, admitted to the family circle.

The picture of Mary Todd which Mr. Rankin draws is a charming one. Though not beautiful, she was decidedly pretty, he says, with clear blue eyes which looked through one, and a mobile face which was responsive to her every thought. She was easily the belle of Springfield during her residence there with a married sister, her own home being in Lexington, Ky. Her family objected to Lincoln because of his humble parentage and his poverty, and their engagement was broken off, but two years later Mary Todd defied the family opposition and wedded the man of her choice.

Mrs. Lincoln was not only attractive, but she was cultured, Mr. Rankin says, and throughout her married life, at least until the tragedy of the assassination, she kept up her French reading and other literary pursuits. Hers was a keen political perception amounting to almost prevision, too, and her advice was that most carefully weighed by Lincoln in his political and public affairs.

All the world knows that when Lincoln received the news of his nomination he said: "There is a little woman over on Eighth street who is deeply interested in this news; I will carry it to her," and he left his cheering, congratulating friends to hurry to his home. Not so well known is the fact that the happiest person in Springfield was Mrs. Lincoln, and that she never closed her eyes that night, for fear she would miss some of the town's joy over the honor done its brilliant son.

Mrs. Lincoln's terrible sorrow on the death of the martyr drove her abroad—"the loneliest of all the wives widowed by the Civil war"—and she was allowed to spend the last years of her life "amid chilling neglect and misrepresentation," Mr. Rankin says, but he adds that when history shall reflect the truth, in time to come if it is not already here, "she will be awarded the recognition her merits have always deserved. Till then she can wait; for, like her husband, she belongs to the ages."

LINCOLN

'Twas not his head that made him great;
It was his heart,
That gentler part,
Which, in its kindliness, went straight
To all the people, torn and sore,
And like a balm lay softly o'er
The Nation's wounds, and glorified
The life beginning when he died.

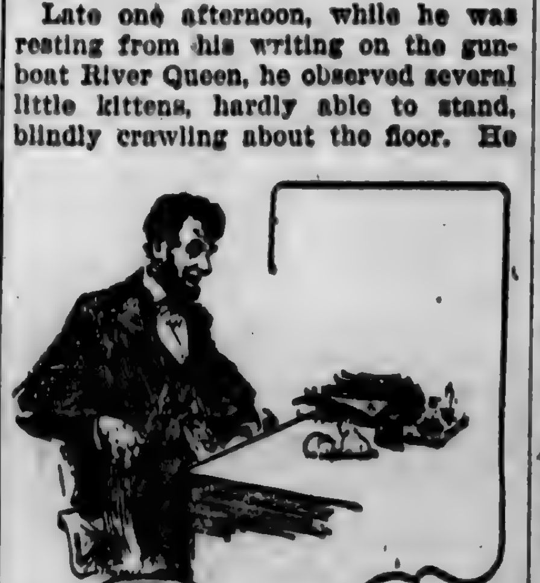
—W. J. LAMPTON.

LINCOLN EVER KIND

Tenderness of Heart Evinced at Times When He Was Under the Greatest Stress.

LET me present another aspect of Lincoln's many-sided character. During the momentous week when Grant was hammering at the gates of the Confederate capital, the president, feeling in every fiber of his being that the end was near, took passage for City Point, in order that with his own eager eyes, weary with long watching, he might see the last act in the drama of war—and, I doubt not, that he might check any overt and unseemly act, should occasion require, writes Johnson Brigham, state librarian of Iowa, in the Youth's Companion.

Late one afternoon, while he was resting from his writing on the gunboat River Queen, he observed several little kittens, hardly able to stand, blindly crawling about the floor. He lifted them tenderly to his desk, and for sometime watched their movements, as if pondering the greatest of all problems—the mystery of life. Seeing a loosening film over the eye of one of the kittens, he carefully wiped it away with his handkerchief, and, as he placed the little fellow on the floor again, said gently, "There, little one, I've done for you what even your mother couldn't do."



For Some Time He Watched Their Movements.

As I have time and again recalled to my mind that incidental use of the word "mother," I have thought that at that moment there must have come to the president some recollection of the delicate, hard-worked woman who had toiled and struggled for her son, and who yet in her poverty felt that she could do so little for him. What the word "mother" meant to this man can be inferred from his oft-quoted saying to a friend: "All that I am, or hope to be, I owe to my angel mother—blessings on her memory!"

SENTIMENTS OF KAISER.

"In the next war—the nation which drinks the least alcohol will be the winner." These are the words of the German emperor—quoted from his speech at the dedication of the naval academy at Murvik, November 21, 1910. This speech, stenographically reported, was published with official sanction and attracted world attention. The events of the past few years add enormously to its significance. Addressing the cadets Emperor William said:

"Now I will give you a little warning, in passing, on a question which lies very much on my heart for my nation. This is the question of alcohol and drink. As you will yourselves, observe in the course of your time on board, the service in my navy has reached a degree of strain which can hardly be surpassed. To be able to endure this enormous pressure in time of peace without wearing out, so that you may be fresh when a serious call comes, is your duty. The next war, the next naval encounter, will require of you sound nerves. These are undetermined by alcohol, endangered, from youth up, by its use. You will later have opportunity to see the marine targets and the action of modern guns on ships, and will be able, therefore, to infer the conditions in battle. You will see horrible devastation and all kinds of pictures. Then the word will be, strong nerves and cool heads. The nation which drinks the least alcohol will be the winner! And that, gentlemen, should be you! And the crews should be given a good example, for that works most powerfully among men. Consequently I expect you in the marine academy, as on board ship, while in all your comradeship you are not interfered with, yet among yourselves, that you attend to it, and that it be seen to, that the use of alcohol be not considered one of your privileges. Already Good Templar lodges of Blue Cross unions have been projected or formed in my navy. Individual officers and some hundreds of men have joined them. I hope you will do all you can to encourage the men to enter. I need only to point to the example of the English navy, where 20,000 men and officers have entered (temperance organizations) to the great profit of the service. It is a question of the future for our navy and people. If you educate the people to give up alcohol I shall have sound and sensible subjects. It is a great coming question, for when the men pass out of the service they will bring these ideas to the country at large. If you stand for these principles my people will be raised morally. This is a work in which I beg you to participate."

JOHN BARLEYCORN'S PLAINT.

"I seem to be deep in disgrace; they're shutting all doors in my face," sighs John Barleycorn, as he swallows a horn, and three or four chasers to chase. "Where once I was welcome as guest, they split up my coat and my vest, and bust me with chairs, and kick me downstairs, and say it is all for the best. Oh, once I was haughty and proud; my diamonds were many and loud; I traveled in state and was close to the great, and looked with disdain on the crowd. I handed down laws and decrees to henchmen who got on their knees, to list to my rede, for favors to plead—and fawners were busy as bees. But now when my visage appears, the people don't greet me with cheers; and cabbage and sticks and tomcats and bricks are spoiling my hat and my ears. The people," John Barleycorn said, "are cutting out vintages red; I do not see why they go back on old rye, unless they've been counting their dead."—Walt Mason.

FARMER'S STORY.

"I am a farmer and I raise rye. One day I took a bushel of rye down to the distiller and sold it to him for 50 cents. The distiller got out of that bushel of rye three and a half gallons of proof whisky—although I hear now that he can get four gallons out of a bushel—which he sold to the saloonkeeper.

"I then started in with that saloonkeeper to drink up my bushel of rye at 10 cents a drink, eight drinks to the pint, or 80 cents for a pint, or $6.40 for a gallon. The three and a half gallons of proof whisky which my 50-cent rye made had cost me $22.40. I had to sell enough rye to the distiller to get money to pay the saloonkeeper. When I hauled my 44 4-5 bushels of rye to the distiller to pay for what he had gotten out of one bushel, I said to myself, 'What a fool I was!'

"Is there another farmer as big a fool as I?"

REMEDY FOR ACCIDENTS.

"The drunken chauffeur is a menace to public safety, a danger to life and limb," says Judge Sabath of Chicago, president of the Citizens' Traffic and Safety commission, and he recommends that the courts be given authority to impose prison sentences upon such.

Why not abolish that which produces drunken chauffeurs and similar menaces to public safety? Every citizen who votes to perpetuate the saloon shares in the responsibility for the dangers of drunkenness.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER

BIRDS IN THE ZOO.

"All the Birds in the Bird House of the Zoo," said Daddy, "were having such a good time. They were all praising up their own plumage and having a splendid time boasting and bragging.

"I Can Have a Better Time."

"'Ah,' said the Black-Headed Ibis, 'how very fin I look.'

"'You're a cousin of mine,' said the Scarlet-Headed Ibis, 'but your plumage is dull on your head while mine is a bright scarlet.'

"'You're both cousins of mine,' said the White-Headed Ibis, 'but I think I'm by far the most exquisite. Black is too dismal, scarlet one can get tired of—but white is always perfect.'

"'It all depends on taste,' said the Black-Headed Ibis and the Scarlet-Headed Ibis together.

"'Ah, but my head looks snowy white,' said the Snowy White-Headed Ibis.

"'You're all very handsome,' said the Pelican, 'but I can have a better time. I can eat and drink more than any of you.'

"'That's being like an animal they call the Pig,' said the Black-Headed Ibis.

"'And I've one of the finest bills ever seen,' continued the Pelican.

"'It's remarkably long, if that's what you mean,' said the Scarlet-Headed Ibis.

"'And some Creatures wouldn't consider it handsome by any means,' said the Snowy White-Headed Ibis.

"'Ah, but look at me,' said the lovely pale-pink Flamingo. 'Did you ever see such beautiful color as I have?'

"'You certainly are beautiful,' the other Birds agreed. 'But your color is fading.'

"'I know it,' said the Flamingo. 'When I am wild it is a very bright shade of pink, but it gets to be a pale pink when I live in the Zoo. That's the way with all my family.'

"'I'm pretty interesting,' said the Globose Bird. 'I go high up in trees. I have a yellow face and when anyone talks to me or surprises me, I put my feathers straight up on top of my head as though to say: "Why do you surprise me?" and "What do you want to know?"'

"'I'm the European Spoon-Bill Bird, and I think I'm about as fine as a Bird can be,' said the Spoon-Bill Bird.

"'It's just as well we all like ourselves so much,' said the Snake Bird. 'Now I like to eat good fish, so I'm what you call a sensible Bird.'

"'It's only sensible if you like it,' said the White-Headed Ibis.

"And then many of the other Birds began to talk and fly this way and that, arguing with each other. There were so many beautiful Birds—they had such gorgeous plumage and such interesting faces that it would have been hard for anyone to decide which was the loveliest. And some were so interesting."

"But didn't they sing?" asked Nancy.

"They made sounds," said Daddy, "but they shrieked and chatted more than they sang, for all the Birds in this Bird House I'm telling you about were the large Birds. There were none in there like the Orioles, the Gold Finch family or the Canaries.

"But while they were all talking the Laughing Gull began to speak. 'I have a nice Black head,' he said, 'and I have a good long beak, but better than anything else I can laugh. That's half the fun of life—to be able to laugh. That's why I think everything is funny—just so I can laugh.'

"Ah, But Look at Me."

"'But often,' said the other Birds, 'you laugh when there is nothing funny to laugh about.'

"'Then that's all the more credit to me. I see a joke when no one else can. I'm naturally used to funny things. And living with all you proud Birds, with your beautiful plumage, is enough to make any old fellow laugh.' And the Laughing Gull burst into a very noisy laughter.

"'Well,' said the Pelican, 'it's nice to have the Laughing Gull around. He keeps us all good-natured. And that's excellent for my digestion.'

"The Birds smiled, for while they loved to be beautiful, the Pelican enjoyed his food and drink above everything!"

Transformed Weeds.

There are some beautiful flowers which are the pride of our gardens nowadays, which began as weeds. Many of our faults could be changed into something admirable, if only we took pains enough. Avarice, by a little wise direction, become prudence and thrift, while extravagance is so closely related to generosity that the one can easily become the other. There is hardly a fault that is not so closely related to a virtue that it may be made into that virtue by taking sufficient pains.—Girl's Companion.

MOTHER! LOOK AT CHILD'S TONGUE

If cross, feverish, constipated, give "California Syrup of Figs."

A laxative today saves a sick child tomorrow. Children simply will not take the time from play to empty their bowels, which become clogged up with waste, liver gets sluggish; stomach sour.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, or your child is listless, cross, feverish, breath bad, restless, doesn't eat heartily, full of cold or has sore throat or any other children's ailment, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," then don't worry, because it is perfectly harmless, and in a few hours all this constipation poison, sour bile and fermenting waste will gently move out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again. A thorough "inside cleansing" is ofttimes all that is necessary. It should be the first treatment given in any sickness.

Beware of counterfeit fig syrups. Ask at the store for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly printed on the bottle. Adv.

Plant Heart With Flowers.

These hearts of ours are never unproductive. If next year we should fail to plant the seeds in our garden as usual, they would bear a crop just the same. The weeds are always ready to seize hold of every square inch of unoccupied soil. Heart cultivation reveals the same truth. If you do not plant your heart to flowers, the weeds will take possession.—Girl's Companion.

YES! MAGICALLY! CORNS LIFT OUT WITH FINGERS

You say to the drug store man, "Give me a small bottle of freezone." This will cost very little but will positively remove every hard or soft corn or callus from one's feet.

A few drops of this new other compound applied directly upon a tender, aching corn relieves the soreness instantly, and soon the entire corn or callus, root and all, dries up and can be lifted off with the fingers.

This new way to rid one's feet of corns was introduced by a Cincinnati man, who says that freezone dries in a moment, and simply shrivels up the corn or callus without irritating the surrounding skin.

If your druggist hasn't any freezone tell him to order a small bottle from his wholesale drug house for you.—adv.

EXCELLENT RETURNS FROM THE CANADIAN WHEAT CROP.

United States Settlers Becoming Rich on Western Canada Lands.

The large number of United States settlers coming to the Western provinces of Canada are easily explained by the case of Mr. C. Lacy, late of Wisconsin and later of Alberta.

Mr. Lacy came to Canada from Wisconsin in the summer of 1914 with $1,500 available cash in his possession. He rented a half-section of partly improved land in Alberta and commenced summer fallowing. He broke 300 acres with oats, 20 with barley, and 260 with wheat. Also he had two cows and 20 head of young live stock. He was fortunate in buying feed at a bargain and managed to rent the adjoining quarter-section as pasture.

A few weeks ago he decided to realize his profits—and they amounted to $6,000 absolutely clear from the crop and the stock.

W. J. Winstead, of Brooks, Alberta, says:

"I landed in Brooks, March 18th, 1916, with one car of household effects, and nine head of good horses, and less than $500 in cash. I have put $1,500 worth of improvements on my farm. I have 31 head of cattle, 16 head of horses, debts all paid, a new automobile, and a good, stiff bank account. At present prices, I can cash in for $16,000. I am well satisfied, and expect to double this next year.

I have threshed altogether 7,000 bushels of No. 1 Northern wheat from two hundred acres, which went from 24 to 56 bushels per acre.

Seven thousand bushels of wheat, all No. 1 Northern, two thousand bushels of oats, 670 bushels of flax, 700 bushels of barley—all at market prices—well, figure this out for yourself at the market price. I sold 3,100 bushels of wheat at $1.74¾, am holding the remainder for $2.00. Also all the oats, barley and flax for higher prices."

Intelligent farming pays always according to Alex. Wattie, a prosperous farmer. Some figures to prove his contention that he has "made good."

In 1914 Mr. Wattie threshed 40 bushels to the acre from a 30-acre crop. This sold for $1.60¾ per bushel, which, after deducting seed, labor, twine, threshing and freight, left a clear profit of $50 per acre, or a total of $1,500. From last year's crop of 34 acres, just sold, he received after freight had been deducted, $1,876.94.—Advertisement.

Which automobile runs better: the one that is carefully cleaned and oiled and given the best gasoline and lubricants, or the one that is given no attention, is allowed to stand in the wet and rust, and is fed with the poorest gas and cheapest oils? There's only one answer. Now then, apply the same question to your body—and act accordingly.—The American Boy.

THICK, GLOSSY HAIR FREE FROM DANDRUFF

Girls! Beautify Your Hair! Make It Soft, Fluffy and Luxuriant—Try the Moist Cloth.

Try as you will, after an application of Danderine, you cannot find a single trace of dandruff or falling hair and your scalp will not itch, but what will please you most, will be after a few weeks' use, when you see new hair, fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair—growing all over the scalp.

A little Danderine immediately doubles the beauty of your hair. No difference how dull, faded, brittle and scraggy, just moisten a cloth with Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. The effect is immediate and amazing—your hair will be light, fluffy and wavy, and have an appearance of abundance; an incomparable luster, softness and luxuriance, the beauty and shimmer of true hair health.

Get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any store and prove that your hair is as pretty and soft as any—that it has been neglected or injured by careless treatment—that's all. Adv.

A VALENTINE

A valentine token I send you,
A demure little half-blown rose,
And under the seal of its fragrance
A secret I have to disclose.

Long years ago, by a cradle,
Where a dreaming little one lay,
The fairies gathered and brought him
Such gifts as the fairies may.
He should be blithe and bonny
And gallant and good and gay.

But the wisest of all the fairies
Her wand held over his head.
"Love shall follow his footsteps Wherever they lead," she said.
"Never a joy shall pass him
But love shall come in its stead."

Just then the unheeding baby
Stirred and awoke and cried.
The fairies silently vanished
Away from the cradle's side;
But the fairy gifts they left him
Abode and will ever abide.

They grew with the little one's growing,
And the child was good and gay
And gallant and blithe and bonny;
But the last was the best, I say,
For never one knew him but loved him
And loves him still to this day.

That you were that fortunate baby,
Is the secret I had to disclose;
But, hark you, I pray you, and mark you,
'Tis told to you under the rose!

—ELIZABETH WALLING.

DAY LONG OBSERVED

For Centuries the Nations Have Been One in Paying Honor to St. Valentine.

IT WAS a custom among the Romans to celebrate in the month we call February the Lupercalia, or feasts in honor of Pan and Juno—Pan, the god of hunters, shepherds, and country folk; Juno, the "Great queen of nuptial rites." During these feasts, as a preventive of sterility, it was usual to strike people with thongs, called februa. The feast itself was called Febrhalis, and the day Dies Februatus—thus our word and month February.

An important ceremonial at this festival consisted in the drawing by lot of young girls by young men. As the number of each sex participating in this lottery was equal, each youth secured a mate. In course of time, however, the pastors of the Christian church, to abolish paganism, substituted at these drawings the names of saints. As to this, Butler in his "Lives of Saints" writes: "To abolish the heathens' lewd, superstitious custom of boys drawing the names of girls in honor of their goddess Februato Juno, on the 15th day of February, several zealous pastors substituted the names of saints in billets on that day."

But the people soon returned to the heathen practice, and it was still observed in Rome in 496.

Its true origin could not have been solely in commemoration of the loving and charitable St. Valentine, for similar custom existed among the northern pagans of ancient Europe. The festival was, in its beginnings, a kind of marriage fair-day, held annually, always in the spring when youthful fancy "lightly turns to thoughts of love," a time of year when youth, like a giant refreshed with sleep, wakes to the thrill of budding manhood and womanhood, a period when the love or mating instinct is almost overpowering. Sir Henry Wotton thus expresses the idea of St. Valentine's day:

This day dame Nature seemed in love;
The lusty sap began to move;
Fresh juice did stir th' embracing vines,
And birds had drawn their valentines.

It was a day of lovers' meetings, for choosing mates, and the male on the occasion was known as the "valentine."

Valentine in Literature.

In literature Valentine day has been touched upon for several hundred years. As far back as February 14, 1667, the famous Pepys made entry in his more famous diary that he had been able to escape buying his wife a valentine by buying her a ring she had long wanted, and he would have had to get anyway. Charles Lamb wrote a sort of invocation to "Bishop Valentine," and Sammy Weller of the Dickens family of characters forges Mr. Pickwick's name to a lovelorn housemaid, hoping for a valentine "in the flesh." St. Valentine died in 270 A. D., and his tomb is in St. Praxed's church in Rome, more famous, perhaps, as the tomb of Browning's "Paracelsus."

GIFTS IN PROFUSION

One Should Have Little Difficulty in Making Choice of Pleasing Valentine.

WHEN Valentine day comes along new variations of the old theme are shown in the florist's art. This year, for example, a solid heart of small pink rosebuds, through which a miniature gilt arrow is thrust, is a new kind of flower valentine. Floral envelopes made of violets, showing a tiny flap, in which the message is to be concealed, are sure to be popular. There are also gorgeous boxes of satin, moire and even filet lace and gold braid, tied with the richest of ribbons and the filmiest of tulle, to contain the bunches of violets, orchids, lilies-of-the-valley with violets, or corsage bouquets of Killarney roses and mignonette. A white satin box with gilt monogram is a lovely container for a bouquet of jonquils, maiden-hair ferns and lilies-of-the-valley.

The quaint little old-time bouquet of roses, pink or red, finished with a frill of paper lace or of the plaited silk lace, is always acceptable.

More durable valentines are plants and ferns arranged in odd tin-lined baskets. These also, filled with damp moss, will continue to give pleasure weeks after February 14. Long brown baskets with assorted ferns and primroses, azaleas or jonquils are charming, as are the low, square, enameled wicker baskets in various colors, holding several shades of hyacinths, potted together.

There are also lovely round, white porcelain bowls with raised flower decorations in Dresden colorings which are to be filled with rare forget-me-nots and the tiniest of pink rosebuds for valentines.

Custom Had Good Results.

England, Scotland, France and some parts of the Continent saw the start of the custom where parties of young folks assembled and inscribed on little billets the names of all the bachelors and maidens of their acquaintance, threw the whole into a receptacle, and drew them out lottery-wise, care being taken, of course, that each person drew the name of a member of the other sex.

The person thus drawn became one's valentine, and the allotment decreed by fate was supposed to impose on the couple a sort of loyalty for the coming year.

The result can readily be imagined. The loyalty brought about by the valentine led to a close association, and more often than not resulted in marriage. Hence it was considered a matter of prime importance to get the name of man or woman toward whom natural inclinations tended.

Simple Valentines.

The letter carrier did not always have the task of delivering the love greetings. The first valentines were simple indeed. They contained nothing more, in fact, than the name of the object of affection.

100 Years Old

"The kidneys play a most important part in causing premature old age and death—the more injurious the poisons passing thru the kidneys the sooner comes decay"—so says a distinguished physician, who further advises all people who are past thirty to preserve the vitality of the kidneys and free the blood from poisonous elements, such as uric acid—drink plenty of water—sweat some daily and take Anuric before meals.

This Anuric is put up in tablet form, and can be obtained at almost any drug store. For that backache, lumbago, rheumatism, "rusty" joints, swollen feet or hands, due to uric acid in the blood, Anuric quickly dissolves the uric acid as hot water does sugar. Discovered by Dr. Pierce of Buffalo, N. Y.

Prevent premature old age by simply sipping a cup of hot water every morning before breakfast, taking a little Anuric before meals and live to be a hundred.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription regulates and promotes all the proper functions of womanhood, enriches the blood, dispels aches and pains, melancholy and nervousness, brings refreshing sleep, and restores health and strength. It cures those disorders and derangements incident to womanhood.

FARMS IN WESTERN
FREE

Canada extends to you a hearty invitation to settle on her FREE Homestead lands of 160 acres each or secure some of the low priced lands in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. This year wheat is higher but Canadian land just as cheap, so the opportunity is more attractive than ever. Canada wants you to help feed the world by tilling some of her fertile soil—land similar to that which during many years has averaged 20 to 45 bushels of wheat to the acre. Think of the money you can make with wheat around $2 a bushel and land so easy to get. Wonderful yields also of Oats, Barley and Flax. Mixed farming in Western Canada is as profitable an industry as grain growing.

The Government this year is asking farmers to put increased acreage into grain. Military service is not compulsory in Canada but there is a great demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for service. The climate is healthful and agreeable, railway facilities excellent, good schools and churches convenient. FARM AND LIVE STOCK

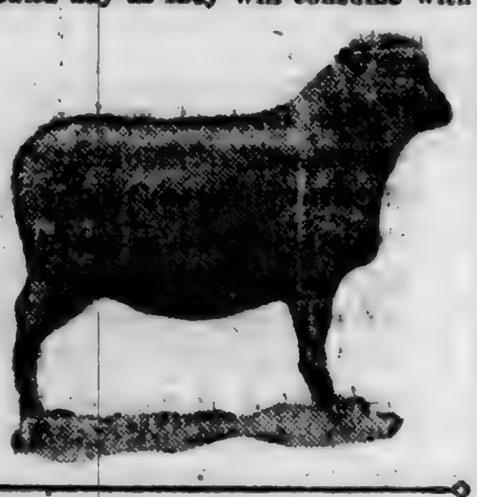
FEEDING EWES IN WINTER.

Grain Ration Necessary to Secure Best Results at Lambing Time.

Large lamb losses are due to improper care of ewes previous to lambing. The feeding practice followed at the Pennsylvania State college is as follows:

Ewes are bred during September and October, insuring February and March lambs. The latter part of November ewes are taken off pasture and placed in winter quarters. During the first month they receive as much clover or alfalfa hay as they will consume with two and one-half to three pounds of corn silage or roots daily to each animal, in addition to hay. About Jan. 1 ewes receive a limited grain ration varying from one-fourth to one-half pound per day, depending on their condition.



The Oxford Down sheep is a double cross, being made up of the Hampshire ewe, a cross bred animal, with the Cotswold ram. It is the largest of this class of sheep. It produces an excellent mutton carcass, and, as the fleece is worsted wool and weighs seven pounds on an average, it is a profitable breed. The sheep shown is an Oxford.

Ewes receiving a grain ration before lambing always produce more milk for lambs. The grain mixture used at State College farm consists of five parts of shelled corn, three parts of oats, two parts of wheat bran and one part of oilmeal.

After lambs are born the ewe will not consume as much roughage feed. More grain is then necessary to give a milk flow sufficient for the best growth of the lamb. The grain mixture should be increased, therefore, one-half pound or more daily per ewe, depending on her condition and also upon the number of lambs she is raising.

Next to proper feeding, exercise is considered the most important factor in keeping ewes in good condition for lambing. Exercise lots should be well drained to prevent sore feet. It is well to allow ewes to range on pasture during the winter, since exercise gives strength and enables them to produce lambs with less effort and of a stronger, more vigorous type.

FERTILIZING WHEAT.

For Spring Application Acid Phosphate Is Recommended.

For wheatfields not fertilized last fall nor manured during the winter, the Ohio experiment station recommends for application in early spring, on nearly all soils that have been under long cultivation, from 200 to 300 pounds of acid phosphate to the acre. Nitrate of soda has paid for itself in some experimental field tests, but the present cost of potassium prohibits its use this year.

In the station's fertility tests 100 pounds of acid phosphate have produced increase in the yields of corn, oats, wheat and hay worth more than $4 at ordinary farm prices. Nitrate of soda used alone has been unprofitable, but its addition to acid phosphate has paid well on Wooster soil although barely sufficient to [illegible] ville, Germantown and Carpenter substations. These materials may easily be sown by hand in the spring before growth starts and are soluble in the soil for the use of plants. Because of the limited response of wheat to potassium and because of its high price this year the experiment station advises against the use of this element for the present wheat crop and urges farmers to preserve all barnyard manure carefully to supply the necessary potassium.

FARM STOCK.

Cleanliness is the watchword for success with pigs.

There is no profit in a sheep flock that is neglected.

Develop draft foals from birth to maturity with plenty of good feed, lots of exercise and by proper care. Good breeding gives possibilities which good feeding and care develop.

There is very little danger of disease with hogs if they are kept clean, fed clean food and given pure, clean water to drink.

Clover or alfalfa hay and some grain fed with roots will bring the sheep flock through the winter in a thrifty and profitable condition.

Mismating causes many horse breeding failures. Patronize only a superior, pure bred, sound stallion.

With the Fingers! Says Corns Lift Out Without Any Pain

Sore corns, hard corns, soft corns or any kind of a corn can shortly be lifted right out with the fingers if you will apply directly upon the corn a few drops of freezone, says a Cincinnati authority.

It is claimed that at small cost one can get a quarter of an ounce of freezone at any drug store, which is sufficient to rid one's feet of every corn or callus without pain or soreness or the danger of infection.

This new drug is an ether compound, and while sticky, dries the moment it is applied and does not inflame or even irritate the surrounding tissue.

This announcement will interest many women here, for it is said that the present high-heel footwear is putting corns on practically every woman's feet.

SALTS IF KIDNEYS OR BLADDER BOTHER

Harmless to flush Kidneys and neutralize irritating acids—Splendid for system.

Kidney and Bladder weakness result from uric acid, says a noted authority. The kidneys filter this acid from the blood and pass it on to the bladder, where it often remains to irritate and inflame, causing a burning, scalding sensation, or setting up an irritation at the neck of the bladder, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night. The sufferer is in constant dread, the water passes sometimes with a scalding sensation and is very profuse; again, there is difficulty in avoiding it.

Bladder weakness, most folks call it, because they can't control urination. While it is extremely annoying and sometimes very painful, this is really one of the most simple ailments to overcome. Get about four ounces of Jad Salts from your pharmacist and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast, continue this for two or three days. This will neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation to the bladder and urinary organs which then act normally again.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, harmless, and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is used by thousands of folks who are subject to urinary disorders caused by uric acid irritation. Jad Salts is splendid for kidneys and causes no bad effects whatever.

Here you have a pleasant, effervescent lithia-water drink, which quickly relieves bladder trouble.

Hopes Women Will Adopt This Habit As Well As Men

Glass of hot water each morning helps us look and feel clean, sweet, fresh.

Happy, bright, alert—vigorous and vivacious—a good clear skin; a natural, rosy complexion and freedom from illness are assured only by clean, healthy blood. If only every woman and likewise every man could realize the wonders of the morning inside bath, what a gratifying change would take place.

Instead of the thousands of sickly, anaemic-looking men, women and girls with pasty or muddy complexions; instead of the multitudes of "nerve wrecks," "rundowns," "brain fags" and pessimists we should see a virile, optimistic throng of rosy-cheeked people everywhere.

An inside bath is had by drinking, each morning before breakfast, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash from the stomach, liver, kidneys and ten yards of bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour fermentations and poisons, thus cleansing, sweetening and freshening the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach.

Those subject to sick headache, biliousness, nasty breath, rheumatism, colds; and particulary those who have a pallid, sallow complexion and who are constipated very often [illegible] urged to obtain a quarter pound of limestone phosphate at the drug store which will cost but a trifle [illegible] sufficient to demonstrate the [illegible] and remarkable change in [illegible] and appearance awaiting those who practice internal sanitation. [illegible] remember that inside cleanliness is more important than outside, because the skin does not absorb impurities to contaminate the blood [illegible] the pores in the thirty feet of [illegible] do.

Stanley Shutt is suffering with a severe attack of pneumonia and his critical time will be in [illegible] days when the fever is to break.

SUCCESS WITH BARLEY.

Experience of a Farmer Who Sowed It as an Alfalfa Nurse Crop.

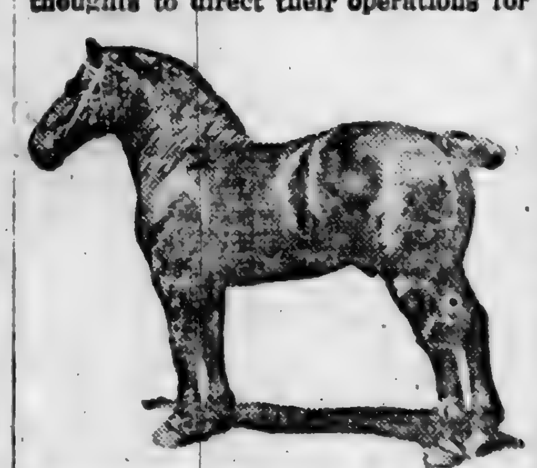
I have never raised barley as a crop but once, and then it was used as a nurse crop to alfalfa in 1915, writes a correspondent of Orange Judd Farmer. I sowed ten acres of barley broadcast on May 3, 1915, using ten bushels. I think the name of the variety was Oderbrucker. It is a bearded barley, with six rows of kernels. I paid 50 cents a bushel for the seed. I graded it and treated it for smut in a wagon box, using formaldehyde.

The barley being bearded, I could not cut for hay, so I let it mature and cut and shocked it for thrashing. It being very wet at harvest time, it was set up in long shocks and not capped, and it stood the wet weather remarkably well. When it stopped raining we thrashed about Sept. 4. It yielded 334 bushels, machine measure, and went into the bin in fine shape. I have used it for grinding and sold some for seed at 78 cents per bushel. The alfalfa came on nicely, and the binder clipped it some: then we mowed it off about Oct. 1 and let the clippings lie on the ground.

The field was limed April 27, using three tons of pulverized limestone per acre, spread with a limestone sower. The alfalfa seed was inoculated. The two and one-half bushels of seed used was sown with a hand seeder, using one-half of the seed both ways of the field, followed by a sixteen foot harrow, then rolled and harrowed again. The ground was in oats stubble in 1914 and manured and plowed deep, and the ten bushels of seed barley produced 334 bushels of good heavy barley. Had it not been used as a nurse crop I would have sown more and it might have produced more bushels. A large per cent was shelled and wasted on the ground.

FARMERS SHOULD RAISE MORE DRAFT HORSES

The danger of overproduction of horses is remote. It costs more to produce them than any other class of live stock, writes Wayne Dinsmore in the Iowa Homestead. For that reason many farmers sit back and proclaim that it doesn't pay to raise horses; that there never was a time when the horse market was so dull as now; that the motor truck and tractor have killed the horse business and the horse is a thing of the past. Some people believe all of this, even though the truth of the matter is the opposite.



One of the speakers at the Illinois Horse Breeders' association said that one reason for the fact that our farm horses are not as good as they ought to be is the scarcity of good, useful sires. Approximately half the stallions standing for public service in this country are grades and scrubs and half the pure breds ought never to have been used as sires. The stallion shown is a pure bred Percheron.

Those who have allowed such thoughts to direct their operations for the past five to ten years will soon see the error of their ways. It takes time to make much headway in the horse business. Five years are needed to grow a horse. At best one should not expect more than two colts from three mares as an average per year. Moreover not more than 16 per cent of our farmers are raising colts. Not long hence the American farmer will wake up only to learn that a great opportunity has passed.

The next ten years is bound to see the greatest demand for horseflesh the world has ever known. It can't be met on short notice. The man who is breeding every mare old enough to the best stallion available and is taking proper care of the offspring is the man who is sure to be rewarded.

There are plenty of men who have bought and paid for farms within the past ten years by their pure bred draft mares. In the same community there are farmers who are no better off financially than they were a decade ago because they failed to foresee the profits from using the right kind of horses in their farm work. The men who have made money and who are going to reap the fruits of their efforts in the future are those who early saw the undeniable need for heavy draft horses for farm work, who bred that kind and who will continue to do so without a halt.

Keep Eggs Clean.

Provide roomy, clean nests. There should be at least one nest for every six hens. Foul nests cause dirty eggs. Dirty eggs, no matter how large and fresh, are always graded as seconds or lower. Gather the eggs often and keep them in a cool, dry place all the time until they are sold. Use the small, dirty or cracked eggs at home. Small eggs are just as wholesome for food as large ones.

The Hen's Bath.

An old box half full of wood ashes and the ashes sprinkled with lime makes a good bath wherein Biddy can dust herself and free herself of vermin.

WILSON'S ADDRESS TO CONGRESS

MEETS LEGISLATIVE BODY IN JOINT SESSION.

NOTE ANNOUNCES BREAK

Recalls Many Previous Situations Regarding Germany's Submarine Policy—President Sees No Alternative.

Washington, Feb. 5.—In his address to the members of congress, breaking off diplomatic relations with Germany, Saturday afternoon, President Wilson said:

"Gentlemen of the Congress: "The imperial German government on the 31st of January, announced to this government and to the governments of the other neutral nations that on and after the first day of February, the present month, it would adopt a policy with regard to the use of submarines against all shipping seeking to pass through certain designated areas of the high seas, to which it is clearly my duty to call your attention.

"Let me remind the congress on the 8th of April last, in view of the sinking on the 24t of March of the cross-channel passenger steamer Susex by a German submarine without summons or warning and the consequent loss of lives of several citizens of the United States who were passengers aboard her this government addressed a note to the imperial government in which it made the following declaration:

The Sussex Case Note.

"'If it is still the purpose of the imperial government to prosecute relentless and indiscriminate warfare against vessels of commerce by the use of submarines without regard to what the government of the United States must consider the sacred and indisputable rules of international law and the universally recognized dictates of humanity the government of the United States is at least forced to the conclusion that there is but one course it can pursue. Unless the imperial government should now immediately declare and effect an abandonment of its present methods of submarine warfare against passenger and freight carrying vessels the government of the United States can have no choice but to sever diplomatic relations with the German empire altogether.

The German Assurance.

"In reply to this declaration the imperial government gave this government the following assurance:

"'The German government is prepared to do its utmost to confine the operations of war for the rest of its duration to the fighting forces of the belligerents, thereby also insuring the freedom of the seas, a principle upon which the German government believes now as before to be in agreement with the government of the United States.

"'The German government, guided by this idea, notifies the government of the United States that the German naval forces have received the following orders. In accordance with the general principle of visit and search and destruction of merchant vessels characterized by international law, such vessels both within and without the area declared a naval war zone shall not be sunk without warning and without saving human lives unless these ships attempt to escape or offer resistance.

"'But,' it added, 'neutrals cannot expect that Germany, forced to fight for her existence, shall, for the sake of neutral interests, restrict the use of an effective weapon, if her enemy is permitted to continue to apply at will methods of warfare violating the rules of international law. Such a demand would be incompatible with the character of neutrality and the German government is convinced that the government of the United States does not think of making such a demand, knowing that the government of the United States has repeatedly declared that it is determined to restore the principle of the freedom of the seas, from whatever quarter it has been violated.'

Assurances Accepted.

"To this the government of the United States replied on the eighth of May, accepting, of course, the assurances given, but adding:

"'The government of the United States feels it necessary to state that it takes it for granted that the imperial German government does not intend to imply that the maintenance of its newly announced policy is in any way contingent upon the course or result of diplomatic negotiations between the government of the United States and any other belligerent government notwithstanding the fact that certain passages in the imperial note of the 4th inst. might appear to be susceptible of that construction. In order, however, to avoid any misunderstanding, the government of the United States notified the imperial government that it cannot for a moment entertain, much less discuss, a suggestion that respect by German naval authorities for the rights of citizens of the United States upon the high seas should in any way or in the slightest degree be made contingent upon the conduct of any other government affecting the rights of neutrals and noncombatants. Responsibility in such matters is single, not joint, absolute, not relative.'

Germany Made No Reply.

"To this note of the 8th of May the imperial government made no reply.

"On the 31st of January, the Wednesday of the present week, the German ambassador handed to the secretary of state, along with formal note a memorandum which contained the following statement:

"'The imperial government therefore does not doubt that the government of the United States will understand the situation thus forced upon Germany by the entente allies' brutal methods of war and by their determination to destroy the central powers, and that the government of the United States will further realize that the now openly disclosed intention of the entente allies gives back to Germany the freedom of action which she reserves in her note addressed to the government of the United States on May 4, 1916.

"'Under these circumstances Germany will meet the illegal measures of her enemies by forcibly preventing after February 1, 1917, in a zone around Great Britain, France, Italy and in the eastern Mediterranean all navigation that of neutrals included, from and to England and from and to France, etc., etc. All ships met with in the zone will be sunk.'

Has No Alternative.

"I think that you will agree with me that, in view of this declaration which suddenly and without prior intimation of any kind deliberately withdraws the solemn assurance given in the imperial government's note of the 4th of May, 1916, this government has no alternative consistent with the dignity and honor of the United States but to take the course which, in its note of the 18th of April, 1916, it announced that it would take in event that the German government did not declare and effect abandonment of the methods of the submarine warfare which it was then employing and to which it now purposes again to resort.

Announces the Break.

"I have, therefore, directed the secretary of state to announce to his excellency the German ambassador, that all diplomatic relations between the United States and the German empire are severed and that the American ambassador at Berlin will immediately be withdrawn, and, in accordance with this decision to hand to his excellency his passports.

"Notwithstanding this unexpected action of the German government this sudden and deeply deplorable renunciation of its assurances, given this government at one of the most critical moments of tension in the relations of the two governments, I refuse to believe that it is the intention of the German authorities to do in fact, what they warned us they will feel at liberty to do.

Refuses to Believe It.

"I cannot bring myself to believe that they will indeed pay no regard to the ancient friendship between their people and our own to the solemn obligations which have been exchanged between them, and destroy American ships and take the lives of American citizens in the willful prosecution of the ruthless naval program they have announced their intention to adopt. Only actual overt acts on their part can make me believe it even now.

"If this inveterate confidence on my part in the sobriety and prudent foresight of their purpose should unhappily prove unfounded; if American ships and American lives should in fact be sacrificed by their naval commanders in heedless contravention of the just and reasonable understanding of international law and the obvious dictates of humanity, I shall take the liberty of coming again before the congress to ask that authority be given me to use any means that may be necessary for the protection of our seamen and our people in the prosecution of their peaceful and legitimate errands on the high seas. I can do nothing less. I take it for granted that all neutral governments will take the same course.

Do Not Desire Conflict.

"We do not desire any hostile conflict with the imperial German government. We are the sincere friends of the German people and earnestly desire to remain at peace with the government which speaks for them. We shall not believe that they are hostile to us unless and until we are obliged to believe it; and we purpose nothing more than the reasonable defense of the undoubted rights of our people. We wish to serve no selfish ends. We seek merely to stand true alike in thought and action to the immemorial principles of our people which I have sought to express in my address to the senate only two weeks ago—seek merely to vindicate our right to liberty and justice and unmolested life. These are the bases of peace, not war. God grant that we may not be challenged to defend them by acts of willful injustice on the part of the government of Germany."

WILSON BREAKS WITH GERMANY

TAKES FATEFUL STEP IN HOPE THAT U-BOAT ORDER MAY BE RECONSIDEDED.

GERARD IS ORDERED HOME

Passports Have Been Handed Count Von Bernstorff—President Suggests Similar Steps Be Taken By All Neutral Nations.

Washington, Feb. 5.—President Wilson has broken off diplomatic relations with Germany and warned the kaiser that ruthless sacrifice of American lives and right means war.

Similar action is waiting for Austria when she notifies this government that she joins in the campaign of unrestricted submarine warfare.

The president made formal announcement of his action to the country and to the world Saturday at a joint session of congress. Passports have been handed to Count von Bernstorff; Ambassador Gerard with all his staff and all American consuls have been ordered out of Germany. All German consuls in the United States are expected to withdraw that the severance of relations may be complete. American diplomatic interests in Berlin have been turned over to Spain; German diplomatic interests in the United States have been taken over to Switzerland. Foreign diplomatic interests which the United States had in Germany have been turned over to various neutrals. Two years of diplomatic negotiations marked with frequent crises and attended with the loss of more than 200 American lives on the high seas have culminated with an act which in all the history of all the world, has always led to war. Every agency of the American government has been set in motion to protect the country against acts of German sympathizers. These moves are necessary and being kept secret.

With the notice of severance of relations the United States sent to Berlin a demand for the immediate release of sixty-four Americans taken from ships captured by German raiders in the South Atlantic.

At the request of the president, congress immediately after hearing his address began work on new laws framed by the department of justice to check conspiracies and plots against the United States which cannot be reached under existing statutes.

The question of convoying American ships through the submarine blockade has been taken up and is being considered as one of the next moves of this government.

The news of the torpedoing of the American steamer Housatonic, coming almost before President Wilson's words in congress had died away, created a tremendous sensation, but it does not necessarily constitute such an invasion of American rights as the president would meet by asking congress for additional authority to act. Only the establishment of the exact facts can determine whether the sinking of the ship was a new attack on American rights or whether the case comes within the range of other American ships carrying contraband, destroyed in accordance with international law and presenting a case to be settled under its precepts.

Admittedly, if the Housatonic was sunk without warning or with loss of American life it will amount to little less than an act of war, and be followed by all the consequences which the president so clearly pointed out in his address.

Neutral governments have been notified of the action of the United States and have openly been invited to follow its action of the new submarine campaign violates their rights.

The breaking off of relations came with a crash despite the fact that it had been discounted and practically determined upon. The president returned from his night conference with the senators determined that a break in relations was the only act "consistent with the dignity and honor of the United States.' He worked most of the night preparing his address to congress. At 10:30 Saturday morning it became known that Ambassador Gerard had been ordered home and that passports had been sent to Count von Bernstorff. Although there was no official confirmation of the president's decision until he formally announced it himself to congress, the knowledge spread rapidly.

Neutrals Urged to Join.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR FEBRUARY 11

JESUS AND THE WOMAN OF SAMARIA.

LESSON TEXT—John 4:5-14, 24, 26.

GOLDEN TEXT—Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners.—I Tim. 1:15.

This is a lesson of one of the wayside ministries of Jesus. It occurred incidentally while he was on his way to his great preaching and teaching experience at Galilee. It was a by-product of his very busy life, yet it is one of the most famous interviews and one of the best examples of how to do personal work that is found in the scriptures. The larger part of the first year of Christ's ministry was spent in Judea. Jesus did not baptize, but his disciples did, doubtless for the same reason, though in a less degree, than why Paul refused to baptize converts (I Cor. 1:13-16). All but one of the disciples of Jesus were Galileans and Jesus spent about a year and nine months of his ministry in that place.

I. Jesus Rested (vv. 4-6). To reach Galilee from Judea Jesus "must needs go through Samaria," not that there were not other ways that he might have traveled, but rather that it was worth while to go out of his way in order to bring the water of life to this needful woman. Jacob's well was at a parting of the roadway near to the city of Sychar. Few places in the land save Jerusalem had so much Bible history connected with them (Gen. 12:6; Joshua 8:33; Acts 7:16; I Kings, 12:1, etc.). The well was originally about 100 feet deep and 7½ feet in diameter, but it has been filled up with accumulations of rubbish so it is now only about 75 feet deep. Christ was wearied in his work, but not of it, and "sat thus" (by) the well; literally, on the low wall built around it. The sixth hour was probably about midday There is comfort in consideration of the fact that as a man Jesus was willing to meet this woman of bad character.

II. Jesus Holds Conversation (vv. 7-14). Notice the gentle way in which Jesus speaks, and that he began on the ground of their common need. He asks this needed favor that he might confer a greater one, ignoring the prejudice which existed against the Samaritans. Water was the thing uppermost in the woman's mind. She did not grant his simple request, and her reply indicated that racial differences were a very real barrier. They hinder our work even yet. The surprise, perhaps pleasure, that a Jew should ask a favor of her seems to have greatly impressed the woman, and aroused her curiosity. In verse 10 Jesus tells the woman that there are two things she must needs know: (1) the wondrous gift of God, that is the Holy Spirit (Luke 11:13; Acts 2:23-38); (2) the wonderful man who had asked of her "Give me to drink." Had she known these things she would have asked him for the living water. All that was needful was simply to ask. The Holy Spirit is the living water (John 6:63). The woman does not seem to have comprehended what Jesus was trying to teach, yet he was patient, and won her as a convert. He told her that everyone who came to that well would thirst again (v. 13). The world's fountains do not satisfy, fountains of wealth, fame, pleasure or carnal gratification, or even learning. He then tells her of the living water (v. 14)) of which the drinker should never thirst, that it would satisfy whosoever drinks, and was to be everlasting (John 7:37-39). The one who receives the Holy Spirit within has a perennial, eternal spring of life, joy and satisfaction springing up within him. Before the woman received the water of which he was speaking there had to come a conviction of sin (vv. 16-19); hence his remark, "Go call thy husband." This was a sharp thrust into her life and heart. She tried to parry the thrust with a technical question, yet he comes back with a great revelation of the nature of God and the worship which God accepts, revealing his Messiahship (vv. 15-26). As is indicated, she does not seem to have comprehended the nature of the request which Jesus had made (v. 15); therefore he began this searching of her life in order to prepare her to receive the water of life which he wanted to bestow. This knowledge of her secret life by a perfect stranger who had never even seen her before was an evidence to the woman of spiritual endowment: "Sir I perceive that thou art a prophet." She then entered upon a theological argument (v. 20) which Jesus answered very simply, saying that the worship of the Father is not to be restricted by time or place (v. 21).

At this point the disciples return and the woman goes into the village.

Jesus, lifting up his eyes to the citizens who were coming out at her invitation, exclaims, "Lift up your eyes and look on the fields, for they are white already to harvest," thereby emphasizing still further the "personal evangelism" thought which is uppermost in this lesson.

She thirsted (v. 14), she received (vv. 25, 26), she became a spring (vv. 28-29), which supplied others (v. 39).

The water of life fully satisfies, and it is a spring (v. 10); it continually satisfies.

Against Women's High Shoes.

There is a great cry in England against the high shoes of fashion, because of the leather they consume, unnecessarily. One manufacturer announces publicly that although he is not in sympathy with the style he must make them because women insist upon having them.

Forsaking Ranks of Pikers.

Booth Tarkington, while in New York recently spending some of the proceeds of "Seventeen," was discussing the subject of debt with a playwright friend, known for impecuniousness.

"About twelve hundred dollars would see me clear of debt," said the playwright. "And I tell you, Tark, if I ever get out of debt once I'll never get twelve hundred dollars in the hole again. It will be twelve thousand dollars next time. No more piker games for me."

Housekeeping for Indian Girls.

On the campus of the Carlisle Indian school is a bungalow, known as the model home cottage, which plays an important part in the education of Indian girls. Four girls are sent to the cottage every month with a matron. They do all the work connected with running the house, which is constructed in such a manner that it virtually duplicates conditions to be found in any home on an Indian reservation.

Suggestive Signs.

"I presume this gardener of yours is a Carranza sympathizer."

"What makes you think that?"

"Because he has Mexican roses for the border."

It is noticed that some breadwinners provide larger loaves than others.

Most of these friends in need always seem to need us.

THE DESTROYING ANGEL

By LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

Hastening back to the farmstead, he secured a spade from the barn, and made his way quickly down to the beach by way of the road through the cluster of deserted fishermen's huts.

Fifteen minutes' walk brought him to the pool. Ten minutes' hard work with the spade sufficed to excavate a shallow trench in the sands above high-water mark. He required as much time again to nerve himself to the point of driving off the gulls and moving the body. There were likewise crabs to be dealt with. . . .

When it was accomplished, and he had lifted the last heavy stone into place above the grave, he waded out into the sea and cleansed himself as best he might, then lay down for a time in the strength-giving light, feeling giddy and faint.

What the gulls and the crabs and the shattering surf had left had been little, but enough for indisputable identification.

Whitaker had buried Drummond.

By the time he got back to the farm-house, the woman was up, dressed in the rent and stained but dry remnants of her own clothing (for all their defects, infinitely more becoming than the garments to which she had been obliged to resort the previous day) and busy preparing breakfast.

"Well, sir!" she called heartily over her shoulder. "And where, pray, have you been all this long time?"

"I went for a swim," he said evasively—"thought it might do me good."

"You're not feeling well?" She turned to look him over. He avoided her eye. "I had a bad night."

"Still got the hump, eh?"

"Still got the hump," he assented, glad thus to mask his unhappiness.

"Breakfast and a strong cup of tea or two will fix that," she announced with confidence.

His stout attempts to match her cheerfulness during the meal fell dismally short of conviction. After two or three false starts he gave it up and took refuge in his plea of indisposition. She humored him with a covert understanding that surmised more in a second than he could have compressed into a ten-minute confession.

The meal over, he rose and sidled awkwardly toward the door.

"You'll be busy for a while with the dishes and things, won't you?" he asked with an air meant to seem guileless.

"Oh, yes; for some time," she replied quickly.

"I—I think I'll take a stroll round the island. There might be something like a boat hidden away somewhere along the beach."

"You won't go out of sight?" she pleaded through the window.

"It can't be done," he called back, strolling out of the dooryard with much show of idle indecision.

His real purpose was, in fact, definite. There was another body to be accounted for.

To his intense relief, he made no further discovery other than a scattering drift of wreckage from the motorboats. He turned at length and trudged wearily back toward the farmhouse.

Since breakfast he had seen nothing of the girl; none of the elaborately casual glances which he had from time to time cast inland had discovered any sign of her. But now she appeared in the doorway, and after a slight pause, as of indecision, moved down the path to meet him.

He was conscious that, at sight of her, his pulses quickened. Something swelled in his breast, something tightened the muscles of his throat. The way of her body in action, the way of the sun with her hair . . !

Dismay shook him like an ague; he felt his heart divided against itself; he was so glad of her, and so afraid . . . He could not keep his eyes from her, nor could he make his desire be still; and yet . . . and yet . . .

They paused beside one of the low stone walls and the girl sat down upon the lichened stones, then looked up to him with a smile and a slight movement of the head that plainly invited him to a place beside her.

"I watched you, off and on, from the windows. You might have been looking for a pin, from your painstaking air, off there along the cliffs."

He nodded again, gloomily. Her comment seemed to admit of no more compromising method of reply.

"Then you've nothing to tell me?"

He pursed his lips, depreciatory, lifted his shoulders not quite happily, and swung one lanky leg across the other as he slouched, morosely eying the sheets of sapphire that made their prison walls. There was a little silence. She watched him askance with her fugitive, shadowy, sympathetic and shrewd smile.

"Must I make talk, then?" she demanded at length.

"If we must, I suppose—you'll have to show the way. My mind's hardly equal to trail-breaking to-day."

"So I shall, then. Hugh . . ." She leaned toward him, dropping her hand over his own with an effect of infinite comprehension. "Hugh," she repeated, meeting his gaze squarely as he looked up, startled—"what's the good of keeping up the make-believe? You know!"

The breath clicked in his throat, and his glance wavered uneasily, then steadied again to hers. And through a long moment neither stirred, but sat so, eye to eye, searching each the other's mind and heart.

At length he confessed it with an uncertain, shamefaced nod.

"That's right," he said: "I do know—now."

She removed her hand and sat back without lessening the fixity of her regard.

"When did you find it out?"

"This morning. That is it came to me all of a sudden—" His gaze fell; he stammered and felt his face burning.

"Hugh, that's not quite honest. I know you hadn't guessed, last night—I know it. Hugh, look at me!"

Unwillingly he met her eyes.

"How did you find out?"

He was an inexpert liar. Under the witchery of her eyes, his resource failed him absolutely. He started to repeat, stammered, fell still, and then in a breath capitulated.

"Before you were up—I meant to keep this from you—down there on the beach—I found Drummond."

"Drummond!"

It was a cry of terror. She started back from him, eyes wide, cheeks whitening.

"I'm sorry . . . But I presume you ought to know. . . . His body . . . I buried it. . ."

She gave a little smothered cry, and seemed to shrink in upon herself, burying her face in her hands—an incongruous, huddled shape of grief, there upon the gray stone wall, set against all the radiant beauty of the exquisite, sun-gladdened world.

He was patient with her, though the slow-dragging minutes during which she neither moved nor made any sound brought him inexpressible distress, and he seemed to age visibly, his face, settling in iron lines, gray with suffering.

At length a moan—rather, a wail—came from the stricken figure beside him:

"Ah, the pity of it! the pity of it! . . . What have I done that this should come to me!"

He ventured to touch her hand in gentle sympathy.

"Mary," he said, and hesitated with a little wonder, remembering that this was the first time he had ever called her by that name—"Mary, did you care for him so much?"

She sat, trembling, her face averted and hidden.

"Don't blame him," she said softly. "He wasn't responsible."

"I know."

"How long have you know?" She swung suddenly to face him.

"For some time—definitely, for two or three days. Ember took him away, meaning to put him in a sanitarium. I don't understand how he got away—from Ember. It worries me—on Ember's account. I hope nothing has happened to him."

"Oh, I hope not!"

"You know—I mean about the cause—the morphine?"

"I never guessed until that night, after he had come down into the cabin to—to drug himself. . . . It was very terrible—that tiny, pitching cabin, with the swinging, smoking lamp, and the madman sitting there, muttering to himself over the glass in which the morphine was dissolving. . . . It happened three times before the wreck; I thought I should go out of my own mind."

She shuddered, her face tragic and pitiful. For a little she sat, head bowed, brooding.

"Hugh!" she cried, looking up to search his face narrowly—"Hugh, you've not been pretending—?"

"Pretending?" he repeated, thick-witted.

"Hugh, I could never forgive you if you'd been pretending. It would be too cruel . . . Ah, but you haven't been! Tell me you haven't!"

"I don't understand . . . Pretending what?"

"Pretending you didn't know who I was—pretending to fall in love with me just because you were sorry for me, to make me think it was me you loved and not the woman you felt bound to take care of, because you'd—you had—"

"Mary, listen to me," he interrupted. "I swear I didn't know you. Only, that night on the stage, as Joan Thursday, you were that girl again. I never dreamed of associating you with my wife. Dear, I didn't know, believe me. It was you who bewitched me—not the wife for whose sake I fought against what I thought infatuation for you. I loved—I love you only, you as you are—not the poor little girl of the Commercial House."

"I have loved you always," she said softly between barely parted lips—"always, Hugh. Even when I thought you dead . . I did believe that you were drowned out there. Hugh! You know that, don't you."

"I have never for an instant questioned it."

"It wouldn't be like you to, my dear; it wouldn't be you, my Hugh. No other man I ever knew—no, let me say it!—ever measured up to the standard you had set for me to worship. But Hugh—you'll understand, won't you?—about the others—?"

"Please," he begged—"please don't harrow yourself so, Mary!"

"No; I must tell you. . . . The world seemed so empty and so lonely, Hugh: I tried to lose myself in my work, but it wasn't enough. And those others came, beseeching me, and—and I liked them. I was starving for affection. Each time, Hugh, it was the same. One by one they were taken from me, strangely, terribly. . . Poor Tom Custer, first; he was a dear boy, but I didn't love him and couldn't marry him. I had to tell him so. He killed himself. . . . Then Billy Hamilton; I became engaged to him; but he was taken mysteriously from a crowded ship in mid-ocean. . . . A man named Mitchel Thurston loved me. I liked him; perhaps I might have consented to marry him. He was assassinated—shot down like a mad dog in broad daylight—no one ever knew by whom, or why. He hadn't an enemy in the world we knew of. . . . And now Drummond . . .!"

"Mary, Mary!" he pleaded. "Don't—don't—those things were all accidents—"

She paid him no heed. She didn't seem to hear. He tried to take her hand, with a man's dull, witless notion of the way to comfort a distraught woman; but she snatched it from his touch.

"And now"—her voice pealed out like a great bell tolling over the magnificent solitude of the forsaken island—"and now I have it to live through once again; the wonder and terror and beauty of love, the agony and passion of having you torn from me! . . . Hugh! . . . I don't believe I can endure it again. I can't bear this exquisite torture. I'm afraid I shall go mad! . . . Unless . . . unless"—her voice shuddered—"I have the strength, the strength to—"

"Stop!" he cried in desperation. "You must not go on like this! Mary! Listen to me!"

This time he succeeded in imprisoning her hand. "Mary," he said gently, drawing closer to her, "listen to me; understand what I say. I love you; I am your husband; nothing can possibly come between us. All these other things can be explained. Don't let yourself think for another instant—"

Her eyes, fixed upon the two hands in which he clasped her own, had grown wide and staring with dread. Momentarily she seemed stunned. Then she wrenched it from him, at the same time jumping up and away.

"No!" she cried, fending him from her with shaking arms. "No! Don't touch me! Don't come near me, Hugh! It's . . . it's death! My touch is death! I know it now—I had begun to suspect; now I know! I am accursed—doomed to go through life like pestilence, leaving sorrow and death in my wake. . . . Hugh!" She controlled herself a trifle: "Hugh, I love you more than life; I love you more than love itself. But you must not come near me. Love me if you must, but O my dear one! keep away from me; avoid me, forget me if you can, but at all cost shun me as you would the plague! I will not give myself to you to be your death!"

Before he could utter a syllable in reply, she turned and fled from him.

CHAPTER XVI.

Capitulation.

Grimly Whitaker sat himself down in the kitchen and prepared to wait the reappearance of his wife—prepared to wait as long as life was in him, so that he were there to welcome her when, her paroxysm over, she would come to him to be comforted, soothed and reasoned out of her distorted conception of her destiny.

He pondered the situation for hours then he rose, ascended the stairs tapped gently on the locked door.

"Mary," he called, with his heart in his mouth—"Mary!"

Her answer was instant, in accents sweet, calm and clear.

The breathless seconds spun their golden web of minutes. They did not move. Round them the silence sang like the choiring seraphim. . . .

What Good Housing Entails.

Up to a recent date no case of infantile paralysis had appeared among the 3,000 occupants of the 365 dwelling houses owned by Trinity Church corporation in New York city, although the disease has been in the neighborhood. The houses have advantages in their freedom from congestion, as approximately two-thirds of them shelter only one or two families, and in their back yards, generally used as flower gardens, where the children play without exposure to other children. Trinity is taking precautions in the way of issuing information on health to its tenants.

Forever Open.

"My nephew, Rupert—the lop-eared one, you remember—has come home from the university as knowing as an unabridged dictionary," grimly stated old P. G. Pester. "But, unlike that valuable tome, you can't shut him up when you want to."—Judge.

PRESIDENT OF HAVERFORD

The recent selection of Dr. William Wistar Comfort, professor of romance languages at Cornell university, to be president of Haverford college is in line with the recent policy of several colleges in bringing young blood into their managements, as he is only forty-two years old, having been born in Germantown on May 27, 1874. His mother before her marriage was Miss Susan F. Wistar. In 1902 he was married to Miss Mary Fales of Lake Forest, Ill., and he is the father of four children, a son and three daughters.

Throughout his scholastic career at Haverford, Doctor Comfort was a leader in the activities of his class, being its president in its senior year. He also was president of the college Y. M. C. A. In his junior and senior years he was a member of the first cricket teams and he took an interest in music as well as athletics, being a member of the mandolin and banjo club.

Doctor Comfort was graduated from Haverford in the class of 1894. He took his A. B. degree at Harvard in 1895, his master's degree one year later and his degree of Ph. D. in 1902. He was instructor at Haverford college in 1897-98, studied in France and Germany for several years, and returned to Haverford in the fall of 1901 as instructor. In 1903 he was made associate professor, holding that position until 1909, when he resigned to become the head of the romance languages' department in Cornell university.

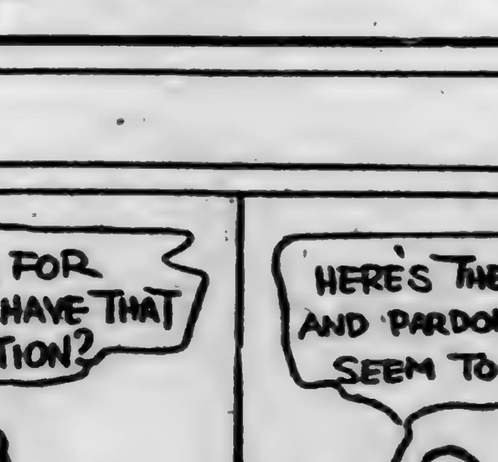
PHILLIPS' RAPID RISE

By his appointment as assistant secretary of state, William Phillips has gone higher in the diplomatic service more rapidly than any official other than Secretary Lansing himself and Ambassador Fletcher. Starting as private secretary to Ambassador Choate in London in 1903, he has worked his way up through posts in various parts of the world to a position ranked only by the secretary of state and the counselor of the state department.

His appointment is known to have been made in line with Secretary Lansing's policy to keep the state department out of politics.

Secretary Phillips, throughout the war, has been in immediate charge of European affairs, including relief work, questions as to prisoners, passports, deportations, consular work, diplomatic changes and appointments, and diplomatic etiquette. Secretary Phillips is a graduate of Harvard university and Harvard law school, has been second secretary of legation at Peking, chief delegate to several international gatherings, and was appointed third assistant secretary of state March 13, 1914.

THOMAS W. LAWSON



Thomas W. Lawson of Boston, who jumped into the limelight again by his charges of "leaks" from Washington to Wall street, is not only a grotesque figure in the eyes of the financial community, which has been familiar with his methods ever since he first became prominent, more than a quarter of a century ago as a joint promoter with "Gasman" Addicks of the great speculative bubble, the Bay State Gas company of Delaware, but is a very painful one to thousands of investors, great and small, whose losses in the last score of years have run into the millions.

Lawson began his speculative career over 40 years ago as a clerk in a Providence bucket shop. It was said at the time that he was a natural-born speculator, and his shrewdness of perception, his ability to grasp speculative opportunities and his agility and daring as a market operator soon began to attract attention in State street, Boston, which afterward became the scene of his activities. While a very young man, Lawson had accumulated a fortune and had achieved some local reputation as a financier.

As far as Wall street's recollections go, he first attracted attention on the New York stock exchange as one of the most active promoters of Bay State Gas of Delaware. This stock once reached a quotation of $28 a share on the New York stock exchange. At high prices a large amount of the stock was unloaded by Lawson and his friends on the public, among which he had by that time built up a substantial following, largely through his spectacular methods.

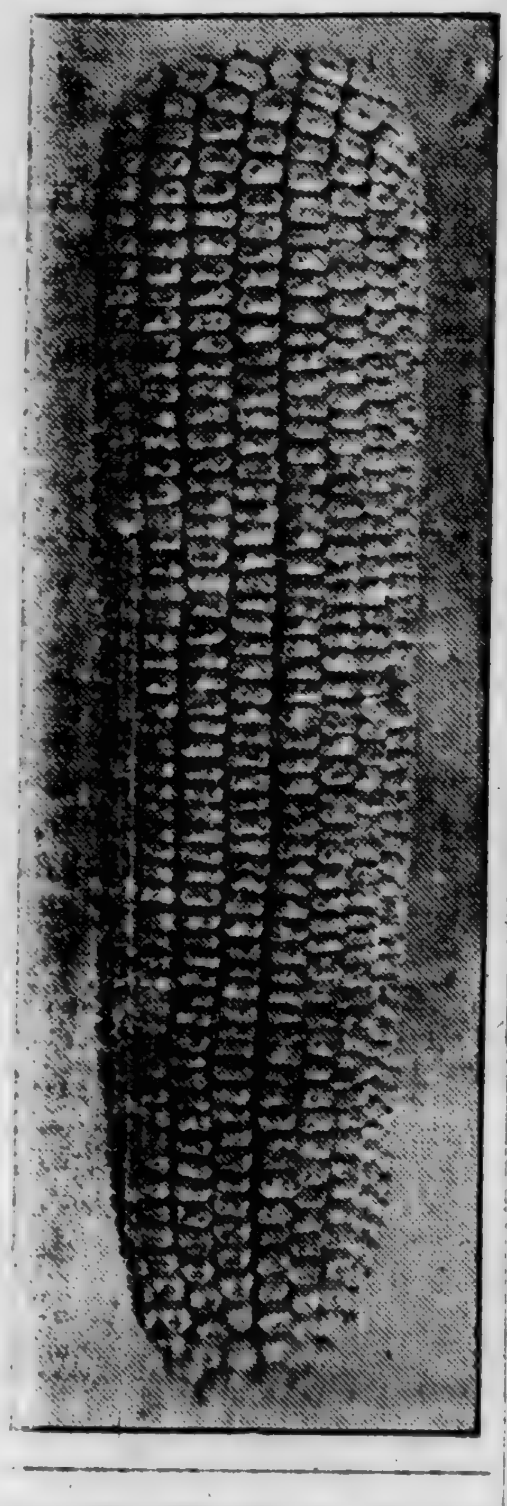
PREMIUM LIST, CORN AND BREAD SHOW

FRIDAY MORNING.

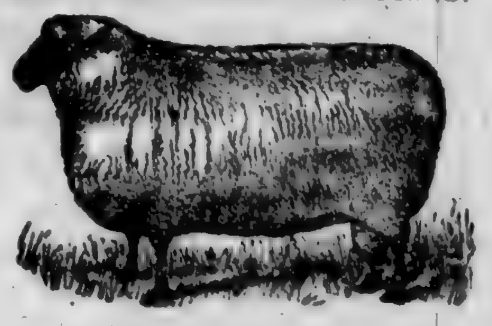
The extreme cold, harsh wind cut down the attendance greatly today but after all a good crowd was present at the 9:30 opening. America was sung followed by prayer by Rev. J. C. Coons. "Breeding and Selecting Seed Corn" by James Kline was a most instructive talk, and say Jim knows what corn is too. His first statement was:—5 million acres in our state yielded less than 35 bushels of corn per acre in 10 years, and it requires 30 bushels to pay for the raising of the crop. In 1914 contest 21 farmers in state raised 100 bushels per acre on 5 acre tract, and in 1915, there were 300 farmers averaging only 78 bushels. Great improvements are needed and especially in the variety. Don't send too far away for seed as the climate will not permit. His plan for improving grade was excellent and practical, and one that will mean much to every farmer. His demonstration of judging corn was fine and Indiana should grow a corn with a small cob and a deep wedge shape kernel, of from 16 to 20 rows, uniform in size, color, an ear with 86% corn. Never plant corn before testing was strongly emphasized.



Mrs. J. H. Deller spoke on the betterment of the rural homes and her first statement was that too many farm homes show the lack of thrift. There are more children in the country than cities and consequently they need the same special care of nice kept yards and home surrounding as the city. Clean door yards, flowers, trees and shrubs are necessary for home contentment. Don't allow chickens, pigs and stock to be about the yard, young people should not stand for it and as a rule when they grow up they will leave for better places. Many things along this line were given in her talk showing the home influence on the young.

The demands of the day on home school and church was ably handled by Mrs. Deller. Divorces were given a thorough discussion showing how in many cases the parents were to blame. Cleanliness in the home is of great importance and the extinction of the fly is a necessity. Music, literature, amusements and school and church life should be made the best obtainable.

More and better live stock by James Kline showed how the rural communities were able to maintain better preachers, schools and churches and all would be on a better paying basis. We are able as a state to grow more stock and to furnish all the feed necessary to produce the fatted stock ready for market. The best beef cattle are the the Herford, Angus and Short Horn. Too many farmers fail in this attempt by changing breeds, stick to the one you start with and breed better each year. The breeding of good horses was considered. Sheep industry is quite profitable and needs a little fore-thought and and they require but little labor.



One of the most interesting feature of the Institute was the Domestic Science and Manual Training display arranged by the Spencerville and St. Joe High Schools, in the Patterson garage. But few people stop to consider what such training will amount to in the course of a few years to our boys and girls, and when one sees the work that the schools are doing they are amazed, because it is A-1. Many of our children would be unable to get the first principles of the work anywhere else. The displays showed such marked improvements over last year, and this is speaks well for the instructors. The Steward Lumber Co., offers a free trip to the Purdue Short Course next winter, to the pupil making the greatest gain in Manual Training work from the tri-townships. This will stimulate some to more careful work perhaps.

The Davis Quartet, of Auburn, gave the program Thursday evening, to a good audience and the program was one that pleased all. Members of the company were known here and it made the program more interesting and while they are yet young at traveling they are of such a class that Auburn can feel highly pleased with them. Mrs. Ray Davis is manager.

CORN DISPLAY

The corn display as shown in the Curie room was far better than anyone ever expected to see, because some said the corn was no good—but to prove the incorrectness of this statement it was said that the corn display was of a much better quality than two years ago. Undoubtedly a milk testing association will be organized in this locality although milk can be accurately tested in our public school at St. Joe.

Seventy-one members were secured for 1918 in order to secure help for next year's institute and fifty-seven had paid their dues in at the close of the session.

An attendance of 1,385 was had at all sessions. The record is as follows:—Thursday morning 230; afternoon 350; evening 380; Friday morning 125; afternoon 175 and evening 125. The first three sessions were much better than last year but the bad weather the last day played havoc with the attendance. The interest was fine and speakers great.

Farewell Reception.

A farewell reception was given Mrs. S. H. Maurer, of Spencerville, at her home on Railroad Street, Tuesday afternoon, Feb. 6, by the ladies of the C. C. Club. The reception was very carefully and cunningly planned and was a complete surprise Guests to the number of twenty-five came with baskets filled with good things to eat. The table presented a beautiful sight with a large bouquet of red and green in the center. A two-course dinner was served in cafeteria style. A good social time was enjoyed by all present Before the departure ot the guests Mrs. Maurer thanked them for the pleasant surprise which they gave her, and for the many good times she enjoyed with them during her residence here. Mr and Mrs Maurer are soon to leave for their new home in Auburn where they will reside on West Eight St.

Balance of Institute.

In our last issue we were unable to report the demonstration work of our County Agent, Mr A. Z Arehart, at the Farmer's Institute, also the session in which C. M. Graham of South Whitley, gave his lecture "More Precious than Gold."

Mr Arehart demonstrated the "Testing of Milk" and "Testing of Soil" both of which were very interesting and practical Our County Agent impresses one as being conscientously absorbed in his work and not given to finery or egotism.

Mr. Graham's "More Precious than Gold" was one of the strongest lectures that has come to our town It is to be regretted that the bad weather prevented so many attending. Everyone within his hearing was made to realize and appreciate how much 'More Precious than Gold' some of the real things in life are Mr Graham showed great power of memory and literary talent. He is a retired farmer.

No. 6 Stops at St. Joe.

Great things are happening in our state this year and much to the satisfaction of all the people. St. Joe has had a special blessing bestowed upon her during the last few days through the action of the Inter-state Commerce Commission regarding the stopping of east bound train No. 6 on the B. & O. It stops at St. Joe from now on and don't you forget it, for Auburn Junction passengers. Last Saturday the order was rescinded and the train stopped. St. Joe people have been fair in all of their requests and they also appreciate the effort of the Commission in granting this, while the railroad refused. No. 6 stops at St. Joe.

Auto Accident

Monday morning, Sol Barney received word of the accident of Miss Josephine Johnson, aged 16, of 24 Fifteenth Avenue, Columbus, Ohio. A portion of the clipping is as follows:—

She was returning from a picture show about 9:15 o'clock and after stepping from a southbound car at Fifteenth avenue and High street, walked around the rear end of the car, directly into the path of an automobile being driven north by Frank Lawwell, a Ford agent at Fourth and Chestnut streets The ambulance of the Brown-Ferguson Undertaking Co., moved the girl to the hospital. In addition to the injury to her skull, the girl suffered a broken nose and her face was badly lacerated. She was unconscious when picked up by Lawwell and it was not until about an hour later that her father identified her at the hospital.

Miss Johnson is the daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Crates Johnson at one time residents of St. Joe.

The last number of the high school lecture course was given Monday evening to a dandy crowd in spite of the cold weather. The Mason Jubilee singers always draw and besides they please. Every one was well pleased with the entertainment as it was the best of its kind in St. Joe for a long time. The attraction was merely for entertainment and afforded much laughter for the audience. The course was not well patronized this year, but the attractions were excellent that were furnished by the Dennis Lyceum Bureau and every one was well pleased with each number but the Riley program and that was purchased form outside parties and not the lyceum bureau. A course is a good thing for a town and next year should receive better patronage.

WASHINGTON ADMINISTRATION FEARS WAR WITH GERMANY MUST COME

GOVERNMENT IS ANXIOUS WITH POSSIBILITIES AHEAD.

NO MOVE TO RAISE AN ARMY

Is Anxious to Keep Up Martial Spirit in America—Will Be Up to Germany to Declare War.

Washington—The administration, fearing that ultimately war, or a ''state of war,'' with Germany must come, is anxious to keep alive the martial spirit in America. It wishes to guard against the sapping influences of an undue sense of security. On the other hand, there is no manifest move to raise an army for actual war though there has been some progress made toward naval and economic preparedness.

This epitomizes the government position at the close of one week of broken relations between the United States and Germany. It finds much of the neutral shipping ordinarily plying the Atlantic shiverind in home ports; Germany has slain ship travelers in an apparently indiscriminate sea war and shipping has been destroyed at the rate of about three-quarters of a million tons monthly.

With terrific possibilities ahead, the government is anxious lest peace propaganda—and the absence of war—shall lull the nation into an unjustifiable calm.

It has prepared itself for internal difficulties, and there is talk of an army of half a million with some discussion of various forms of military service.

Thus far, however, these ideas have not crystalized into actual action.

Insofar as an actual declaration of war is concerned, as it was expressed officially at a cabinet meeting, that will be upon Germany's responsibility.

The president himself has determined to follow the literal wording of his recent speech to congress—to ask only for the means of protecting American seamen's and people's lives. He will place upon Germany the burden of any actual declaration of war.

Meantime the work of neutrals to stave off war between the United States and Germany continues; while in another ten days Ambassador Von Bernstorff is expected to be aiding in his home land to keep the peace between the two nations.

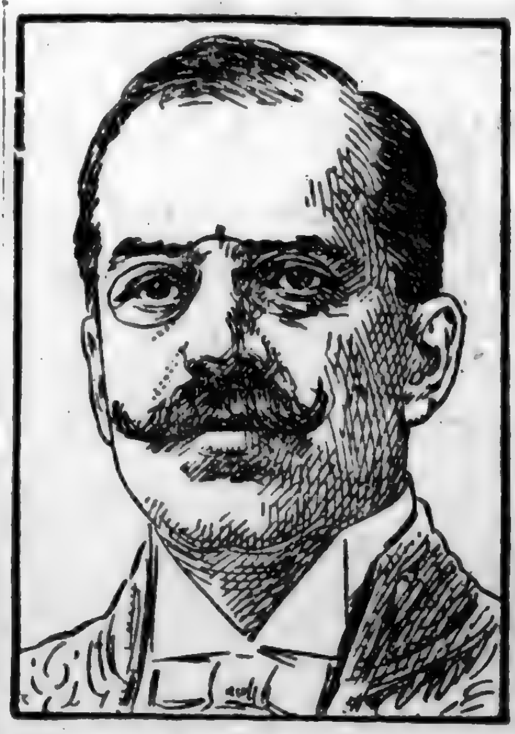
The neutrals themselves appear to fear Germany, hence are acting cautiously, they will make every effort to prevent the conflice that authorities regard as destined to come sooner or later.

Convoys and perhaps issuance of guns for defense of merchant ships are the two most likely ''necessary precautions'' that has been suggested and considered by the president. However, his closest friends say he has not spoken his mind on this point.

In addition, should he be forced to go to congress, he will probably ask that the navy be placed at his disposal for coast patrol work, as well as for convoy tasks. In addition if real war were at hand, he might ask a conscription law, or call for a big vounteer army, to be whipped into shape for actual foreign service.

BULLETIN.

London—An important conference at headquarters has been called by Emperor William presumably to discuss the submarine question, says the Exchange Telegraph's Amsterdam correspondent. Dr. von Bethnann-Hollwek, the imperial chancellor, and high army and navy official will attend, and it is reported, adds the correspondent, that the possibility of negotiations with neutrals for modifying the terms of the recent German memorandum will be discussed.



DR. PAUL RITTER.

Swiss Minister to the United States, Who Has Become the German Representative in the United States since Count von Bernstorff Has Been Handed His Passports.

NATIONS' REPLY TO GERMAN ULTIMATUM

Paris.—The Swiss federal council, in its reply to the German note on the new submarine campaign, enters an energetic protest against the announced blockade and reserves all the rights of Switzerland as a neutral, according to the Havas agency's Berne correspondent. It expresses confidence, however, that the German government will take all necessary measures to assure the protection of Swiss interests.

After referring to the German government's communication upon the augmentation of maritime warfare, the Berne advices state, the council declares that ''the imperial government cannot fail to recognize that the measures announced by this memoir constitute an attack upon the right of peaceful commence which, in conformity to principles of international law, belongs to Switzerland, in its character as a neutral state; in fact, the blockade of nearly all ports susceptible of being utilized by Switzerland presents a serious danger in the matter of our provisionment in food products and in raw materials, as well as with respect to our exportations over the sea.

''Even if by friendly agreement with the French government the utilization of the port of Cette exempted from the blockade, is rendered possible, maritime transport would be restrained to a degree which would cause sensible injury to our national economy.

''The maritime blockade by the government of the German empire follows a series of measures taken during the war by both parties of beliggerents in opposition to the law of nations and international agreement by which our liberty of action in economic matters is already restricted, and against which we have vainly raised our voices.

''In such circumstances this blockade is all the more pressing and more weighty with consequences. The federal council sees itself, therefore, obliged to protest energetically and to make all reservations against the blockade announced by the imperial government and against its realization so far as it violates the rights of neutrals recognized by the general principles of international law, in particular where the effective application of the blockade appears incomplete.

''The federal council gives notice in advance of all legal reservations if it happens that the means put into effect by Germany and her allies are applied to the destruction of Swiss interests or property. The federal council, however, does not doubt that the government of the empire will do all that is necessary to assure in the measure possible the security of Swiss interests and spare the painful consequences which could arise from the blockade for the economic life of the Swiss.''

The same note, adds the correspondent, has been addressed to the government of Austria-Hungary.

Peking.—The note handed to the German minister by the minister of foreign affairs in reply to Germany's declaration of the resumption of unrestricted submarine warfare, has been made public. The text of the note follows: ''The new measures of submarine warfare inaugurated by Germany are imperiling the lives and property of Chinese citizens even more than the measures previously taken, which have already cost China many lives and constitute a violation of international law. The toleration of their application would introduce international arbitrary principles incompatible with legitimate intercourse between neutrals and between neutrals and belligerents.

''China therefore protests energetically to Germany against the measures proclaimed on February 1 and sincerely hopes that the rights of neutral states will be respected and that the said measures will not be carried out. If, contrary to expectation, this protest be ineffective, China will be constrained to its profound regret, to sever diplomatic relations. It is unnecessary to add that China's action is dictated by a desire for further peace and the maintenance of international law.''

A communication explanatory of China's action also was handed to Dr. Paul S. Reinsch, American minister to China. It follows:

''China, like the president of the United States, is reluctant to believe that the German government will actually execute measures which imperil the lives and property of the citizens of neutral states and jeopardize legitimate commerce and which tend, if allowed to be enforced without opposition, to introduce new principles into international law. China, being in accord with the principles set forth in your excellency's note and firmly associating itself with the United States, has taken similar action by protesting energetically to Germany against the new blockade measures. China also proposes to take such other action in the future as will be deemed necessary for the maintenance of the principles of international law.''

MILITARY SCHOOLS TO GIVE OFFICERS

Many Cadets in Private Institutions Available for War.

CIVILIAN AID IS IMPORTANT

Engineering, Signal and Aviation Corps of United States Army Could Be Quickly Recruited in Emergency.

By KENNETH MACDOUGALL.

New York.—In the event of the calling out of militia and volunteer troops, there are many cadets in the various private military institutions in the United States who could speedily be made available for second lieutenancies and some higher ranks in the volunteer forces.

One of the most prominent institutions in the country from a military standpoint is Norwich university, at Norwich, Vt., which has graduated numerous men into the army as second lieutenants. The graduating class is between eighty and one hundred and twenty men every year, and the institution has kept fairly good track of its available sons after they have left college. At a conservative estimate, Norwich could furnish a thousand men who have passed an examination required as entrance to the regular army as second lieutenant of infantry, five hundred second lieutenants of cavalry and about three hundred artillery second lieutenants.

Many of the men have kept well informed in military matters, while others, of course, would need considerable brushing up in modern tactics. Norwich has maintained the same standards of study and execution of military drill that the cadets at West Point are held to, and fully a sixth of its graduating classes have followed an army career.

In training, the graduates are probably superior in knowledge and executive ability to two-thirds of the militia captains and some majors in the National Guard.

They have served under military officers of the highest type for a four-year course, and during that time have had to work hard and faithfully in order to graduate.

7,000 Men Available.

A like condition is true of perhaps twenty-five other private military schools in the United States designated by the war department as "distinguished institutions." These schools could bring to the colors, about 7,000 fully or partially-trained lieutenants. Besides these there are some ten thousand college men who have attended training camps like Plattsburg, and who in a short time could be whipped into good enough shape to take command of volunteer infantry.

The Culver school at Culver, Ind., is perhaps a close second to Norwich university as regards cavalry material. The showing made by Culver boys while stationed on the border in the recent mobilization attracted widespread attention among army men.

The Engineering corps of the regular army could be readily recruited in officers and men from the civil population engaged in similar pursuits as a daily occupation. The supremacy of concrete construction in this country would indicate there would be no trouble in securing enough capable engineers and non-commissioned officers to erect or construct necessary gun emplacements and additional defenses.

The Signal corps picked from civilians engaged in like work would soon be as good as the regular units, in fact probably better, as the class of men in the New York militia units of that branch of service made the regulars on the border recently sit up and eat humble pie.

There are more civilian aviators than there are regular army aviators, and from present indications the former are more experienced.

The European war has shown that it does not take long to instruct military aerial observers and these could be trained in a short time.

Transport Difficulties Small.

As for transport and quartermaster corps there would be little or no difficulty in finding plenty of business men who would be capable of handling these branches of service in fitting manner. The system of supply and transportation might be slow at first, but when one is acquainted with the fact that in New York state alone there are 310,457 automobiles, fully half of which could be utilized as light or heavy transport trucks, and the remainder converted into cars for officers and for courier service, it will be understood that there are no very great obstacles in the way of supply trains.

Railroad transportation on account of the length of our coast line would present some difficulties at first, but without doubt could be remedied with great speed.

The mobilization of the manufacturing industries of the nation has already been worked out by the authorities at Washington.

Of men we have plenty. Materials in the crude state we have sufficient, but rifles, heavy artillery and ammunition enough, let alone uniforms, blankets, equipment, medical supplies, etc., are a different story.

The Red Cross has plenty of nurses to put on the field for the first line hospitals. Ambulance corps such as were formed in France could be quickly put into commission and would undoubtedly do good service.

The militia of the country is probably in better shape from a military standpoint than it ever was in the history of its organization. If enough regular army officers were available to distribute among the various commands, it would be a fairly efficient fighting force. Unfortunately there are many officers in the militia of the country who have no right from military or mental qualifications to wear shoulder straps.

American Legion Intact.

The American Legion, while officially disbanded, is still intact. On the books of the organization, which have been preserved, are the names of some 18,000 men who have seen active service in various parts of the world, either as officers or enlisted men. Catalogued under proper headings are about 33,000 men or boys who are experts at some trade necessary to the army. There are telegraph operators, miners, high explosive men, railroad engineers, civil engineers, ammunition makers, draughtsmen, wagon makers, automobile mechanics and drivers, cowboys, hotel stewards, men in all branches of life suitable for the commissary departments, electricians, etc. This list should be of decided value to the war department.

These are but few of the ways, manners, men and materials which can be called into play if the country finds it necessary.

In conclusion, I would call attention to the Boy Scouts of America, who could help in the event of war in any number of ways, and who, I am sure, would rise to the emergency in the same plucky manner as their little brother scouts have done in every country in Europe.

That the women of America would shoulder their share of the burden, no true American for a minute doubts; they have done it in the past and can do it in the future.

To mobilize all the industries, men, organizations, etc., would of course require more time than it has in the countries of Europe, but it would be done. The American people have a habit of taking a lot for granted, but when an emergency arises they generally are able to meet it.

BILIOUS, HEADACHY, SICK "CASCARETS"

Gently cleanse your liver and sluggish bowels while you sleep.

Get a 10-cent box.

Sick headache, biliousness, dizziness, coated tongue, foul taste and foul breath—always trace them to torpid liver; delayed, fermenting food in the bowels or sour, gassy stomach.

Poisonous matter clogged in the intestines, instead of being cast out of the system is re-absorbed into the blood. When this poison reaches the delicate brain tissue it causes congestion and that dull, throbbing, sickening headache.

Cascarets immediately cleanse the stomach, remove the sour, undigested food and foul gases, take the excess bile from the liver and carry out all the constipated waste matter and poisons in the bowels.

A Cascaret to-night will surely straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist means your head clear, stomach sweet and your liver and bowels regular for months. Adv.

Probably Not.

"The clock is striking twelve," said the impassioned suitor. "Oh, that I might turn back the hands of time for one hour!"

"You might be able to do that, Algernon," said the beauteous maid, "but father will be coming downstairs soon and I'm afraid you couldn't turn him back."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

ACTRESS TELLS SECRET.

A well known actress gives the following recipe for gray hair: To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and ¼ oz. of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and make it soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off. Adv.

The Older the Better.

The elderly millionaire was "fessin' up" to one of his friends at the club. "Would you consider it any harm to deceive her about my age?"

"Perhaps not."

"I'm sixty-two. How would it do to confess to fifty-two?"

"I think your chances with Gladys would be better if you claimed seventy-five."

Loftier Objects.

A passing neighbor stopped at the door of a great alchemist who was toiling amid flame and vapor.

"Still looking for the philosopher's stone and the elixir of life?" asked the neighbor.

"No. I have temporarily suspended that quest to look for things of more immediate importance. I am seeking the unbreakable promise and the unburnable scrap of paper."

Intellectually Murdered.

Randolph Bourne, an editor of the New Republic, in an address recently said American colleges are institutions in which youths are "intellectually murdered," and the efficiency system upon which universities operated has resulted "in a card-index system of education impersonal and materialistic." This indictment is true as to the field, but there are many institutions that are not so—those that consult the spirit more than the intellect, and that construct purpose and aspiration rather than devote themselves to learning and knowledge. The fact is that the end of education will never be reached or mankind be substantially advanced until the spiritual dominates the intellectual in the training of the youth. It is hard for scholars to understand that the intellectual is materialistic, but it is.—Ohio State Journal.

GERARD ARRANGES PASSAGE

American American Ambassador Asks That Suite Be Engaged on Alfonso XIII Which Leaves Spain on February 21st.

Madrid.—A wireless message from the Spanish ambassador at Berlin to American Ambassador Willard here, transmitted at the request of Ambassador Gerard, asked that passage for the ambassador, Mrs. Gerard and the ambassador's suite be engaged on the Alfonso XIII, leaving Barcelona on February 21, or on the Infanta Isabel, steaming on February 25.

Will Ask Appropriation.

Indianapolis, Ind.—In case a call for troops is issued by the United States government, one of the first official acts toward the mobilization of Indiana men would be to ask an extra appropriation for the legislature to care for the work, according to Adjt. Gen. Harry B. Smith. The ways and means committee will be asked for the guard and all extra funds needed for immediate mobilization.

May Make Submarines in Indiana.

Jeffersonville, Ind.—In case of war, the United States government may commandeer shipyards on the Ohio river here and construct submarines. Armored gunboats were made at the shipyards here during the civil war. On account of nearby steel plants and coal, submarines could be constructed cheaper here, it is believed, than on the coast.

Deer Makes Calls in City.

Lean and gaunt, as though it had just completed a long trip, a doe stalked out of the brush on Bailey peninsula, and after a stiff-legged trot up Orcas street, turned into the yard of Mrs. A. E. Esper, at Orcas street and Wilson avenue. It ran about the yard for a few minutes and then trotted into the yard of Virgil Stewart, at Orcas street and Fifty-first avenue.

Before anyone could make an attempt to stop it, the animal ran down toward the brush that skirts the shore of Lake Washington and disappeared. When last seen it was running toward Leschi park.

Residents of the district, some of whom have been frightened at intervals during the past two months by the reports of cougars on Bailey peninsula believe that it was the deer that was sighted on former occasions.—Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

THE DESTROYING ANGEL

By

LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

—19—

"I am all right. I'm resting, dear, and thinking. Don't fret about me. When I feel able, I will come down to you."

"As you will," he assented, unspeakably relieved; and returned to the kitchen.

Sunset interrupted his thoughts—sunset and his wife. Sounds of someone moving quietly round the kitchen, a soft clash of dishes, the rattling of the grate, drew him back to the door.

She showed him a face of calm restraint and implacable resolve.

"Hugh"—her voice had found a new, sweet level of gentleness and strength—"I just wanted to tell you how sorry I am. I've let you go without your lunch."

"Well," he admitted with a short laugh, "I'm famished!"

She paused, regarding him with her whimsical, indulgent smile. "You strange creature!" she said softly. "Are you angry with me—impatient—for this too facile descent from heroics to the commonplace? Be patient with me, dear."

But, alarmed by his expression, her words stumbled and ran out. She stepped back a pace, a little flushed and tremulous.

"Hugh! No, Hugh, no!"

"Don't be afraid of me," he said, turning away. "I don't mean to bother. Only—at times—"

"I know, dear; but it must not be."

"Shall you make a fire again tonight?" she asked, when they had concluded the meal.

"In three places," he said. "We'll not stay another day for want of letting people know we're here. I'll go now. When you are ready—?"

"I shan't be long," she said.

When it was quite dark, Whitaker brought a lantern to the door and called her, and they went forth together.

As he had promised, he had built up three towering pyres, widely apart. When all three were in full roaring flame, their illumination was hot and glowing over all the upland. It seemed impossible that the world should not now become cognizant of their distress.

At some distance to the north of the greatest fire—that nearest the farm-house—they sat as on the previous night, looking out over the black and unresponsive waters, communing together in undertones.

In that hour they learned much of one another; much that had seemed strange and questionable assumed, in the understanding of each, the completion of the normal and right. Whitaker spoke at length and in much detail of his Willful Missing years without seeking to excuse the wrong-minded reasoning which had won him his own consent to live under the mask of death. He told of the motives that had prompted his return, of all that had happened since in which she had had no part—with a single reservation. One thing he kept back; the time for that was not yet.

A listener in his turn, he heard the history of the little girl of the Commercial House breaking her heart against the hardness of life in what at first seemed utterly futile endeavor to live by her own efforts, asking nothing more of the man who had given her his name.

He learned of the coming of Max. his interest in her, the indefatigable pains he had expended coaching her to bring out the latent ability his own genius divined; of the initial performance of "Joan Thursday" before a meager and indifferent audience, her instant triumph and subsequent conquest of the country in half a dozen widely dissimilar roles; finally of her decision to leave the stage when she married, for reasons comprehensible, demanding neither exposition nor defence.

"It doesn't matter any longer," she commented, concluding: "I loved and I hated it. It was deadly and it was glorious. But it no longer matters. It is finished; Sara Law is no more."

"You mean never to go back to the stage?"

"Never."

"And yet—" he mused craftily.

"Never!" She fell blindly into his trap. "I promised myself long ago that if ever I became a wife—"

"But you are no wife," he countered.

"Dear, you are cruel to me!"

"I think it's you who would be cruel to yourself, dear heart."

"I think," she announced, "we'd better go in."

She rose without assistance, moved away toward the house, paused and returned.

"Hugh," she said gently, with a quaver in her voice that wounded his conceit in himself; for he was sure it spelled laughter at his expense and well-merited—"Hugh, you big sulky boy! get up this instant and come back to the house with me. You know I'm timid. Aren't you ashamed of yourself?"

"I suppose so," he grumbled, rising. "I presume it's childish to want the moon—and sulk when you find you can't have it."

"Or a star?"

He made no reply; but his very silence was eloquent. They entered the kitchen.

"Something'll have to be done; if they won't help us, we'll have to help ourselves."

"Hugh!" There was alarm in her tone. He looked up quickly. "Hugh, what are you thinking of?"

"Oh—nothing. But I've got to think of something."

She came nearer, intuitively alarmed and pleading. "Hugh, you wouldn't leave me here alone?"

"Don't be afraid," he said evasively. "I'll be here—as always—when you wake up."

She disappeared; the light of her lamp faded, flickering in the draught of the hall, stencilled the wall with its evanescent caricature of the balustrade, and was no longer visible.

"Hugh!" her voice rang from the upper floor.

He started violently out of deep abstraction, and replied inquiringly.

"You won't forget to lock the door?"

He swore violently beneath his breath; controlled his temper and responded pleasantly: "Certainly not."

Then he shut the outside door with a convincing bang.

"If this be marriage . . . !" He smiled his twisted smile.

Leaving the kitchen light turned low, he went to his own room and, as on the previous night, threw himself upon the bed without undressing; but this time with no thought of sleep. Indeed, he had no expectation of closing his eyes in slumber before the next night, at the earliest; he had no intention other than to attempt to swim to the nearest land.

An hour dragged out its weary length, and the half of another. He rose, with infinite precaution against making any noise.

Slowly, on tiptoes, Whitaker stole toward the door, out into the hall, took a single step on toward the kitchen; and then, piercing suddenly the absolute stillness within the house, a board squealed like an animal beneath his tread.

In an instant he heard the thud and patter of her footsteps above, her loud, quickened breathing as she leaned over the balustrade, looking down, and her cry of dismay: "Hugh! Hugh!"

He halted, saying in an even voice: "Yes, it is I." She had always seen him; there was no use trying to get away without her knowledge now; besides, he was no sneak-thief to fly from a cry. He burned with resentment, impatience and indignation, but he waited stolidly enough while the woman flew down the stairs to his side.

"Hugh," she demanded, white-faced and trembling, "what is the matter? Where are you going?"

He moved his shoulders uneasily, forcing a short laugh. "I daresay you've guessed it. Undoubtedly you have. Else why—" He didn't finish save by a gesture of resignation.

"You mean you were going—going to try to swim to the mainland?"

"I meant to try it," he confessed.

"I should have known!" she declared passionately. "I was asleep, but I knew the instant you stirred."

"It must be done," he muttered. "Please—"

"But it must not be done! Hugh!" Her voice ascended. "I—I can't let you. I won't let you! You . . . It'll be your death—you'll drown. I shall have let you go to your death—"

"Oh, now, really—" he protested.

"But, Hugh, I know it! I feel it here." A hand strayed to rest, fluttering, above her heart. "If I should let you go . . . Oh, my dear one, don't, don't go!"

"Mary," he began hoarsely, "I tell you—"

"You're only going, Hugh, because . . . because I love you so I . . . I am afraid to let you love me. That's true, isn't it? Hugh—it's true?"

He mumbled an almost inaudible avowal of his intention.

"Hugh, you're killing me! If you love me—"

He gave a gesture of despair and capitulation.

"I've done my best, Mary. I meant to do the right thing. I—"

"Hugh, you mean you won't go?" Joy from a surcharged heart rang vibrant in every syllable uttered in that marvelous voice.

But now he dared meet her eyes. "Yes," he said, "I won't go—" nodding, with an apologetic shadow of his twisted smile. "I can't if . . . it distresses you."

"Oh, my dear, my dear!"

Whitaker started, staggered with amaze, and the burden of his wife in his arms. Her own arms clipped him close. Her fragrant, tear-gemmed face brushed his. He knew at last the warmth of her sweet mouth, the dear madness of that first caress.

Then through the magical hush of that time when the world stood still, the thin, clear vibrations of a distant hail:

"Aho-oy!"

In his embrace his wife stiffened and lifted her head to listen like a startled fawn.

"Listen!" He held up his hand.

This time it rang out more near and most unmistakable:

"Ahoy! The house, ahoy!"

With the frenzied leap of a madman, Whitaker flung out into the dim, silvery witchery of the night. He stood staring, while the girl stole to his side and caught his arm. He passed it round her, lifted the other hand, dumbly pointed toward the northern beach. For the moment he could not trust himself to speak.

In the sweep of the anchorage a small, white yacht hovered ghostlike.

On the beach itself a small boat was drawn up. A figure in white waited near it. Rising over the brow of the uplands moved two other figures in white and one in darker clothing, the latter leading the way at a rapid pace. As they drew together, the leader of the landing party checked his pace and called:

"Hello there! Who are you? What's the meaning of your fires—?"

Mechanically Whitaker's lips uttered the beginning of the response: "Shipwrecked—signaling for help—"

"Whitaker!" the voice of the other interrupted with a jubilant shout. "Thank God we've found you!"

It was Ember.

CHAPTER XVII.

Disappearance.

Seldom, perhaps, has a habitation been so unceremoniously vacated as was the solitary farmhouse on that isolated island. Whitaker delayed only long enough to place a bill, borrowed from Ember, on the kitchen table, in payment for what provisions they had consumed, and to extinguish the lamps and shut the door.

Ten minutes later he occupied a chair beneath an awning on the after deck of the yacht, and, with a blessed cigar fuming in the grip of his teeth, stared back to where their rock of refuge was swiftly blending into a small dark blur upon the face of the waters.

"Ember," he demanded querulously, "what the devil is that place?"

"You didn't know?" Ember asked, amused. "It is No Man's Land."

"I'm strong for its sponsors in baptism. And the other—?"

"Martha's Vineyard. That's Gay head—the headland with the lighthouse. Off to the north of it, the Elizabeth islands. If we're lucky, we'll be at anchor off East Twenty-fourth street by nine o'clock tomorrow morning. Any kick coming?"

"Not for me. You might better consult—my wife," said Whitaker with an embarrassed laugh. "Look here: I've told you how things were with us, in brief; but I'm hanged if you've disgorged a single word of explanation as to how you came to let Drummond slip through your fingers, to say nothing of how you managed to find us."

"He didn't slip through my fingers," Ember retorted. "He launched a young earthquake at my devoted head and disappeared before the dust settled. I came to some time later with a gag in my mouth, handcuffs on my wrists, behind my back, and rope round my legs. Midnight the following night, the owner happened along and let me loose.

"It was easy enough to surmise Drummond had some pal or other working with him—I was slungshotted from behind, while Drummond was walking ahead. And two men had worked in the kidnaping of Mrs. Whitaker. So I went sleuthing; traced you as far as Sag Harbor. There I lost you—and there I borrowed this outfit from a friend, an old-time client of mine. We kept cruising, looking up unlikely places. And, at that, we were on the point of throwing up the sponge when I picked up a schooner that reported signal fires on No Man's Land. . . . I think that clears everything up."

"Yes," said Whitaker sleepily.

And so strong was his need of sleep that it was not until ten o'clock the following morning, when the yacht lay at her mooring in the East river, that Ember succeeded in rousing him by main strength and good-will.

His wife had gone ashore an hour ago, after refusing to listen to a suggestion that Whitaker be disturbed. The note Ember handed him was brief, but in Whitaker's sight eminently adequate and compensating.

Dearest Boy: I won't let them wake you, but I must run away. It's early and I must do some shopping before people are about. My house here is closed; Mrs. Secretan is in Maine with the only keys aside from those at Great West Bay; and I'm a positive fright in a coat and skirt borrowed from the stewardess. I don't want even you to see me until I'm decently dressed. I shall put up at the Waldorf; come there tonight, and we will dine together. Every fiber of my being loves you. MARY.

Whitaker took a serene and shining face to the breakfast in the saloon, under the eyes of Ember. Toward noon they parted ashore, each taking a taxicab to his lodgings. The understanding was that they were to dine together—all three, Whitaker promising for his wife upon the morrow.

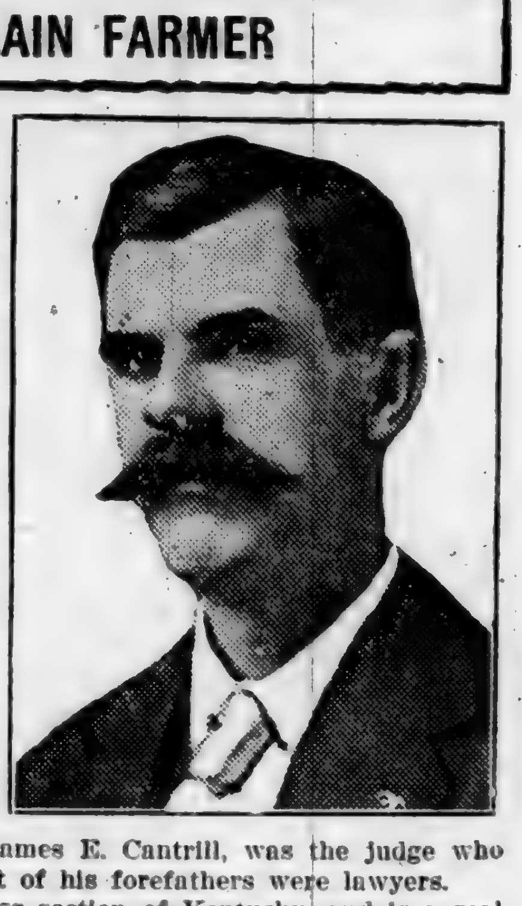
CANTRILL, PLAIN FARMER



"I'm no lawyer, and I'm no orator. I'm just a plain farmer from Kentucky, but here's what I think."

In this wise James Campbell Cantrill, congressman from the Seventh district of Kentucky, began a speech that produced one of the most sensational climaxes that have been staged in congress for a long time.

Congressman Cantrill, long, lean, and lanky, is a Democratic member of the rules committee of the house. But, unlike the other Democratic members of that body, he did not vote for the majority report recommending that the "leak" on the president's note be indefinitely put out of the way.

What he said was sufficient to disrupt the Democratic majority completely and to stampede the entire house into overthrowing the majority report of the committee.

It is true that Mr. Cantrill is no lawyer, but he was brought up in the atmosphere of the law. His father, James E. Cantrill, was the judge who sat in the trial of Caleb Powers. Most of his forefathers were lawyers.

He hails from the richest blue-grass section of Kentucky, and is a real farmer. Ten years ago he was one of the chief organizers of the tobacco growers of his state, and figured prominently in the exploits of the so-called "night riders."

Farmer Cantrill has a mind quick to grasp the essentials of any situation and a logic, however roughly spoken, that is usually invincible.

He is a fighter through and through, and doesn't know the first sensation of fear. He showed that when he defied the leaders of his party and forced them to accept his views.

MAN WITH PERFECT BRAIN

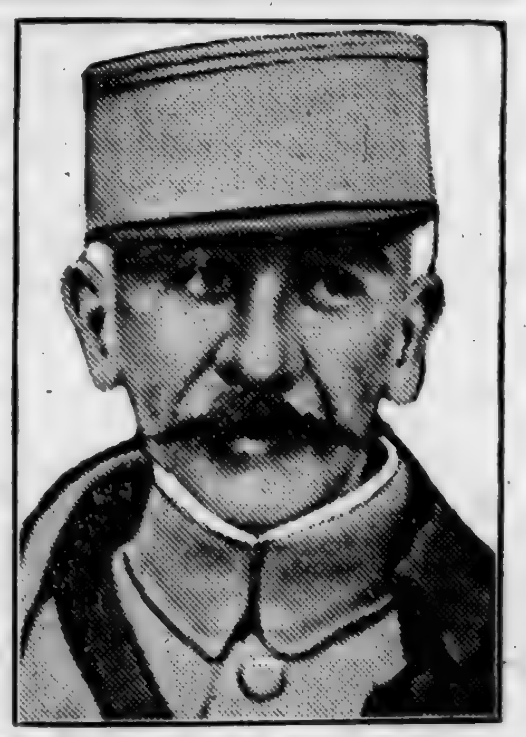
Thomas J. Abernethy, now half through his senior year at Harvard, has learned that he is mentally perfect.

The expert who tested his mentality and gave him 100 per cent was no less an authority than the late Prof. Hugo Munsterberg, who made the test last spring and announced the result only a few days before his death.

It surprised Thomas J. Abernethy, '17, who was adjudged perfect, as much as it surprised anyone. The college records show that he has been only an average student. He says himself, "I have just about broken even on grades."

If Abernethy has not taken advantage of his natural endowments in college, he will start on the more serious phase of life aware of his extraordinary mental equipment, or aware at least that his mentality was labeled "A1" by one of the world's greatest psychologists. Abernethy specialized in romance languages, havin had the idea originally that he might go into business in South America. H now plans to enter the canning business with his father in his home tow West Pembroke, Me.

LYAUTEY, MILITARY GENIUS



The new French minister of war is described by Stephen Lausanne, formerly editor of Le Matin, Paris, as follows: "As for General Lyautey, the new minister of war, in all France the premier could not have found another man so splendidly qualified to handle the big problems of the war office. He is a genius at organization, and I do not think I exaggerate when I say he is perhaps the greatest organizer that the French army has ever known.

"For the last five years, General Lyautey has been governor of Morocco, and in these five years he brought the Moroccans from a state approaching savagery to quasi-civilization. He is a great master of efficiency, and combines all the qualities of a great general with those of a great business man.

"General Lyautey is a native of Lorraine. He had a little home not far from Nancy, and when the Germans made one of their raids upon that city in the early days of the war General Lyautey's home was among the first to be looted and subsequently destroyed. He is between sixty and sixty-five years of age and is a member of the Academy and the one member who has yet to make his presentation speech to his colleagues.

GROWING TURKEYS.

Abundance of Food and Room For Exercise Necessary to Success.

Every precaution should be taken in turkey raising to obtain strong, vigorous stock. Do not imagine that size is the main point of excellence, says a poultry expert. A medium sized gobbler weighing about twenty-five pounds will usually render more satisfactory results than an overheavy specimen. In all fowls remember that size is largely influenced by the female, and the color and distinguishing characteristics by the male. The hens should be well matured, weighing not less than fourteen pounds, intelligent and tame, as distinguished from wild and unduly excitable birds, and of pronounced constitutional vigor.

A safe rule for mating is to have a tom for every four to six hens. Good fertility is reported from matings of a male to every twelve females, but we are inclined to think this is unusual. On farms where the flocks are yarded it is customary to keep two cocks for every eight or ten hens and to alternate the males about twice a week, keeping one penned aloof while the other is with the flock. When turkeys are given unlimited range, which is the most successful method of raising them, they naturally divide into flocks.

It is said that the real secret of success in rearing turkeys is exercise.

When preparing for a successful batch of turkey eggs it is almost impossible to take too many precautions. Only when turkey hens on free range steal their nests can the best results be obtained by a policy of noninterference. Even under such circumstances it is usually well to take some precautionary measures. The nest should be found and, if necessary, protected from the weather by a A coop that has at one side an opening sufficiently large to allow the turkey hen to enter easily. Picture shows a turkey on a stolen nest.

They must have an abundance of food, and to maintain the necessary health to assimilate large quantities of food they must have an abundance of exercise. This idea is entirely logical. Turkeys are large birds, semiwild by nature, possessed of a roving disposition and fully capable of taking care of themselves. To confine them is to impose a feeling of constraint and worriment, over which they never cease to fret. To do well turkeys must have range. Only a few should be attempted in a confined space, and even then they will require painstaking care.

Much of the so called "bad luck" in turkey raising, infertility, soft shelled eggs and impaired vigor, is due to improper feeding. Avoid having the breeding stock too fat. If they have become so during the winter season endeavor to reduce them to medium flesh before the mating season. Oats are one of the best feeds during the breeding months, with an occasional feeding of wheat, corn, barley and ground bone. Grit, oyster shells and charcoal should be kept within easy reach of the birds at all times and a plentiful supply of fresh drinking water.

Continued Selection For Corn.

Corn productiveness may be greatly increased through continued selection. For fourteen seasons this has been studied on a 8,000 acre farm in Ohio with ten acre plots of corn. On these small plots seed selected from department co-operative improvement have been contrasted with the farm yields of the same variety of corn less rigidly selected and grown under identical cultural conditions. During the first seven year period the fields planted with department seed yielded 13.3 bushels per acre more than the farm fields, while for the second seven years the increase averaged 21.8 bushels per acre.

Tips on Horticulture.

Frank B. Cross of the department of horticulture at Oklahoma A. and M. college, Stillwater, offers the following advice to farmers:

Don't buy your fruits and vegetables. Raise 'em.

Don't neglect insects and diseases. They are easily controlled by spraying.

Don't forget to use fertilizers. They increase production wonderfully.

Don't prune too much or too little. Use judgment.

"An apple a day keeps the doctor away."

Bring satisfaction and good cheer to the home and folks by planting flowers and shrubs about the house and lawn.

Plan to live, not to die.

DAIRY AND CREAMERY

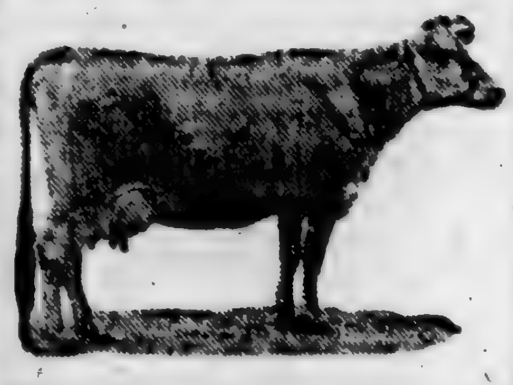
PURE BRED COW BEST.

Under Similar Conditions She Is More Profitable Than the Grade.

I contend that the pure bred cow on the average will do anything that the grade cow on the average will do—and something more, writes R. E. Hutchinson in the Rural New Yorker.

The average production of the dairy cows of the United States is approximately 175 pounds of fat per annum. On the contrary, the average production of 11,169 pure bred cows tested to Jan. 1, 1916, is 430 pounds fat. Which pulled down the average—the grade cow or the pure bred? The answer is obvious.

The simple fact that it is possible to quote accurate figures in giving the production of pure bred cows is distinctly a recommendation. The above figures are taken from the list of tested cows issued by the Jersey, Guernsey, Ayrshire and Holstein associations.



Sophie's Adora, the cow here pictured, went on test at one day over four years of age, and in the following 365 days produced 15,862.2 pounds of milk containing 838.0 pounds of butter fat, which amounts to 1,044.7 pounds of butter, figured on the 85 per cent basis. This record makes her world's champion four-year-old Jersey. Sophie's Adora is owned and was bred at Lowell, Mass.

Certainly conditions of feed and care affect production. It is equally certain that the farmer and not the cow is responsible for these conditions, and it is my contention that under similar conditions the pure bred cow will produce more profitably and reproduce more uniform quality in her calves than will the grade.

Probably all of us from personal observation agree that the pure bred sire is desirable at the head of the herd. Have we analyzed the reasons why? He is simply reproducing the qualities of his pure bred forbears in building up the producing ability of the herd. Would a grade bull do the same? Would he impart the same uniformity to his get? Not in one case out of fifty.

No dairyman ever got rich in a day. The dairy business demands patience. No dairyman can afford to neglect the building up of his future herd. It is his responsibility to breed better cows with every generation. The grade cow is a handicap in breeding. So many conflicting lines back of her prevent prepotency, and she fails to breed "true to type." Her daughters are just as likely to be inferior as to be superior to her. On the other hand, pure bred stock carefully selected and judiciously bred afford a foundation for improving quality with every generation.

Care of Dairy Bulls.

Judicious management is quite as important as careful feeding in keeping bulls in satisfactory breeding condition. Exercise is a prime essential. If young bulls are placed in paddocks they will usually take sufficient exercise, but this is seldom true of an old bull. A better way to insure sufficient exercise is to lead him a mile or two or even farther every day. This exercise will do more to keep him healthful, vigorous, quick and sure than any other method that can be employed unless he is accustomed to using a treadmill. In this event an hour's exercise on the mill daily will keep him in good form. Any bull that has been carefully fed, not permitted to become overfat, but yet in thrifty, vigorous condition, should breed until he is fifteen or sixteen years old if he has always received sufficient exercise with regularity.—Kimball's Dairy Farmer.

Humoring Cows.

The money making dairyman learns to know cows—their likes and dislikes, their needs and what is hurtful to them. A cow that gives a large yield is always notional and has many petty whims about the way she wants her feed arranged and the manner in which she wants her milker to treat her. An increase in yield is often secured by humoring these whims.

DAIRY NOTES.

Successful dairy expansion involves the intelligent systematic grading or building up of a herd, both by selection and breeding.

There are few cows which will not stand more quietly during the milking process if they have nothing else to attract their attention.

Every cow in the herd should be halter broken. Begin while they are calves.

A chill outside or inside is often fatal for a fresh cow.

Look out for the March winds. Keep the cows in out of them.

PLANTING FRUIT TREES.

Care Should Be Taken Not to Set the Roots Too Deep In Soil.

The beginner in tree planting usually sets his trees too deep rather than too shallow in the relatively heavy soils of Missouri, J. C. Whitten of the department of horticulture of the University of Missouri says.

"Young trees should be selected for planting, and they should be set at the same depth at which they stood in the nursery," Mr. Whitten said. "Trees turn to the northeast and grow crooked because of the warm south and southwest winds during the growing season. The tree should be set with the heavier side to the southwest to avoid this.

"The roots should be trimmed so as not to be cramped and any ragged wounds taken off. Peach trees should be pruned most severely after planting of any of the orchard fruits. Trim all branches off, leaving a single whip; then shorten the whip to a height of about two and one-half feet. Cherry trees should be less severely trimmed. If well branched the center of the tree should be cut out. The Japanese plum tree should be shaped like the peach. Other plum, apple and pear trees, having only a single whip, should be treated likewise. Older trees may be treated like the cherry, with the exception that all branches may be shortened to one-half or one-third of their natural length."

Laugh When People Step On Your Feet

Try this yourself then pass it along to others. It works!

Ouch ! ? ! ? ! ! This kind of rough talk will be heard less here in town if people troubled with corns will follow the simple advice of this Cincinnati authority, who claims that a few drops of a drug called freezone when applied to a tender, aching corn stops soreness at once, and soon the corn dries up and lifts right out without pain.

He says freezone is an ether compound which dries immediately and never inflames or even irritates the surrounding tissue or skin. A quarter of an ounce of freezone will cost very little at any drug store, but is sufficient to remove every hard or soft corn or callus from one's feet. Millions of American women will welcome this announcement since the inauguration of the high heels.

GRANDMA USED SAGE TEA TO DARKEN HAIR

She mixed Sulphur with it to Restore Color, Gloss, Youthfulness.

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea with sulphur added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant. Just a few applications will prove a revelation if your hair is fading, streaked or gray. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get a 50-cent bottle of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound at any drug store all ready for use. This is the old time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients.

While wispy, gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant.

This preparation is a delightful toilet requisite and is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

Glass of Hot Water Before Breakfast a Splendid Habit

Open sluices of the system each morning and wash away the poisonous, stagnant matter.

Those of us who are accustomed to feel dull and heavy when we arise; splitting headache, stuffy from a cold, foul tongue, nasty breath, acid stomach, lame back, can, instead, both look and feel as fresh as a daisy always by washing the poisons and toxins from the body with phosphated hot water each morning.

We should drink, before breakfast, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to flush from the stomach, liver, kidneys and ten yards of bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour bile and poisonous toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary tract before putting more food into the stomach.

The action of limestone phosphate and hot water on an empty stomach is wonderfully invigorating. It cleans out all the sour fermentations, gases, waste and acidity and gives one a splendid appetite for breakfast and it is said to be but a little while until the roses begin to appear in the cheeks. A quarter pound of limestone phosphate will cost very little at the drug store, but is sufficient to make anyone who is bothered with biliousness, constipation, stomach trouble or rheumatism a real enthusiast on the subject of internal sanitation. Try it and you are assured that you will look better and feel better in every way shortly.

MAINTAIN FERTILITY OF SOIL

Specialists at Ohio Experiment Station Recommend Use of Phosphates to Reenforce Manure.

Since phosphorus is carried off the farm in relatively large amounts in grain crops, in the bones of animals, and in milk, soil specialists at the Ohio experiment station recommend the use of acid phosphate or raw phosphate rock to re-enforce barnyard manure, if fertility of the soil is to be maintained. Acid phosphate is more generally recommended, because under average conditions it is more effective and more economical than the raw rock.

Acid phosphate has returned more than three times its cost in crop yields in many tests at the experiment station, even when used in connection with manure. It is ordinarily used at the rate of 40 pounds per ton of manure. The phosphate may be spread over the manure in the shed or yard or mixed with it at the time of hauling.

It may also be sprinkled over the stable floor behind the animals, about one pound being used daily per 1,000 pounds live weight of the animal. In the latter case it also acts as an absorbent of the liquid manure.

POOR METHODS ARE COSTLY

Farmers and Jobbers Could Make $2,000,000 More a Year If Modern Plans Were Adopted.

Kansas farmers and jobbers are paying a high price for carelessness and poor methods in handling and marketing eggs, according to F. E. Fox, assistant in poultry husbandry in the Kansas State Agricultural college.

"The egg business in Kansas amounts to nearly $30,000,000 annually. On this $2,000,000 more could be made if farmers would realize the importance of proper methods in handling eggs and poultry," commented Mr. Fox.

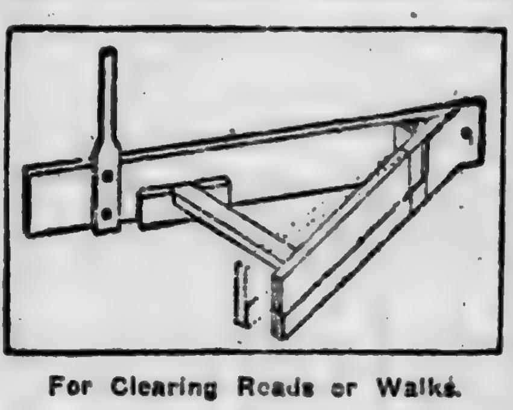
"This enormous loss is due to improper nesting and housing, improper feeding, improper care and handling of eggs on the farm, carelessness in hauling and shipping, and carelessness on the part of the merchant in marketing.

"Loss to the producer due to these causes is principally in the quality of the product, for which he receives a lower price. Loss to the consumer is in receiving eggs of poor quality, for which he pays more than they are worth."

CLEARING WALKS AND ROADS

Adjustable Scraper Is Useful for Many Kinds of Work on Farm During Winter Season.

My adjustable "V" scraper or crowder proves useful for many kinds of work, and especially in winter for clearing walks or roads of snow, says a writer in Missouri Valley Farmer. The sketch, I think, explains its construction fully. It is well to cover the prow with a piece of sheetiron. The adjustable, or hinged side may be made like the other, in one solid, hingeless piece if you wish.



For Clearing Roads or Walks.

ALFALFA LIKES DRY CLIMATE

Plant Is Native of Semi-Arid Regions of Central Asia—Thrives Under Irrigation.

Alfalfa is a plant which loves dry atmospheric conditions and does not do well in humid climates, says a report from the Pullman (Wash.) experiment station. It is a native of semi-arid regions in Central Asia, and where it makes its greatest success under irrigation the air is always dry to an excessive degree.

It is true that it is being grown in some of the eastern states, but it does not begin to compare with that grown under irrigation or under dry-farming conditions.

WELL-ROTTED MANURE BEST

Better for Gardens and Cheaper Than Commercial Fertilizers in These War Times.

Well-rotted manure is better than fresh manure for gardens. It is also cheaper than commercial fertilizers in these war times, when the supplies of some fertilizers are cut off by the blockade and the materials used in making others are very high in price because they are used in making explosives.

CONCRETE TILE ARE DURABLE

Causes of Failure May Be Traced to Improper Mixture—Hardening Is of Importance.

Concrete tile, if properly made, are very durable. Causes of failure may be traced to the use of too lean or too dry a mixture, improper hardening and placing in the ground too soon after making.

The tile need at least three or four weeks' curing and hardening before it is safe to lay them.

HEAVY MEAT EATERS HAVE SLOW KIDNEYS

Eat less meat if you feel Backachy or have bladder trouble—Take glass of Salts.

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which excites the kidneys, they become overworked from the strain, get sluggish and fail to filter the waste and poisons from the blood, then we get sick. Nearly all rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, dizziness, sleeplessness and urinary disorders come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, stop eating meat and get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate the kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer causes irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active and the blood pure, thereby avoiding serious kidney complications.

DRY BILL UP TO THE GOVERNOR

Amendments to Measure Concurred in by House.

NOT ONE DISSENTING VOTE

Measure Now Goes to Governor for His Signature and Will Go Into Effect on April 2, 1918—Woman's Suffrage Bill Ready.

Indianapolis.—The house of representatives by concurring in the senate amendments to the prohibition bill made prohibition an assured fact in Indiana. There was not a dissenting voice when the vote was taken in the house on these concurring amendments. The bill will be made ready for the governor's signature at once and the governor has let it be known that he will sign it. This bill will put state-wide prohibition in effect in Indiana on April 2, 1918. It marks the end of a ten years' fight by the anti-liquor forces of Indiana. About 3,500 saloons, 25 breweries and 5 distilleries in Indiana will be put out of business by the taking effect of this act.

Woman's suffrage advanced another step when the house passed the bill to engrossment and it is now ready for final passage. An amendment was adopted which makes the bill take effect October 1, 1917. This will prevent the women from voting at the city primaries this spring and at the election of delegates to the constitutional convention next September. However, they will be permitted to vote at the city elections next fall if the bill finally becomes a law. An attempt to limit woman's suffrage to white women failed.

Eighteen bills were considered last night by judiciary A committee of the house, eleven of which were killed by a unanimous vote for indefinite postponement. Of the measures recommended by the committee for passage are a bill prescribing procedure for impeachment of public officials—an administration measure—and Representative Behmer's bill abolishing the public service commission and creating two separate commissions. This measure provides for the appointing of six commissioners, three of each body. One commission would have charge of the control of railroads and interurban companies, while the other would regulate all other public utilities of the state. The impeachment bill is an administration measure and will emerge from the committee with numerous amendments tacked to it. Representative Jinnett's bill, which would take municipally owned utilities from the control of the public service commission, will be recommended for indefinite postponement. Four bills proposing amendments to the workmen's compension act were killed in committee. Representative Cravens' measure providing for an increase in the inheritance tax, was also killed by the committee.

A divided report on the bill giving injured workmen compensation after the expiration of seven days instead of fourteen days will be filed by the senate committee on judiciary A. The same committee will also file a divided report on another proposed amendment to the workmen's compensation law which would give an injured workman 65 per cent of his salary during the term of disability, instead of 55 per cent, the present law.

Amendments to the present law governing the state board of dental examiners and regarding the practice of dentistry in Indiana are contained in a bill introduced in the house by Representative Davis of Portland. The bill proposes that all five members of the board of examiners shall be appointed by the governor, that graduates of recognized dental colleges shall be admitted to practice without supplemental examination before the board, and that the diploma of any reputable school of dentistry, together with a license of five years' duration from any other state shall qualify a dentist for practice in Indiana. The last amendment provides, however, that the board may refuse to admit practitioners from other states without examination if the dental examiners of the state in question refuse to establish reciprocal relations with Indiana and will not recognize practitioners from this state on the basis adopted here.

The bill introduced in the senate early in the session, limiting the hours of woman workers to eight hours a day and 48 hours a week, was aired at a hearing before the committee on labor. Senator Hudgins of Martinsville, chairman, presided. The health of the women who are required to work long hours was used as an argument in favor of the measure.

Telegrams appealing to the Republican and Democratic county and district chairman to use their influence in support of the partial suffrage bill were sent by members of the legislative Council of Indiana Women.

Committee reports recommending the passage of the state highway commission bills by the house and the senate have been made. While the bills—there is one in each branch—are not exactly what the promoters had favored, it is understood that no determined fight will be made against them. The bills now provide that all contracts for building and maintaining main highways under the bill shall be let by the state highway commissioner, subject to the approval by the board of county commissioners of the counties in which the highways are situated. Under the original bill the county commissioners would have had nothing to say about the letting of contracts. Indications are that the bill will be passed. It provides for the creation of a state highway commission of four members, two from each political party, to be appointed by the governor, and to draw $600 salary annually apiece. This commission would appoint a state highway engineer at $6,000 a year and such other assistants as would be required.

The commission would have jurisdiction over the selection of highways to be improved, and would be limited to 2,000 miles before the end of 1919.

The senate, following the action of the house last Saturday, has adopted a resolution, introduced by Senators Negley and Grant, both Republicans, supporting President Wilson in the present crisis, and pledging the full resources of the state of Indiana to the government. The senate was not in session Saturday when the house adopted its resolution.

Indications are that the bill to repeal the three-mile road law will be defeated. This was one of the measures recommended by Governor Goodrich in his message to the legislature.

There was a public hearing by the senate committee on insurance on the Goodrich administration bill to create a new state department of banking and insurance, with a commissioner to be appointed by the governor. This department would take over all insurance and banking supervision that is now in the office of the auditor of state.

The Moore bill limiting working hours of women to eight hours per day, 48 hours per week, was killed by the house committee on rights and privileges when the legislature reconvened. Representative Day of Lake county introduced a measure which is practically concurrent with the Moore eight-hour bill for women, and it was intimated by members of the committee that the Day measure would be accorded more welcome than was the Moore measure.

Added strength to the movement for woman suffrage was given by the announcement that the Woman's Franchise league of Indiana had decided to join the legislative council of Indiana women, which has been conducting the fight for the partial suffrage bill now before the legislature. The Woman's Franchise league has all along favored full suffrage and opposed partial suffrage, but it has decided to join in the effort to pass the partial suffrage bill.

The following bills have been introduced in the senate:

Providing that companies engaged in the business of liability insurance or workman's compensation insurance shall, in addition to all other reserves required by law, establish a reserve for outstanding losses under insurance against loss from accidents or injuries suffered.

Providing that the minimum yearly salary to be paid county recorders shall be $1,000.

Providing that the terms of all county auditors shall begin January 1 next, following the end of the term of office of the present incumbent, and providing that the term of office of any incumbent shall be extended until January 1 following the expiration of the term for which he was elected.

Making various requirement designated to prevent mine accidents and establishing examining boards in mining counties to pass on qualifications of miners.

Providing that all moneys collected by any state officer, boards or commission from fees and licenses, shall within thirty days he paid by such officer, board or commission into the state treasury, and all expenditures authorized by the law to be made from such money shall be paid out of such funds only on the approval of the governor.

Providing for the appointment by the governor of a building code commission of five members to make recommendations to the next general assembly concerning buildings as they relate to fire hazards.

Providing that a section of the workman's compensation act, providing every employer and employee shall be presumed to have accepted the provisions of the act and be bound by it unless he shall have given notice prior to an accident or death to the contrary, shall be amended to exempt railroad employees engaged in train service.

SYRUP OF FIGS FOR A CHILD'S BOWELS

It is cruel to force nauseating, harsh physic into a sick child.

Look back at your childhood days. Remember the "dose" mother insisted on—castor oil, calomel, cathartics. How you hated them, how you fought against taking them.

With our children it's different. Mothers who cling to the old form of physic simply don't realize what they do. The children's revolt is well-founded. Their tender little "insides" are injured by them.

If your child's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing, give only delicious "California Syrup of Figs." Its action is positive, but gentle. Millions of mothers keep this harmless "fruit laxative" handy; they know children love to take it; that it never fails to clean the liver and bowels and sweeten the stomach, and that a teaspoonful given today saves a sick child tomorrow.

Ask at the store for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on each bottle. Adv.

Meat Eaters' Backache

Meat lovers are apt to have backaches and rheumatic attacks. Unless you do heavy work and get lots of fresh air, don't eat too much meat. It's rich in nitrogen and helps to form uric acid—a solid poison that irritates the nerves, damages the kidneys and often causes dropsy, gravel and urinary disorders. Doan's Kidney Pills help weak kidneys to throw off uric acid. Thousands recommend them.

It was hard for me to do my work, because of that heavy aching in my back that changed to a sharp pain when I lifted. My kidneys acted too often and the kidney secretions passed several times at night. Finally, I used Doan's Kidney Pills and they brought me such great relief, that I gladly recommend them."

WHAT A JEWELRY FIRM DID

They Invested Some of Their Spare Money in Canadian Lands.

S. Joseph & Sons, of Des Moines Iowa, are looked upon as being shrewd, careful business men. Having some spare money on hand, and looking for a suitable investment, they decided to purchase Canadian lands, and farm it.

With the assistance of the Canadian Government Agent, at Des Moines, Iowa, they made selection near Champion, Alberta. They put 240 acres of land in wheat, and in writing to Mr. Hewitt, the Canadian Government Agent at Des Moines, one of the members of the firm says:

"I have much pleasure in advising you that on our farm five miles east of Champion, in the Province of Alberta, Canada, this year (1916 we harvested and threshed 10,600 bushels of wheat from 240 acres, this being an average of 44 bushels and 10 pounds to the acre. A considerable portion of the wheat was No. 1 Northern, worth at Champion approximately $1.85 per bushel, making a total return of $19,610, or an average of $81.70 per acre gross yields. Needless to say, we are extremely well pleased with our lands."

It might not be uninteresting to read the report of C. A. Wright of Milo, Iowa, who bought 160 acres at Champion, Alberta, for $3,300 in December, 1915. He stubbled in the whole lot of it, and threshed 4,487 bushels Grade No. 2 Northern.

Mr. Wright, being a thorough business man, gives the cost of work, and the amount realized. These figures show that after paying for his land and cost of operation he had $2,472.67 left.

Educator's Opinion.

I believe that organized emotion can never take the place of brains; that Yale's first duty in preparing American citizens, whether for peace or war, is to adhere to rigid standards of discipline and scholarship and well-developed sense of proportionate values.

If our students have these things as a basis, the more they prepare themselves for the possible requirements of military service the better. Without them the spirit of preparedness may become a danger; with them it is a safeguard and a blessing.—President Hadley of Yale University.

LOCAL OPTION.

Mr. J. P. Newell of Portland, Ore., has illustrated the local option policy by a comparison with the levee system of the Mississippi. He says:

"When the country was first settled the planters looked upon the floods as a necessary evil. Then one here and there began to build levees around his plantation. This proved highly profitable and the practice spread. Piece by piece was reclaimed and the lowlands made habitable. But as the number of levees increased it was noticed that the difficulty of maintaining them increased also. The floods, restricted in area, grew in height. The expense of protection became so great that many could not afford it, and became discouraged. It was found necessary to abandon the local systems and join in large districts comprising all the territory lying naturally together. By this plan a few large levees kept up by all the people of the district are sufficient to afford protection even from extraordinary floods and the difficulty and expense of maintenance are greatly reduced.

"The local option system has worked well for a time, but it has proved insufficient. As the reclaimed district increases in extent, the pressure against the dikes becomes more severe. The liquor power, as its territory is reduced in area, becomes more determined in its efforts to regain the lost ground, for its leaders realize that their dominion everywhere is threatened by successful revolt anywhere. Our safety lies in going forward. If we stop we shall lose all we have gained."

AMERICA'S FIRST DUTY.

The greatest need in America today is the formation of a new national mind, the construction of a new national conscience and a reformation that will bring about a new nation—a nation with a firmer purpose, a clearer vision and a complete understanding of the words patriotism and Americanism.

To bring this condition about, the first problem to be solved is the liquor problem, and the liquor problem's only solution is wiping it entirely and unequivocally off the map. To accomplish the coming of the "New America," every saloon beneath the stars and stripes must be closed.

The great political parties have failed to respond to this call, for they do not want the responsibility, and the time has come for the American people to disregard political parties and rise up in a great army and with all their strength solve the question themselves.

America's danger is not from without; it is from within. Whatever crisis the United States is facing or will face is coming, or will come, from internal causes. It is the American people who have their own problem to settle, their own future to decide. And the first step in this settlement and decision is the elimination of the saloon.—Ex-Governor Patterson of Tennessee.

ALCOHOL AND MEDICINE.

A smashing of ancient idols has occurred in our ideas of the value of alcohol as a medicine. Seventy-five, yes, 50 years ago it was one of the most widely-used remedies, not only in household but also in professional medicine. We gave it to reduce fever and to brace up depression, to improve the appetite and to lessen overeating in sedentary occupations, to stimulate the heart and to lower arterial tension, to break up a cold and to overcome shock. It was believed to ward off infection, to make blood, and to support the strength in septic fevers.

Now we know that it is not a stimulant or tonic, but a depressant; that though in small doses it increases the flow of gastric juice at the beginning of a meal, it checks the process of actual digestion of the food later, so that one influence just balances the other, and in small doses its net effect upon appetite and digestion is just precisely nothing at all, while in large doses it is ruinous.

POLITICIANS FORSAKE LIQUOR.

Not many years ago it was a frequent comment, rarely contradicted, that the man who championed the prohibition cause was committing political suicide. Today, so great has been the change in the sentiment of voting public that a man in public life dares not admit an alliance with the brewery combine or the distillery trust, realizing full well that if he were to do so he would antagonize the decent element in his constituency and arouse suspicion even among those who have no strong moral convictions on the prohibition question.—The Union Signal.

DEFICIT IN PEORIA.

The whisky manufacturing town of Peoria, Ill., is reported as showing a deficit in the treasury, a heavy tax rate, a large police court docket, many arrests, big business at the city prison, and an actual decrease in bank clearings. Quite a contrast with dry Rockford, in the same state.

CAUSE FOR WONDERMENT.

We were just wondering how an intelligent citizen could vote to continue the liquor traffic and then look a little child in the face.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER

ROLLING OFF A LOG.

"Whatever are you doing?" asked Peter Gnome.

"Can't you see?" said Billie Brownie.

"I can see, but I don't understand," said Peter Gnome.

Now Billie Brownie was sitting upon a log. Every few moments he would lie down and then roll off to the ground. After he had stayed on the ground for a few seconds, back he would get on the log, and then do the very same thing over again.

This he kept on doing time and time again, until Peter Gnome thought he must have grown a little queer.

"Are you feeling quite well?" asked Peter Gnome in a kind voice.

"Quite," said Billie Brownie a bit doubtfully.

"Just what I thought," said Peter Gnome to himself.

"What did you think?" asked Billie Brownie. "And what are you thinking now? You don't for a moment suppose I am really ill, do you?"

"No," said Peter Gnome, "I don't think you are really ill, but something must be the matter with you. Maybe you are worried or unhappy about something and you are doing this queer trick of rolling off the log every few moments to make you forget about everything, and just get a few bruises to think about instead."

"I certainly am getting a few bruises," Billie Brownie admitted sadly.

"Then why are you keeping on rolling off the log every time you get back on it? If you can't help rolling off it, why don't you get a good seat where you won't fall?"

"You don't understand," said Billie Brownie.

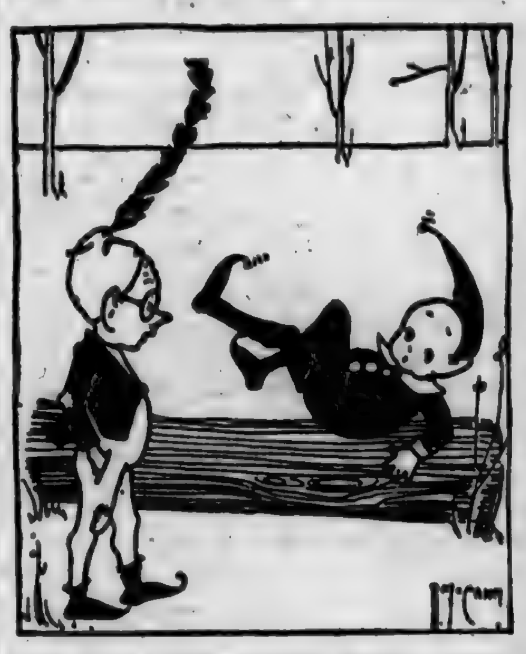
"Then won't you explain to me just what you are doing and why you are doing it?" asked Peter Gnome. "I'm sure I'm very much puzzled."

"Yes, I will tell you," said Billie Brownie. He stopped rolling off the log and sat with his legs on either side. He was quite red in the face for he was really tired out.

"It's this way," he began. "You see that for years and years and years when People have spoken of anything as being easy they have always said, 'Why it's as easy as rolling off a log.'"

"I'm beginning to understand," said Peter Gnome.

"And so," continued Billie Brownie, as he panted for breath, as it was hard to talk after such a time as he had been having. "I thought I would see if it were true. I just wanted to see how easy it was to roll off a log. So I have been rolling off this one the whole morning, and all I have found out is that it has bruised me and that I have bumped and bumped on the hard earth until I am all tired out."



"Are You Feeling Quite Well?" Asked Peter Gnome.

"Dear me," said Peter Gnome. "So you wanted to find out the truth of the old adage and in so doing you've made yourself quite miserable."

"I have indeed made myself quite miserable," said Billie Brownie, "but I'm sure I don't know what you mean by an old adage."

"An adage," said Peter Gnome, who looked very knowing, "is a wise old saying."

"Well, I don't think this is a very wise old saying. And if I ever hear anyone again say, 'It's just as easy as rolling off a log,' I will say, 'It's just as easy as to get a lot of bruises and get stiff and sore.'"

"Poor Billie Brownie," said Peter Gnome.

"Yes, I'm to be pitied," said Billie Brownie. "There is no wisdom in that saying, I know."

"Indeed you do know," said Peter Gnome. "And now I think you'd better forget all about it and come with me to Witty Witch's Cave. She will tell us funny stories and you'll soon forget all about your bruises."

So Billie Brownie walked along by Peter Gnome until they reached Witty Witch's Cave.

"It's all wrong," shrieked Billie Brownie.

"What's all wrong?" asked Witty Witch.

"To say that it's easy to roll off a log. It may be easy to roll off—but it's very painful, I can tell you."

And then Peter Gnome explained what Billie Brownie meant. Witty Witch got out some of her magic moss bandages and with woodland liniment she tied up all of Billie's bruises. Then she told some of her wondrous stories until Billie quite forgot about his morning of rolling off the log and bumping on the hard earth!

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of Sunday School Course of Moody Bible Institute.)
(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR FEBRUARY 18

JESUS HEALS NOBLEMAN'S SON.

LESSON TEXT—John 4:43-54.
GOLDEN TEXT—As thou hast believed, so be it done unto thee.—Matt. 8:13.

This event occurred a few days after that of last Sunday's lesson. It was Jesus' second miracle in Cana. John the Baptist is still preaching, and Jesus is closing the first year of his ministry and beginning his work in Galilee. Teachers should bring a vivid picture of Galilee to their classes, as that was one of the important fields to which our Master devoted much of his time. (For description see some good Bible dictionary.) The people of that land were more worldly, less bound by conventionalities, and more accessible to the teachings which Jesus brought than those of Judea. Josephus says they were "fond of innovations, and disposed to changes."

I. Supplication (Testing) vv. 43-49. Jesus left the revival at Samaria (vv. 39-44) and returned to Galilee. His own people of Nazareth refused to accept him "for a prophet hath no honor in his own country." It was in Galilee that he had his great victories. Here he was welcome (v. 45) because they had known the things that he did at Jerusalem, the report of, which was brought back by those who had visited the feast (John 2:14-17). In Cana (Ch. 2:11) one came to him who was a king's officer, one who was used to command, and whose great personal need overcame any prejudice (Matt. 9:18; Luke 7:2). God uses afflictions ofttimes to drive us to him, and the most effective way to induce men to come to Jesus is to bring them to recognize their need which he alone can supply. The lad was "at the point of death," hence the father's journey of twenty miles from Capernaum to Cana, seeking help. We have here the weakness of faith indicated in verse forty-eight, in that the man would not believe except he should see signs and wonders. We have also the earnestness of the man in verse 49, "Sir, come down ere my child die." Man's extremity is ever God's opportunity. Not only extreme cases of sickness can be brought to him, but extreme cases of sin as well (I Tim. 1:15; Heb. 7:25). He can heal not only those who are "at the point of death" but those who are already dead (Eph. 2:1). The child was dying, the father had not strength to wait to see wonders, but he could and did trust Jesus to heal his son.

II. Surrender (Trusting) vv. 50-51. When the soldier took Jesus at his word, he surrendered his previous conception, and accepted the word of God; literally acting upon his belief. He went his way because he believed. He did not ask Jesus again to go to Capernaum. We must not confuse this kind of faith, however, with his having accepted Jesus as Savior. He accepted Jesus only as healer. We have men today who will accept Jesus Christ in the perfection of his character and the purity of his teachings but, who will not accept him to be their personal Savior. Such men want to receive the benefits of Christianity, failing to recognize its spiritual power and authority.

III. Satisfaction (Triumph) (vv. 52-54). The father's faith rose to the need for "he believed the word that Jesus spake." That word did not seem at all probable, but it was enough. The word of Jesus who is, himself, the truth, is a sure and more reasonable ground of faith than any amount of speculation. This father's walk from Cana to Capernaum was a walk of faith. He had nothing but a bare promise to support him, yet on his return he found his son living (v. 52). On this word of Jesus he, himself, believed, and his whole house. It seems improbable that this could be otherwise if he were an honest man.

IV. Suggestions (1) The living, personal presence of Christ is not needful. It was a wise provision of God's economy that Christ should have returned to heaven.

(2) Acts are the true indications of our faith. God's written revelation and the revelation of his son, the Living Word, and the witness of the experience of God's saints are sufficient facts upon which to base faith.

(3) Faith is progressive. Notice the growth from verses 48 to 50 and 53. At first the man believed in Jesus' power; then he beleived in Jesus' word, and believed in Jesus, himself; then he reaches the highest point in that he does not believe alone, for his whole house believed with him.

(4) Faith is the source of all Christian gifts and graces. We have an advantage over these Galileans of nearly nineteen centuries of what Christ has wrought among the peoples of the earth among those who have believed on him. He has been tried and proved, and the gifts of God's grace, eternal life, the gifts of the Spirit are all conditioned upon our faith in him and in the Lord Jesus.

Our salvation from sin, our effectiveness as disciples and followers depend upon our faith in Jesus Christ as our Savior from sin, and as our Lord and Master.

Backache

In spite of the best care one takes of oneself, any part of the human machine is liable to become out of order. The most important organs are the stomach, heart and kidneys.

The kidneys are the scavengers and they work day and night in separating the poisons from the blood. Their signals of distress are easily recognized and include such symptoms as backache, depressions, drowsiness, irritability, headaches, dizziness, rheumatic twinges, dropsy, gout.

"The very best way to restore the kidneys to their normal state of health," says Dr. Pierce, of Buffalo, N.Y., "is to drink plenty of pure water and obtain from your favorite pharmacy a small amount of Anuric, which is dispensed by almost every druggist." Anuric is inexpensive and should be taken before meals. You will find Anuric more potent than lithia, dissolves uric acid as water does sugar.

YES! LIFT A CORN OFF WITHOUT PAIN!

Cincinnati man tells how to dry up a corn or callus so it lifts off with fingers.

You corn-pestered men and women need suffer no longer. Wear the shoes that nearly killed you before, says this Cincinnati authority, because a few drops of freezone applied directly on a tender, aching corn or callus, stops soreness at once and soon the corn or hardened callus loosens so it can be lifted off, root and all, without pain.

A small bottle of freezone costs very little at any drug store, but will positively take off every hard or soft corn or callus. This should be tried, as it is inexpensive and is said not to irritate the surrounding skin.

If your druggist hasn't any freezone tell him to get a small bottle for you from his wholesale drug house.—adv.

FALLING HAIR MEANS DANDRUFF IS ACTIVE

Save Your Hair! Get a 25 Cent Bottle of Danderine Right Now—Also Stops Itching Scalp.

Thin, brittle, colorless and scraggy hair is mute evidence of a neglected scalp; of dandruff—that awful scurf.

There is nothing so destructive to the hair as dandruff. It robs the hair of its luster, its strength and its very life; eventually producing a feverishness and itching of the scalp, which if not remedied causes the hair roots to shrink, loosen and die—then the hair falls out fast. A little Danderine tonight—now—any time—will surely save your hair.

Get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any store, and after the first application your hair will take on that life, luster and luxuriance which is so beautiful. It will become wavy and fluffy and have the appearance of abundance; an incomparable gloss and softness, but what will please you most will be after just a few weeks' use, when you will actually see a lot of fine, downy hair—new hair—growing all over the scalp. WAY TO CONTROL THE OX WARBLE PEST

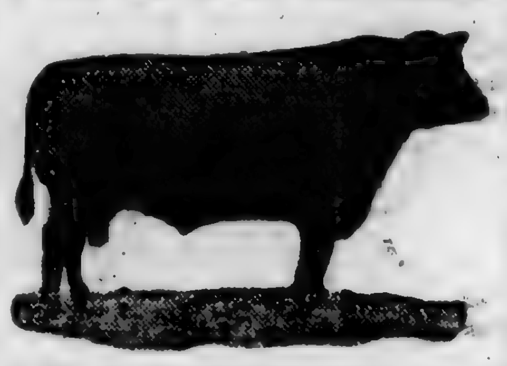
Injury by the ox warble amounting to millions of dollars annually could be reduced to almost nothing if stockmen would practice effective practical methods of control, acording to G. A. Dean, professor of entomology in the Kansas Agricultural college.

The presence of the ox warble is detected by passing the hand over the back of the animal. The warble may be destroyed by putting kerosene, turpentine or mercurial ointment in or on the opening through the skin directly over the grubs. This treatment should be given when the grubs appear on the backs of cattle, because if the grubs become tough before being killed they are likely to cause sores.



The Aberdeen-Angus breed of cattle have been popular with feeders and butchers. When matured and fattened they show form almost always symmetrical and not bunchy or patchy. As beef producers they are hard to equal. The bull shown is an Aberdeen-Angus.

If the opening through the skin is very small it should be enlarged with a smooth, pointed stick. A machinist's oil can having a slender nozzle furnishes an excellent method of applying the medicine. This treatment may be applied rapidly by running the cattle through a chute, with one man stationed on each side provided with an oil can filled with the medicine.

The cattle should be examined from fifteen to twenty days later, and any grubs that escape the first treatment should be squeezed out and crushed. It is important that any grubs squeezed out should be destroyed, else they will transform into adult flies.

The ox warble is one of the worst enemies of cattle, especially in the grazing sections. It is sometimes called botfly and heelfly and is also often spoken of as a grub.

In general appearance and size the adult fly, like many other botflies, resembles the common honeybee. It is half an inch long, black and covered with yellowish white and reddish brown and black hairs.

In the spring from the latter part of March to the 1st of May the flies appear about the cattle, laying their eggs upon the legs, especially in the region just above the hoof. It is from this habit of placing the eggs near the heels that they get the name of heelfly in the west and southwest.

In 1915 it was estimated that 60 per cent of the cattle in Kansas were infected with warbles. The annual financial loss on damaged hides alone is now estimated for the United States at from $25,000,0000 to $30,000,000.

Corn Experiment Lesson.

In experiments with corn at the Pennsylvania state college during the last few years heavy seed gave a little better field germination and a little better yield than light seed. Seed from ears which germinated quickly gave a slightly better field germination. Seed selected on the stalk germinated better than seed selected at husking time in an outdoor test, for the single year for which the record was kept. Seed selected at husking in three years' trials, for some unaccountable reason, gave the better field germination. The yields were about alike.

Wilbur Dermott Dies.

Eighteen Year Old Son of J. Evans Dermott and wife of Coldwater, Michigan, Accidentally Kills Himself Last Friday Evening. Burial in Alton Cemetery.

The accidental death of Wilbur, the eighteen year old son of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Dermott of Coldwater, Mich., Friday evening, came as a great shock to the people of St. Joe and Coburntown, the latter place being his birthplace. Mrs. Dermott and son were at home alone, the father was at Auburn on business. The story of the accident is all supposition and as no one saw it, can only be based on the circumstantial surroundings. Some rats had made their entrance to the barn where the auto was being kept and he had talked of trying to shoot them, but as the revolver was not in working order he was delayed. Some of his chums had found one similar to his and by remodeling it was made to shoot. Mrs. Dermott did not know that the revolver had been repaired and as he failed to return to the house she began to look for him and discovered that he had shot himself.

In taking a survey of the conditions it was thought that he had run backward for a distance trying to head the rat off, and he run into the hay mow and this of course caused him to throw up his hand and discharge the gun. Some cartriges were found on the floor showing that he had evidently been shooting at the rat.

He was born October 4, 1898 and died February 16, 1917, at the age of 18 years, 4 months and 14 days. He was quite young when moving to Michigan and since he had grown to young manhood he had become quite popular in the Y. M. C. A. work at Coldwater and was gaining a state wide reputation along this line. He was presidedt of his groupe, and for three years in succession he was delegate to the state convention. Wilbur was a fine young man and his church relations show him to be a charter member of the Church of Christ at Coldwater.

Services were held at the home before shipping the body for burial in the Alton Cemetery. Many beautiful floral offerings were made which showed the high esteem in which he was held. The body was taken to the Cordelia Dermott home east of St. Joe, where services were conducted by Rev. Spayd, Monday at about noon.

Death of Alex. Leighty

Alex Leighty died last Friday at the home of his daughter, Dora Avery, at Fremont, Michigan, after a week's illness of pneumonia. He had been staying with his daughter, Mrs. Siddie Wager of Hesperia, Michigan ever since leaving St. Joe a few years ago. Being in the country he became tired after so long a time and went to visit his daughter. In making the change he caught a severe cold, which caused his death. He was nearing his 81st. birthday on April 4. His health had been fairly well up to this time. Mr. Leighty worked at Spencerville for several years and was well thought of by all. He was buried at Fremont with his wife and one son Mrs Mary Bowman and C. B. Leighty of this place are the only children remaining out of this large family of ten.

Asking for A Divorce.

Auburn Evening Star

Mrs. Alma Lysher of St. Joe, has filed suit for a divorce from her husband, Edward Lysher, charging that he ran away from their home on the 4th of last January. She says he has abandoned her and it will be impossible for them to ever live together in the future as husband and wife.

Mrs. Lysher and her husband were married in January 1906, and lived together until he left her last month. She alleges that for more than two years before he left her he treated her in a cruel and inhuman manner.

The plaintiff also says that he abused her, calling her vile and abusive names. At times he threatened her with personal violence and even said he would kill her. He expressed his dislike for her at timesby asking her to institute proceedings for a divorce.

Mrs. Lysher has a daughter, Wilma Mager, age 15, by a former marriage. As the fruits of her present married state she has one son, Edgar Lysher, 11 years of age. She declares that her husband is not a fit and proper person to have the care and custody of the children, and petitions the court to place them in her care. She asks for an absolute divorce, but the complaint is silent as to alimony.

Mrs. Lysher alleges in her affidavit that her husband is a non-resident of Indiana, and is probably located somewhere in the state of Ohio. She states that she has been a resident of DeKalb county for four years, and in the state of Indiana for more than fifty years. J. E. Pomeroy of this city, is her attorney.

William Hamilton returned home last week, after a few weeks visit with his brother, John Hamilton and wife, at Butler.

Mesdames Addie Patterson and Jennie Sechler attended the County W. C. T. U., Executive Meeting at Auburn, Thursday, at which time plans were made for the Spring County Institute to be held in that city, March 7 and 8. Two St. Joe ladies will be on the program, Mrs. Sechler and Mrs L. W. Spayd.

A FRIEND'S ADVICE

Woman Saved From a Serious Surgical Operation.

Louisville, Ky.—"For four years I suffered from female troubles, headaches, and nervousness. I could not sleep, had no appetite and it hurt me to walk. If I tried to do any work, I would have to lie down before it was finished. The doctors said I would have to be operated on and I simply broke down. A friend advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and the result is I feel like a new woman. I am well and strong, do all my own house work and have an eight pound baby girl. I know Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound saved me from an operation which every woman dreads."—Mrs. NELLIE FISHBACK, 1521 Christy Ave., Louisville, Ky.

Everyone naturally dreads the surgeon's knife. Sometimes nothing else will do, but many times Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has saved the patient and made an operation unnecessary.

If you have any symptom about which you would like to know, write to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., for helpful advice given free.

ANYWAY, PAT GOT THE BEER

Grammar Competition Resulted Disastrously to the Other Two Participants in the Contest.

Pat, a Sotty and a Cockney were in company recently. They were very thirsty and hard up, having only the price of a single beer between them. Deciding to invest in this they entered a barroom and had the drink supplied.

"Oi tell ye what," said Pat, as he surveyed the flowing measure. "There's only enough here far wan, so we'd better put it up for a grammar competition, an' the best man'll get the lot."

This was agreed to.

"Well, now," said Pat to Scotty, "which would you say, 'Oi can't take this drink,' or 'Oi won't take this drink'?"

"I canna take this drink,' replied Scotty.

"An' you?' asked Pat of the Cockney.

"I won't take this drink," answered the latter.

"Well," said Pat, "Oi say, 'Oi will take this dhrink.'"

And he did.

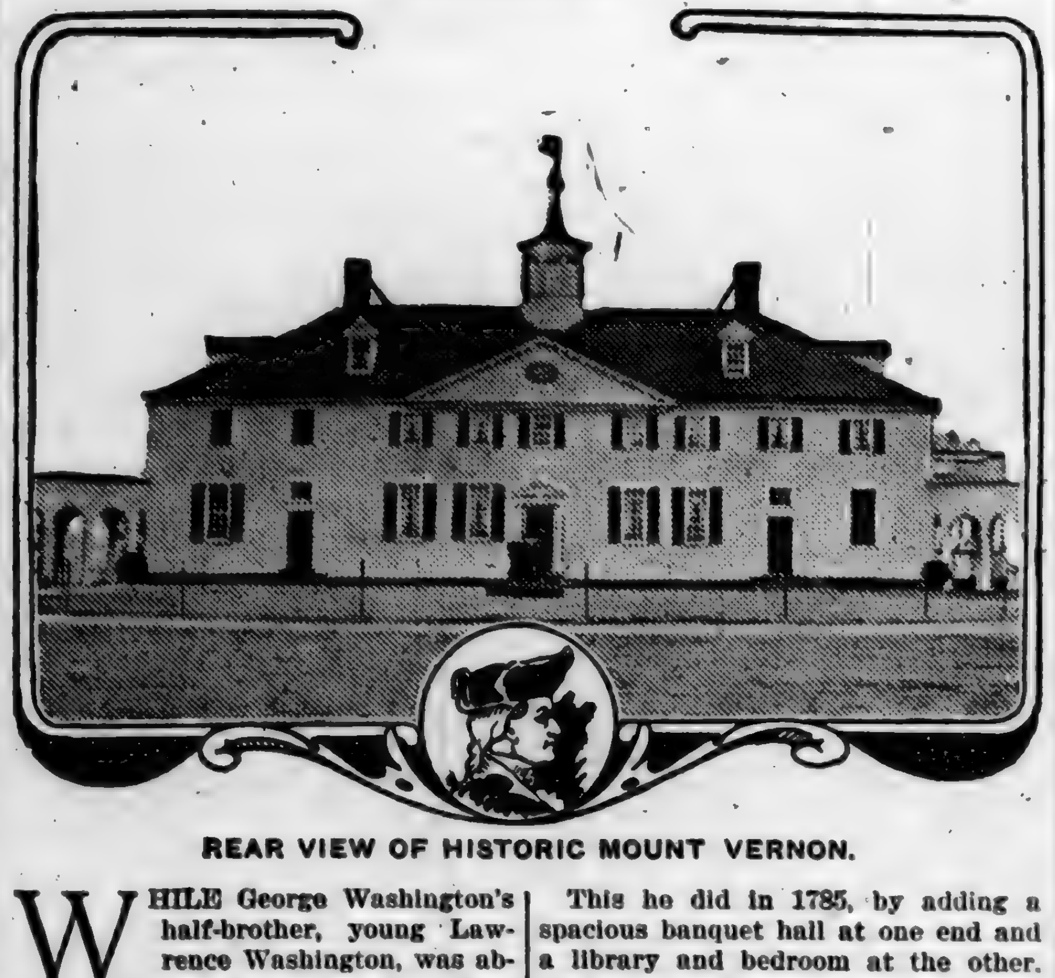
HISTORIC MOUNT VERNON

Mansion Which Is the Shrine of All Americans Was Built for Lawrence Washington, Half-Brother of George—Has Frequently Been Repainted and Additions Made—As It Is Today.



REAR VIEW OF HISTORIC MOUNT VERNON.

WHILE George Washington's half-brother, young Lawrence Washington, was absent from home, the father rebuilt a house at Mount Vernon for him, and this now forms the central part of the mansion. On his return, Lawrence brought to the home his young bride, the beautiful Miss Fairfax, daughter of his neighbor, Colonel Fairfax of Belvoir, an adjoining estate. Lawrence called the place Mount Vernon in honor of his English friend, Lord Vernon, under whom he had served in the navy.

Shortly after the death of Lawrence Washington, his daughter Sarah died without heirs, and the Mount Vernon estate passed by will into the hands of General Washington. In order to acquire full title, he purchased from the widow of Lawrence her dower rights. Henceforth he was sole owner of the estate; an estate which had been in the family since its acquisition by grant in 1670, and which remained in the family until sold in 1858 by John Augustine Washington to the Ladies' Mount Vernon association.

Old Kitchen of Mount Vernon.

These facts, which shed some interesting light on the early history of Mount Vernon, were obtained by Mr. Callahan after constant study of the old official records of the courts and vestry books of the counties in this part of Virginia. They establish beyond all doubt the truth which is that the central part of the Mount Vernon mansion was built by General Washington's father, that General Washington lived there for two years when a baby, and that his father built what is now the most conspicuous landmark on the place—the old barn.

Visitors to Mount Vernon during the past few months have had opportunity to witness the interesting work of reroofing Washington's old home, the historic mansion wherein he died. It is learned that this is the fourth time the roof has been shingled, the other dates being 1742, 1785 and 1860. In each instance the material selected and used was the best cypress shingles.

A short historical review of the construction and alteration of this old dwelling may be worth notice, as few among the many visitors happen upon information on the subject. The central portion of the present building was erected in 1742-3 for Maj. Lawrence Washington, who named it the Mount Vernon "Villa," out of respect for Admiral Edward Vernon of the British navy, under whom he had been serving in South America. This modest cottage, or villa, consisted of four rooms on the ground floor, with bedrooms and an unfinished attic above.

At the death of Lawrence Washington, 1752, the property fell to the ownership of his half-brother, George, who, in 1775, added to the attractiveness of the interior by paneling the hall and having the ceilings of the parlor and dining room decorated in stucco. After the revolution Washington's increased fame attracted to Mount Vernon such a horde of guests it was found a difficult problem to entertain them comfortably in the limited number of rooms at his disposal.

At first General Washington thought of tearing down the old building and erecting a more pretentious dwelling of suitable proportions to meet the requirements, but he finally decided to enlarge the cottage.

This he did in 1785, by adding a spacious banquet hall at one end and a library and bedroom at the other. The pitch of the room was changed and dormer windows arranged to make the attic available for sleeping apartments, these improvements resulting in an 18-room house, which thereafter was dignified by the term "mansion." In changing the roof a large quantity of the original shingles (of 1743), though considerably weather worn on the exposed surfaces, were found good enough to use again by turning them over. This evidence of Washington's resourcefulness has recently come to light by the temporary uncovering of a portion of the east portico roof, which for the better shedding of rain, had been slightly changed in 1860, revealing a few courses of the shingles of 1743 and 1785. These mute reminders of the past are now again sealed from view and so protected as to remain intact as long as the mansion shall endure.

When the Mount Vernon Ladies' association came into possession of the homestead the mansion was empty. Unceasing effort has been and is being made to recover the original things, but they are widely scattered and held by people who are reluctant to give them up. From time to time, however, some of the old pieces are offered for sale, but as a general rule, the prices asked are almost prohibitive. The government purchased a number of Washington relics many years ago. Among the present collection at Mount Vernon are many pieces of furniture of contemporaneous interest which have been accepted temporarily to fill vacancies in the various rooms, but as rapidly as original Washington articles are secured the non-original are eliminated.

Until recently the owners have had nothing definite to guide them respecting what the rooms formerly contained, but there has now been found the inventory made by the appraisers of Washington's effects shortly after he died. This important document will be of inestimable assistance in accurately refurnishing the mansion.

Studying Mount Vernon from the viewpoint of a casual visitor, it is difficult to conceive of a more charming spot. The perpetuation is attributable to the management and devotion of the Ladies' association. The founder of this remarkable body was Miss Ann Pamela Cunningham.

Why Washington Was Not a Signer.

At the time the Declaration of Independence was given to the world, Washington was at the head of the patriot army in New York state, trying hard to keep Lord Howe and his British soldiers from capturing the state; and that is why his name does not appear among the signers of the immortal document. It is pretty certain that had he been conveniently near he would have been asked to put his name at the head of the list.

Duty Intrusted to Americans

The preservation of the sacred fire of liberty, and the destiny of the republican model of government are justly considered as deeply, perhaps finally, staked on the experiment intrusted to the hands of the American people. —George Washington: Inaugural Address.

SEVEN YEARS AGO AND TO-DAY

Then He Had 6 Mules, $660 Cash and Some Equity—Today He Has $20,000 and Owns 2 Sections of Land.

The story of the wealth of Western Canada cannot be told too often; the truth will bear repeatings. And in telling of it it is hoped that advantage will be taken of the great opportunities that Western Canada offers by those who are today struggling for a mere existence, by those who are occupying lands, high in price and high in rentals.

From grain, live stock and dairying in 1916, there was a return from the three Prairie Provinces of $258,000,000, or an increase of four million dollars over 1915, and 118 million dollars over 1914.

A prominent Trust Company says: Some of our contract holders have paid off their purchase money on lands bought a year ago out of this year's crop, and what one man can do another can do. Thousands of Southern Alberta farmers harvested an average of 40 to 50 bushels of No. 1 wheat to the acre. These farmers have more real money to spend than any other people on the American Continent. J. D. Johnston of Bladsworth, Sask., left Johnson County, Kansas, seven years ago. When he left he had $660 in cash, six mules, some settler's effects and an equity in some prairie land. Mr. Johnston tells his story:

"In my seven years' residence in Saskatchewan, I have raised seven good crops the value of this year's crop alone being Twenty thousand dollars. I now own Two Sections of improved land, 17 horses and mules, 40 cattle, a large steam thresher and a full line of farm machinery."

We have made five trips to Kansas, one trip to the Pacific Coast and return. We have enjoyed the society of a class of people than whom none better can be found. The climate is healthful and invigorating. The soil is fertile and productive, well adapted for the production of the best quality and large yields of all cereals and vegetables, wild and tame grasses. It is an excellent stock country."

The question of taxes is one that carries with it considerable weight. Coming from a man like Mr. Johnston the same weight should be given the answer. He says:

The tax system especially commends itself to me as being simple, reasonable and just. All direct taxes are levied on the land at its appraised market value, exclusive of improvements thereon. No tax on personal property. This tends to discourage the holding of lands by speculators who prevent its cultivation or improvement, hoping to realize profits from the enhanced value of their holdings due to the industrial activities of the bona fide settlers. It tends to encourage the settlers to rear substantial improvements upon their land without paying a penalty in the form of taxation therefor. It encourages the raising of live stock and the possession of other personal property necessary to the development of the country.

"The laws are well and economically administered. Citizens of the Dominion vote on election of members of parliament and members of the Provincial assembly, while on questions of local improvements and school matters the franchise is exercised by ratepayers, irrespective of citizenship.

The people are enterprising, school facilities are good Taxation, just and reasonable. Military service voluntary. Patriotic fervor unsurpassed, law and order the rule, and crime the rare exception. It is the land of banks, schools, telephones, grain elevators, broad, fertile acres, good climate, good citizenship and abounding in opportunities for the industrious man or woman of good morals, in short, the land of promise and fulfillment, I know of no better anywhere." —Advertisement.

Her Advice.

He had just proposed to the girl of his choice, but she handed him the icy mitt.

"There's nothing for me to do but buy a pistol and blow my brains out," he moaned.

"Why go to that expense?" she queried. "Just take a pinch of snuff and sneeze."

For genuine comfort and lasting pleasure use Red Cross Ball Blue on wash day. All good grocers. Adv.

It's hard to get turned down, but it is still harder not to be able to turn anything up.

Do you happen to know a father who would want his son to follow in his footsteps?

ACTRESS TELLS SECRET.

A well known actress gives the following recipe for gray hair: To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and ¼ oz. of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and make it soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off. Adv.

Logical Result.

"That girl rings true."

"Of course, she does. She's a belle."

At six that evening, returning to his rooms to dress, Whitaker found another note waiting for him, in a handwriting that his heart recognized with a sensation of wretched apprehension. He comprehended its contents with difficulty, half blinded by a swimming mist of foreboding.

> My Dear: I find my strength unequal to the strain of seeing you tonight. Indeed, I am so worn out and nerve-racked that I have had to consult my physician. He orders me immediately to a sanatorium, to rest for a week or two. Don't worry about me. I shan't fail to let you know as soon as I feel strong enough to see you. Forgive me. I love you dearly.
>
> MARY.

The paper slipped from Whitaker's trembling hand and fluttered unheeded to the floor. He sprang to the telephone and presently had the Waldorf on the wire; it was true, he learned: Mrs. Whitaker had registered at the hotel in the morning, and had left at four in the afternoon. He was refused information as to whether she had left a forwarding address for her mail.

He wrote her immediately, and perhaps not altogether wisely, under stress of distraction, sending the letter by special delivery in care of the hotel. It was returned him in due course of time, embellished with a penciled memorandum to the effect that Mrs. Whitaker had left no address.

He communicated at once with Ember, promptly enlisting his willing services. But after several days of earnest investigation the detective confessed himself baffled.

"If you ask me," he commented at the conclusion of his report, "the answer is she means to be let alone until she's quite ready to see you again."

Whitaker raged. "She—she loved me there on the island. She couldn't change so quickly, bring herself to treat me so cruelly, unless some infernal influence had been brought to bear upon her."

"It's possible, but I—"

"Oh, I don't mean that foolishness about her love being a man's death warrant. That may have something to do with it, but—but—I conquered that once. . . . No; somebody has got hold of her, worked on her sympathies, maligned me . . ."

"Do you object to telling me whom you have in mind?"

"The man you suspect as well as I—the one man to whom her allegiance means everything—the man you named to me the night we met for the first time, as the one who'd profit the most by keeping her from leaving the stage!"

"Well, if it's Max, you'll know in time."

"I'll know before long. As soon as he gets back in town—"

"So you've been after him?"

"Why not? But he's out on the Pacific coast; or so they tell me at the theater. Expected back about the middle of July—they say in his office."

"Then that lets him out."

"But it's a lie."

"Well—?"

"I've just remembered: Max was at the Fiske place, urging her to return, the night before you caught Drummond at the bungalow. I saw them, walking up and down in front of the cottage, arguing earnestly: I could tell by her bearing she was refusing whatever he proposed. But I didn't know her then, and naturally I never connected Max with the fellow I saw, disguised in a motoring coat and cap. Neither of 'em had any place in my thoughts that night."

Ember uttered a thoughtful "Oh?" adding: "There may be something in what you say—suspect, that is. If I agree to keep an eye on him, will you promise to give me a free hand?"

"Meaning—?"

"Keep out of Max's way: don't risk a wrangle with him."

"Oh—go ahead—to blazes—as far as you like."

"Thanks," Ember dryly wound up the conference; "but these passing flirtations with your present-day temper leave me with no hankering for greater warmth." . . .

Days ran stolidly on into weeks, and these into a month. Nothing happened. Max did not return; the whispered rumor played wildfire in theatrical circles that the eccentric manager had encountered financial difficulties insuperable. The billboards flanking the entrance to the Theatre Max continued to display posters announcing the reopening early in September with a musical comedy by Tynan Dodd; but the comedy was not even in rehearsal by September 15.

Ember went darkly about his various businesses, taciturn—even a trace more than ever reserved in his communication with Whitaker—preoccupied, but constant in his endeavor to enhearten the desponding husband.

Mary Whitaker made no sign. Now and then Whitaker would lose patience and write to her. He received not a line of acknowledgment.

Sometimes, fretted to a frenzy, he sought out Ember and made wild and unreasonable demands upon him. These failing of any effect other than the resigned retort, "I am a detective, not a miracle-monger," he would fly into desperate, gnawing, black rages that made Ember fear for his sanity and self-control and caused him to be haunted by that gentleman for hours—once or twice for days—until he resumed his normal poise of a sober and civilized man. He was, however, not often aware of this sedulous espionage.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Temperamental.

September waned and October dawned in grateful coolness: an exquisite month of crisp nights and enlivening days, of mellowing sunlight and early gloamings tenderly colored. Country houses were closed and theaters reopened. Then suddenly the town blossomed overnight with huge eight-sheet posters on every available hoarding, blazoning the news:

JULES MAX
begs to announce the return of SARA LAW
in a new Comedy entitled "Faith"
by JULES MAX
Theater MAX—Friday October 15th

But Whitaker had the information before he saw the broadsides in the streets. The morning paper propped up on his breakfast table contained the illuminating note under the caption, "News of Plays and Players:"

> Jules Max has sprung another and perhaps his greatest surprise on the theatergoing public of this city. The astute manager has been out of town for two months secretly rehearsing the new comedy entitled "Faith," of which he is the author and in which Sara Law will return finally to the stage. Additional interest attaches to this announcement in view of the fact that Miss Law has authorized the publication of her intention never again to retire from the stage.
>
> The opening performance of "Faith" will take place at the Theater Max tomorrow evening, Friday, October 15.

Whitaker glanced up incredulously at the date line of the sheet. Short notice, indeed: the date was Thursday, October 14. Max had planned his game and had played his cards cunningly, in withholding this announcement until the last moment.

After a pause Whitaker rose and began to walk the length of the room, hands in his pockets, head bowed in thought.

Search as he would, he could discover no rankling indignation, nothing but some self-contempt, that he had allowed himself to be so carried away by infatuation for an ignoble woman, and a cynic humor that made it possible for him to derive a certain satisfaction from contemplating the completeness of this final revelation of herself. Returning to the breakfast table, he took up the paper, turned to the shipping news, and ran his eye down the list of scheduled sailings: nothing for Friday; his pick of half a dozen boats listed to sail Saturday.

The telephone enabled him to make a hasty reservation on the biggest and fastest of them all.

He had just concluded that business and was waiting with his hand on the receiver to call up Ember and announce his departure, when the doorbell interrupted. Expecting the waiter to remove the breakfast things, he went to the door, threw it open, and turned back instantly to the telephone. As his fingers closed around the receiver a second time, he looked round and saw his wife. . . .

His hand fell to his side. Otherwise he did not move. But his glance was that of one incuriously comprehending the existence of a stranger.

The woman met it fairly and fearlessly, with her head high and her lips touched with a trace of her shadowy, illegible smile. She was dressed for walking, very prettily and perfectly.

After a moment she inclined her head slightly. "The hallboys said you were busy on the telephone. I insisted on coming directly up. I wish very much to see you for a few moments. Do you mind?"

"By no means," he said, a little stiffly but quite calmly. "If you will be good enough to come in—"

He stood against the wall to let her pass.

"I had to come this morning," she explained, turning. "This afternoon we have a rehearsal. . . ."

He bowed an acknowledgment. "Won't you sit down?"

"Thank you." Seated, she subjected him to a quick, open appraisal, disarming in its naive honesty.

"Hugh . . . aren't you a bit thinner?"

"I believe so." He had a match for that impertinence: "But you, I see, have come off without a blemish."

"I am very well," she admitted, unperturbed. Her glance embraced the room. "You're very comfortable here."

"I have been."

"I hope that doesn't mean I'm in the way."

"To the contrary; but I sail day after tomorrow for Australia."

"Oh? That's very sudden, isn't it? You don't seem to have done any packing. Or perhaps you mean to come back before a great while?"

"I shan't come back, ever."

"Must I believe you made up your mind this morning?"

"I have only just read the announcement of your opening tomorrow night."

"Then . . . I am driving you out of the country?"

Her look was impersonal and curious.

His shoulders moved negligently. "Not to rant about it," he replied: "I find I am not needed here."

"Oh, dear!" Her lips formed a fugitive, petulant moue: "And it's my fault?"

"There's no use mincing matters, is there? I am not heartbroken, and if I am bitterly disappointed I don't care to—in fact, I lack the ability to dramatize it."

"You are taking it well, Hugh?" said she, critical.

Expressionless, he waited an instant before inquiring pointedly: "Well?"

Deliberately laying aside her light muff, her scarf and handbag, she rose: equality of poise was impossible if he would persist in standing. She moved a little nearer.

"Hugh," she said in a voice of sincerity, "I'm awfully sorry—truly I am!"

He made no reply; waited.

"Perhaps I'm wrong," she went on, "but I think most women would have spared themselves this meeting—"

"Themselves and the man," he interjected dryly.

"Don't be cross, Hugh. . . . I had to come. I had to explain myself. I wanted you to understand. Hugh, I—" She was twisting her hands together with a manner denoting great mental strain. Of a sudden she checked and dropped them, limp and open by her sides. "You see," she said with the apologetic smile, "I'm trying not to act."

"Oh," he said in a tone of dawning comprehension—"so that's it!"

"I'm afraid so, Hugh. . . . I'm dreadfully sorry for you—poor boy!—but I'm afraid that's the trouble with me, and it can never be helped. I was born with a talent for acting; life has made me an actress. Hugh . . . I've found out something." Her eyes appealed wistfully. "I'm not genuine."

He nodded interestedly.

"I'm just an actress, an instrument for the music of emotions. I've been trained to respond, until now I respond without knowing it, when there's no true response here." She touched the bosom of her frock.

He said nothing.

With a half sigh she moved away to the window.

"Of course you despise me. I despise myself—I mean, the self that was me before I turned from a woman into an actress. But it's the truth: I have no longer any real capacity for emotion, merely an infinite capacity for appreciation of the artistic delineation of emotion, true or feigned. That . . . that is why, when you showed me you had grown to love me so, I responded so quickly. You were in love—more honestly than I had ever seen love revealed. It touched me. I was proud to have inspired such a love. I wanted, for the time being, to have you with me always, that I might always study the wonderful, the beautiful manifestations of your love. Why, Hugh, you even managed to make me believe I was worth it—that my response was sufficient repayment for your adoration. . . ."

He said nothing. She glanced furtively at him and continued:

"I meant to be sweet and faithful when I left that note for you on the yacht, Hugh; I was grateful, and I meant to be generous. . . . But when I went to the Waldorf, the first person I met was Max. Of course I had to tell him what had happened. And then he threw himself upon my compassion. It seems that losing me had put him in the most terrible trouble about money. He was short, and he couldn't get the backing he needed without me, his call upon my services, by way of assurance to his backers. And I began to think. I knew I didn't love you honestly, Hugh, and that life with you would be a living lie. What right had I to deceive you that way, just to gratify my love of being loved? And especially if by doing that I ruined Max, the man to whom, next to you, I owed everything? I couldn't do it. But I took time to think it over—truly I did. I really did go to a sanatorium, and rested there while I turned the whole matter over carefully in my mind, and at length reached my decision to stick by Max and let you go, free to win the heart of a woman worthy of you."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

In Alaska.

The stand of timber on the two great national forests in Alaska is estimated by the forest service as more than seventy billion board feet, while the annual growth will, it is said, produce pulp wood enough for the manufacture of 3,000 tons of wood pulp a day.

Profit by Mistakes.

Let not your mistakes and false steps embarrass you. Nothing is so valuable in experience as the consciousness of one's mistakes. This is one of the cardinal means of self-education.—Carlyle.

Olives Valuable Food.

So far as value of heat unit is concerned, pound for pound, ripe olives contain almost as much food value as bread, and in the case of very large olives the value may be increases to approximately the same as that of bread.

AN ACCOMPLISHED EMPRESS

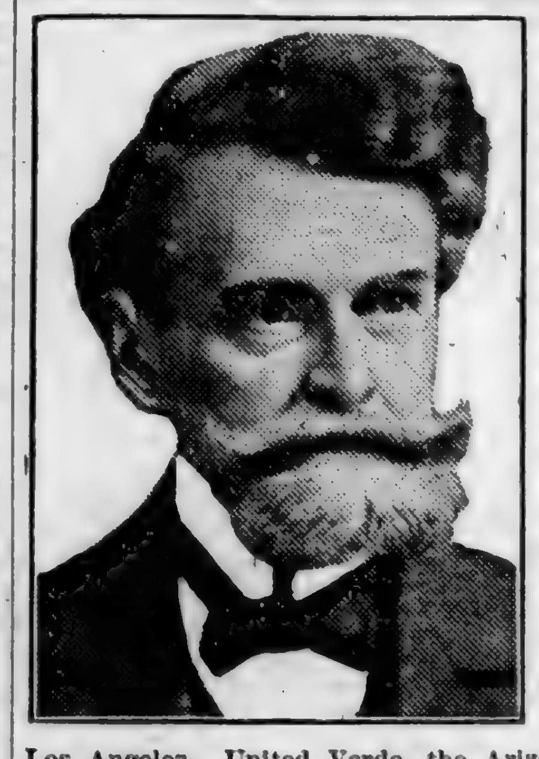
Zita, the new empress of Austria-Hungary, from her early days has been studious and is an accomplished musician and well versed in literature, history and philosophy. She also is fond of society and is a graceful dancer.

Empress Zita was born in the Villa Reale at Pianore in the Italian province of Lucca, May 9, 1892, the daughter of Duke Robert and Duchess Maria Antoinette of Parma. She is of Bourbon descent. Her early training was in the hands of the Marquise Della Rosa.

Later she entered a convent at Zangbert, where she presided now and then as organist in the chapel.

After her father's death, Princess Zita in 1908 spent some time in the Ryde convent, isle of Wight, where her sister, Princess Adelaide, is a nun. Here, among the French sisters who had been compelled to leave France owing to the church reform law, she studied music, literature, Latin, history and philosophy. Princess Zita made the acquaintance of Archduke Charles Francis at Franzensbad, Bohemia, in the spring of 1909, while the guest of the Archduchess Marie Annunziata, her cousin.

SECOND RICHEST AMERICAN



W. A. Clark, former United States senator from Montana and mine king of the West, is believed to be fast overhauling John D. Rockefeller, oil king, as the richest man in America. War prices on metal have enormously increased Clark's fabulous income. One difference between Clark and Rockefeller is that Clark's holdings are in his own name. His intimates declare he could raise $100,000,000 in cash in 24 hours and that he probably is the only man in the United States who can.

Clark started his career as a bull team driver in Montana and as a peddler of spices, baking powders and other household supplies in the early days of Butte, Mont. He was in on the first whack at the "billion-dollar hill" in Butte. At seventy-six years of age he owns extensive mining operations in Montana, Arizona, California, Michigan, oil properties in Montana and the Salt Lake railroad line from Butte to Los Angeles. United Verde, the Arizona copper mine for which Clark recently refused an offer of $75,000,000, is paying $2,000,000 a month. His Butte properties, though comparatively small, yield enormous wealth. Every day he receives a telegraphic report of what is done on each of his properties and thus he keeps posted on all operations.

BABY OF THE SENATE

"Joe" Wolcott of Delaware, who defeated Col. Henry A. du Pont last fall for the senate, is the "baby" of the upper house.

Rightly his name is not "Joe;" it is Josiah Oliver Wolcott, and he comes of an old family. In his veins flows the spirit of colonial times, the traditions of the plantation, the love of public service.

If there be such a thing as a real American type it is represented in this youngest member of the United States senate. Down in Delaware there is little of what is called "foreign influence," and in the quiet town of Dover, where he was born, affairs have run along in the same channel for years and years, untouched by ideas brought by recent comers. It is the old type of Americanism that he represents.

Josiah Oliver Wolcott was born in Dover in 1877. His father, James L. Wolcott, was chancellor of the state of Delaware. His mother was Mary Mills Goodwin. Wolcott went to the public schools, and in 1896 came out of Wilmington Conference academy and went to Wesleyan university, at Middletown, Conn.

He had to work his way through the university, but got his degree in 1900 and went back to Dover to study law. He became a good trial lawyer and a good talker. He was made a deputy attorney general by Andrew C. Gray in 1909. In 1912 he was elected attorney general of the state, running ahead of the ticket.

It is no small thing to be the youngest senator of these United States. Luke Lee of Tennessee consented not to go back this time, so that his youth will not interfere with Wolcott's claims to the baby seat. And Senator Wadsworth is just a month and a half older than Wolcott.

GOLF AN OLD GAME

Was Once Played in Holland on the Ice.

Goes Back at Least Five Centuries—So Popular in Scotland in 1457 It Interfered With Other Games.

"You have to be a fine rider, do you not, to play golf?" was the commonest question in regard to the game not more than 35 years ago. At that time the man who traveled about with a set of golf clubs was an object of some astonishment to his fellow travelers!

And yet the game of golf, according to the new Encyclopedia Britannica, goes back at least five centuries. It is portrayed by early Dutch painters, who generally showed it being played on ice! But one of the pictures in a Dutch illumined Book of Hours, now in the British museum, is a painting of three men putting at a hole in the turf as in our modern golf. Although the Dutchmen played and painted golf, they did not write about it and we have no records describing the game.

Just when Scotland took up golf is unknown, but 1457 it was already so popular, says the Britannica, that it interfered with the more important pursuit of archery. In May, 1471, an act of the Scottish parliament was passed forbidding this sport: "Futeball and Golfe forbidden. Item, it is statut and ordaint that in na place of the realme there be usit fute-ball golfe or uther silk unprofitabill sports," etc.

It is rather curious that this is an edict of James IV who later became very much attached to the practice of the "unprofitabill sport"—not only he, but his daughter, Mary Stuart. It was alleged by her enemies that, as showing her shameless indifference to the fate of her husband, a very few days after his murder, she "was seen playing golf and pall-mall in the fields beside Seton."

Golf has from old times been known in Scotland as "the Royal and Ancient Game of Golf." Many monarchs have made it their favorite diversion and since its introduction into America all the presidents have found it a favorite form of exercise.

There is still standing in Edinburgh a monument of the prowess of James II as a golfer. After the Restoration James, then duke of York, was sent to Edinburgh in 1681 as commissioner of the king to parliament. He was challenged by two Englishmen, nobles of his suite, to play a match against them, for a very large stake, along with any Scotch ally he might select. With his partner, who was one "Johne Patersone," a shoemaker, the duke easily won the game. He made over half of the large stake to his humble co-adjutor, who herewith built himself a house at No. 77 Cannongate, which has always been called Golfer's Land.

Luminous Watch Dial.

The first thing to do is to procure an ounce of calcium sulphide, luminous. The cost since the war is $1 an ounce, but you can fix perhaps 50 watches with that amount. This element absorbs light, and after being exposed to any bright light for five minutes will glow with a purple light for about four hours, says Popular Science Monthly.

Remove the crystal from the watch to be treated, and with a pen dipped in shellac go over the numerals and the hands. Some may prefer to make dots only at the numerals. Pour out the calcium on a clean piece of paper, dip your finger in it and press some on the moist shellac. Allow about five minutes for it to dry. The calcium not used may be returned to the bottle.

Wise Husband.

Mr. Barton lived in a suburban town. His wife asked him to purchase a shirtwaist for her while in New York. After telling the salesgirl what he was after, she displayed a number.

"Here are some very pretty ones. What color do you prefer?" she said.

"It doesn't make any difference," replied Mr. Barton.

"Doesn't make any difference!" exclaimed the salesgirl. "Why, don't you think your wife would like a certain color?"

"No, it makes no difference what color I get or what size. I shall have to come back tomorrow to have it changed."

COMB SAGE TEA IN HAIR TO DARKEN IT

It's Grandmother's Recipe to keep her Locks Dark, Glossy, Beautiful.

The old-time mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur for darkening gray, streaked and faded hair is grandmother's recipe, and folks are again using it to keep their hair a good, even color, which is quite sensible, as we are living in an age when a youthful appearance is of the greatest advantage.

Nowadays, though, we don't have the troublesome task of gathering the sage and the mussy mixing at home. All drug stores sell the ready-to-use product, improved by the addition of other ingredients, called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" for about 50 cents a bottle. It is very popular because nobody can discover it has been applied. Simply moisten your comb or a soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also produces that soft lustre and appearance of abundance which is so attractive. This ready-to-use preparation is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire a more youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

Get the Habit of Drinking Hot Water Before Breakfast

Says we can't look or feel right with the system full of poisons.

Millions of folks bathe internally now instead of loading their system with drugs. "What's an inside bath?" you say. Well, it is guaranteed to perform miracles if you could believe these hot water enthusiasts.

There are vast numbers of men and women who, immediately upon arising in the morning, drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it. This is a very excellent health measure. It is intended to flush the stomach, liver, kidneys and the thirty feet of intestines of the previous day's waste, sour bile and indigestible material left over in the body which if not eliminated every day, become food for the millions of bacteria which infest the bowels, the quick result is poisons and toxins which are then absorbed into the blood causing headache, bilious attacks, foul breath, bad taste, colds, stomach trouble, kidney misery, sleeplessness, impure blood and all sorts of ailments.

People who feel good one day and badly the next, but who simply can not get feeling right are urged to obtain a quarter pound of limestone phosphate at the drug store. This will cost very little but is sufficient to make anyone a real crank on the subject of internal sanitation.

Just as soap and hot water act on the skin, cleansing, sweetening and freshening, so limestone phosphate and hot water act on the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels. It is vastly more important to bathe on the inside than on the outside, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, while the bowel pores do.

GLASS OF SALTS IF YOUR KIDNEYS HURT

Eat less meat if you feel Backachy or have Bladder trouble—Salts fine for Kidneys.

Meat forms uric acid which excites and overworks the kidneys in their efforts to filter it from the system. Regular eaters of meat must flush the kidneys occasionally. You must relieve them like you relieve your bowels; removing all the acids, waste and poison, else you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment; the channels often get irritated, obliging you to get up two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids and flush off the body's urinous waste get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine and bladder disorders disappear. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys and stop bladder irritation. Jad Salts is inexpensive; harmless and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then, thus avoiding serious kidney and bladder diseases.

Hatch Chicks Early

Early hatching is the secret of winter egg production, say specialists in the U. S. Department of Agriculture. The pullet that is hatched early matures early and is ready to lay eggs in the fall when the supply is scarcest and prices highest. Chickens that are expected to be revenue producers for their owners later in the year should be out of their shells by April 30 at the latest. If they are properly cared for thereafter they will begin to lay eggs at the very time that eggs are most wanted.

To a great extent the poultrymen of the country have overlooked this simple fact. For one thing, birds hatched later in the spring or summer are not inclined to become broody until late the following season and thus an unprofitable circle is formed. Each year pullets mature too late to produce in the fall and winter, and they sit too late for their offspring to do any better. The poultryman who wishes to get really good returns from his flock must break this circle.

The growing use of incubators has made this comparatively easier. There is no reason why incubators should not be filled in March and early April and the hatching over before May 1. If no incubator is available it may be possible to secure broody hens in the neighborhood. That they will repay the trouble and expense necessary to obtain them, is indicated by results at the government poultry farm in Maryland. There it is not unusual to get a daily average of one egg for every five hens throughout the fall and winter, and in some pens the average has been as high as one egg for three birds. If anything like this percentage could be obtained on farms, the ordinary poultry farmer would derive real benefit from the high prices which eggs invariably bring for a period of several months.

GIRLS! GIRLS! TRY IT, BEAUTIFY YOUR HAIR

Make It Thick, Glossy, Wavy, Luxuriant and Remove Dandruff—Real Surprise for You.

Your hair becomes light, wavy, fluffy, abundant and appears as soft, lustrous and beautiful as a young girl's after a "Danderine hair cleanse." Just try this—moisten a cloth with a little Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. This will cleanse the hair of dust, dirt and excessive oil and in just a few moments you have doubled the beauty of your hair.

Besides beautifying the hair at once, Danderine dissolves every particle of dandruff; cleanses, purifies and invigorates the scalp, forever stopping itching and falling hair.

But what will please you most will be after a few weeks' use when you will actually see new hair—fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair—growing all over the scalp. If you care for pretty, soft hair and lots of it, surely get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any store and just try it. Adv.

Feel Achy All Over?

To ache all over in damp weather, or after taking a cold, isn't natural, and often indicates kidney weakness. Uric acid causes many queer aches, pains and disorders of the organs. Well kidneys keep uric acid down. Tired, dizzy, nervous people would do well to try Doan's Kidney Pills. They stimulate the kidneys to activity and so help clear the blood of irritating poisons.

PERSONAL RIGHTS.

Replying to the "personal liberty" argument of the wets, Clinton N. Howard, who is characterized as one of the bomb-throwers in the prohibition ranks, puts it this way:

"You have a personal right to eat putrid meat; I have no right to sell it. If your hog dies a natural death or with the cholera, you have a personal right to grind it up into sausage and eat it; but you have no right to offer it for public sale. A man has a personal right to corn his dead mule and serve it on his own table. You have as good a right to eat your cat as I have my chicken, or your dog as I have my pig. The Chinese in New York have a dog feast at their New Year's celebration and the police have never interfered with their personal right. But if you opened a meat market and skinned dogs and cats and exposed horse sausage for public sale the meat inspector would confiscate the entire supply, close up the place as a public nuisance and arrest you for selling what you had a personal right to eat.

"We have a law against the sale of impure literature. We do not say that a man shall not read it, even though that may harm him; because it is his personal right to damage his own character and corrupt his own mind; but if he opens a shop for the dissemination and sale of such literature to corrupt the youth of the community, society steps in and interferes—not with his personal liberty to read what he likes, but with his social right to sell that which corrupts public morals. Under this law tons of impure literature, licentious post cards and immoral books are seized and destroyed every year, without compensation to their owners; indeed, they are prosecuted and fined or jailed for the offense against public morality and decency. That is prohibition."

MORE AND BETTER.

The argument that the workingman will lose his job if the liquor traffic is abolished is based upon the absurd proposition that, if the liquor dealer fails to get the money now spent for beer and whisky, nobody else will get it.

It is assumed that the farmer who now sells his grain and grapes, his apples and cherries, to the liquor interests will be compelled to destroy them; when the fact is that figures furnished by the United States government clearly indicate that the ability of the American farmer to raise enough grain to adequately supply this country is gradually decreasing. To listen to the defender of the saloon, one would think that nobody likes grapes and cherries and apples, unless they come in form of booze. There are millions of youngsters who would be delighted to have at least one chance to eat all the fruit they really need.—Charles Stelzle, Member of Machinists' Union, and Secretary of Church and Labor Department of Presbyterian Church.

MODERATE DRINKING.

The degeneration due to the so-called "moderate" consumption of alcohol is very similar to senile decay, in the opinion of Prof. G. Sims Woodhead, M. A., M. D., F. R. C. P., F. R. S. E., of England.

"Alcoholic degeneration, however," Professor Woodhead points out, "does not proceed equally in every part of the body. The weaker tissues are first attacked and the patient gives way at the weak link of the chain.

"Alcohol calls upon the reserve strength which ought to be held like a balance at the bank to meet sudden and unexpected emergencies. If you have such a physical reserve, you are able to tide over emergencies and wear out gradually, but if you let alcohol withdraw your balance, exhausting your reserve, you may become a physical bankrupt at any moment."

LET GO!

The story is told of a man who one night fell over a cliff. Thinking that bottom was hundreds of feet below, he clung to the edge as long as he could, crying for help. When, exhausted, he let go, he found that the good firm road was only a few inches under his feet.

Some there are who cling to the liquor traffic imagining that to let go means a drop into industrial chaos. But community after community has tried letting go of it. No disaster has followed. The good sound road of industry furnishes firm footing for all, individuals or communities, who let go of booze. And the drop to it is so short as to scarcely be noticeable by those who muster up courage to take it.—The Liberator.

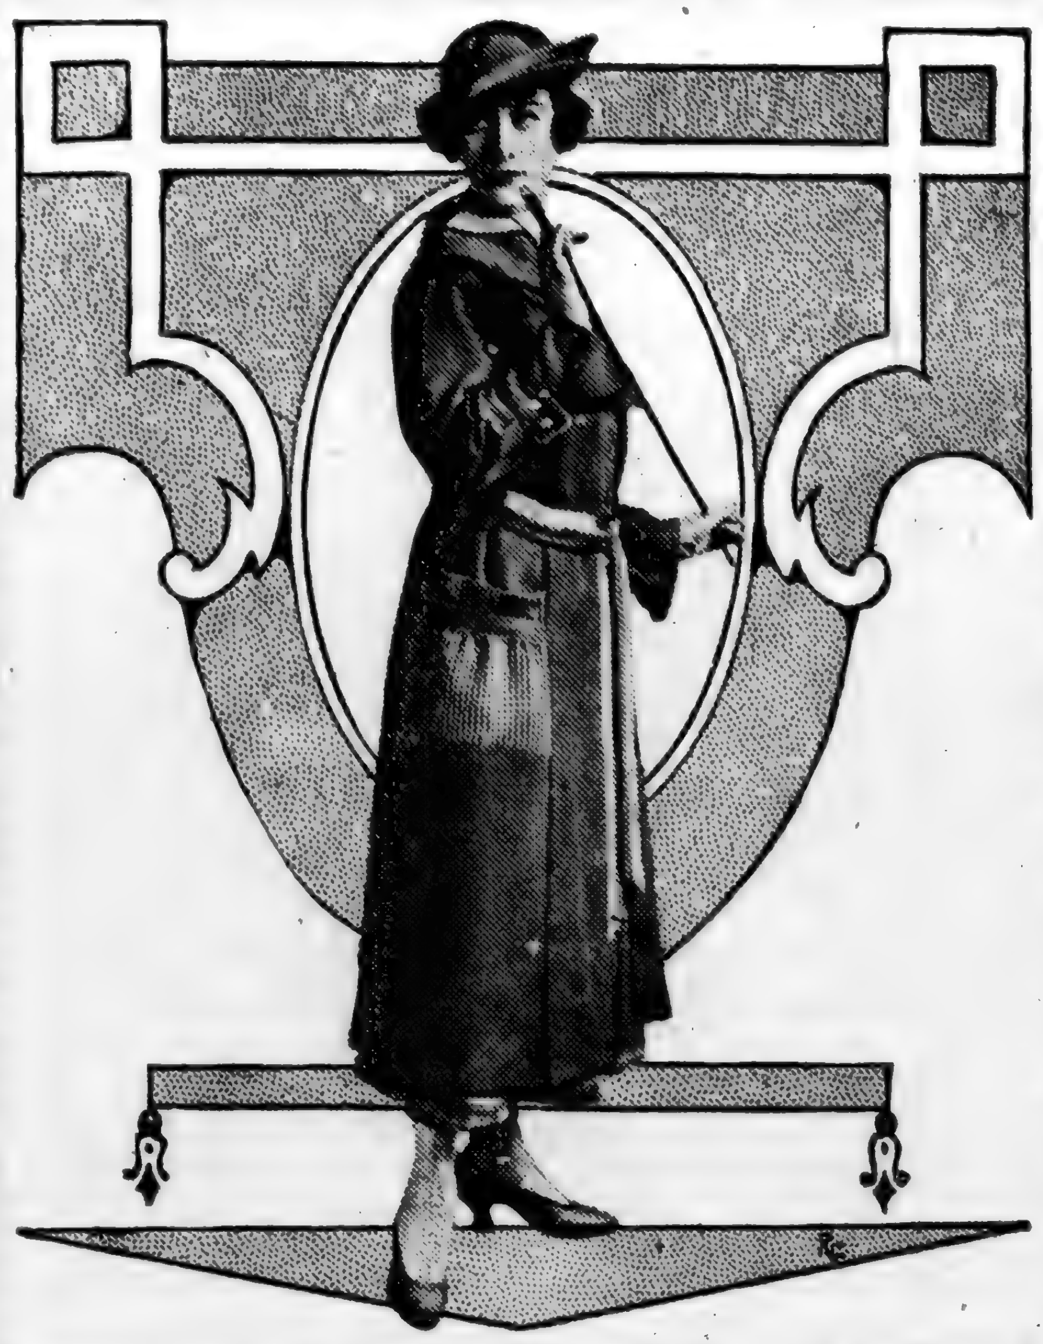
"NO, THANK YOU," LEAGUE.

Sacramento has a "No Thank You" league, the members of which pledge themselves "not to take an intoxicating drink in a saloon at another's invitation or expense;" and each member wears a "No Thank You" button.

TWO VOTES.

"Two men went up to the ballot to vote,
The one a Christian, the other a bloat;
One held in his hand the Word of God,
The other a license to sell forty-rod;
And the angel looked down in grief and shame,
For the ballots they cast were exactly the same."

Style Tendencies in Spring Coats



Manufacturers and costumers are about to disclose to us their new models in spring coats. They have been getting ready for the advance spring fashion shows, where their garments will be exhibited, to vie with many others, in bidding for the favor of buyers. Buyers back their judgment with orders, and their appreciation is expressed in terms of money, so we shall know very soon to what style tendencies they pin their faith.

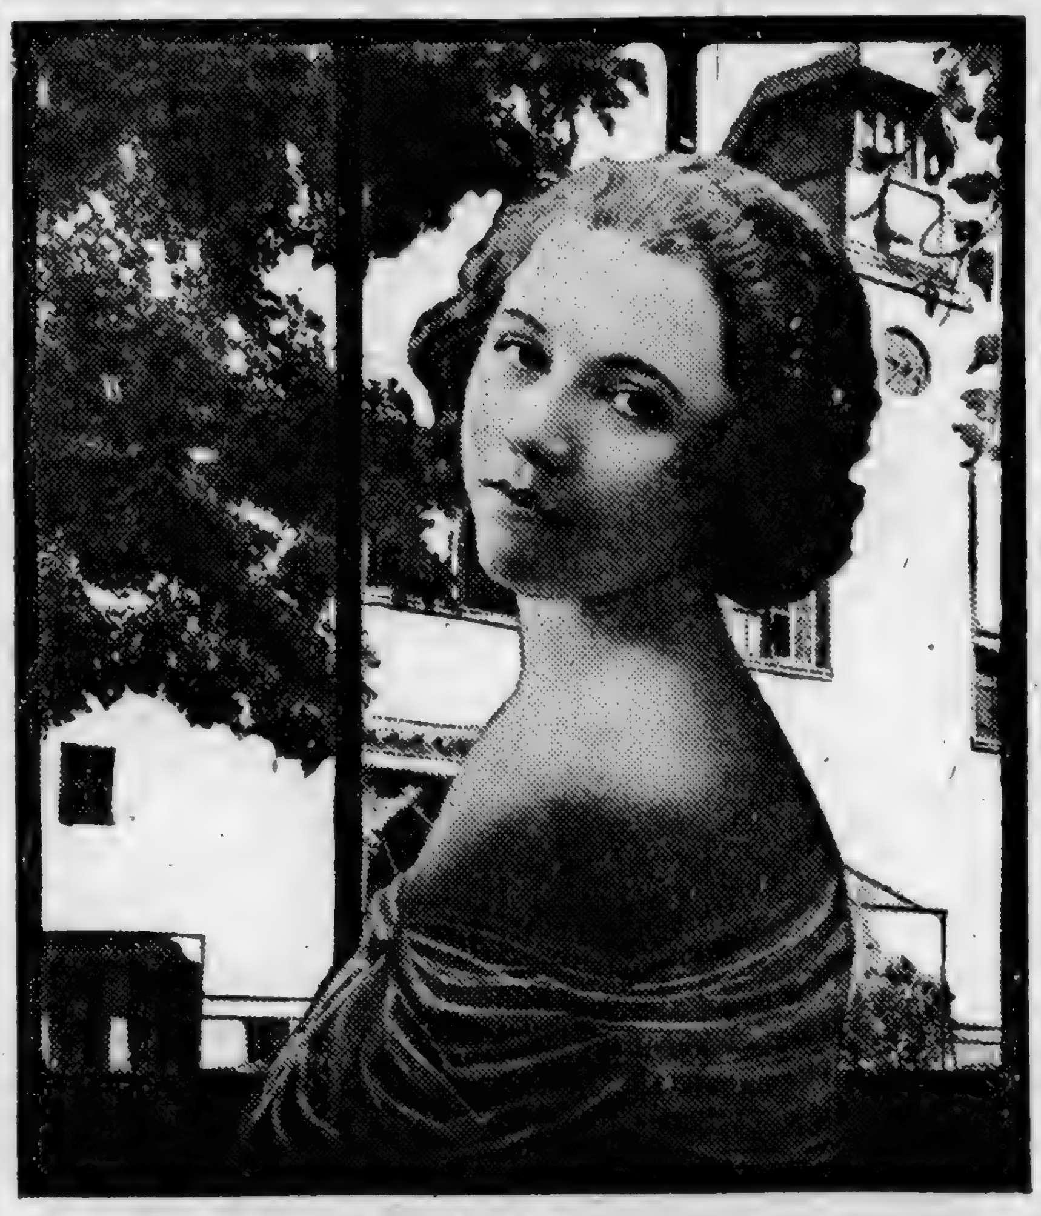
Except for tourist and sports coats very few new models have been shown, so far. Judging from these, pockets, collars and girdles are going to be featured in new developments. Coats will probably be less wide and will hang straight. Rumor has it that collars and pockets are to be larger than ever and that we may have a choice as to length in our outer garments for the new season.

The privilege of looking behind the scenes—that is, into the workrooms of those who are creating the new styles, might bring to view a coat like that shown in the picture. It is made of a smooth, soft cloth and has a girdle that goes all round the waist (which is something new in girdles) and hangs in long ends at the front. The coat hangs straight and is moderately full. The front is arranged in a long panel by means of one deep plait at each side.

The collar has an inlay of silk in a contrasting color, and this contrast is worked into the girdle. The pocket is very large and emphasized by stitching in narrow stripes. No one could overlook the cuffs, and this type of cuff is very promising, having appeared on several new models.

Let us hope that coats for spring will be as becoming as those of the present season, which are enticing enough to almost make one regret the passing of winter.

Old and New in Coiffures



No one tendency in hairdressing has seized the popular imagination for some time. This being the case, women have gone on doing their hair in any one of the several accepted styles, and each has followed the particular mode that pleases her best. The Bobby coiffure, of which one development is shown in the picture, has as many adherents as any. It has distinction and neatness to recommend it, but it is not always becoming.

Neatness is the imperative requirement in all the styles. Waved hair, too, is a necessity in the coiffure of today, whether it be simple or elaborate. No loose ends or straying locks are tolerated. Ends are disposed of—if they are in evidence anywhere—in smooth and carefully placed curls.

For evening wear, nearly all the approved coiffures are dressed high on the head. Rather large jeweled combs are their favorite decoration. But if one is the possessor of an old-fashioned comb of silver or gold filagree, or of coral or cameo, it may replace more modern conceptions, with much satisfaction to its wearer.

A very bewitching and original coiffure has appeared recently. It is a youthful affair, in common with the "Bobby." The hair is waved for it, parted at one side and brought down quite low over the forehead. It pursues its soft and waving way over the ears, to the nape of the neck, where it is turned under and pinned close to the head. The hair on the crown is arranged in a cluster of curls. These curls, instead of hanging down after the usual manner of curls, turn upward and are pinned to place on the crown. But their soft ends are free to nod a coquettish "good evening" above the top of the wearer's head.

Saving Material.

When, in cutting out a blouse or other garment from silk, there has been enough material allowed to give a certain amount of leeway in placing the pieces of the pattern on the silk, arranging to keep those pieces as much as possible toward one definite side of the breadth will often result in giving one a very available long, straight strip of silk, enough for a Windsor tie or a bag, when lack of forethought would leave, of the same amount of goods, nothing but small cut pieces, of comparatively little use to the needlewoman.

Neck Finish.

A pretty finish for the neck of a frock is to cut it round and trim with a band of fur.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

MR. MOON'S PORTRAIT.

"Do you see that beautiful portrait of myself?" asked Mr. Moon of the little Stars.

"Where?" asked the little Stars.

"Down in the water," answered Mr. Moon.

"That's not a portrait, is it?" asked one little Star in a timid voice.

"I'm not so sure I know what a portrait is," said the First Star of the Evening.

"Dear me, little Stars," said Mr. Moon, "you really should all go to school."

"We don't have school in the sky," twinkled another Star.

"It looks as though you should have school, though," said Mr. Moon. "Maybe I'll have to teach you myself."

"Oh what fun," said the Stars. "You'd be Professor Moon then and you'd have to wear spectacles."

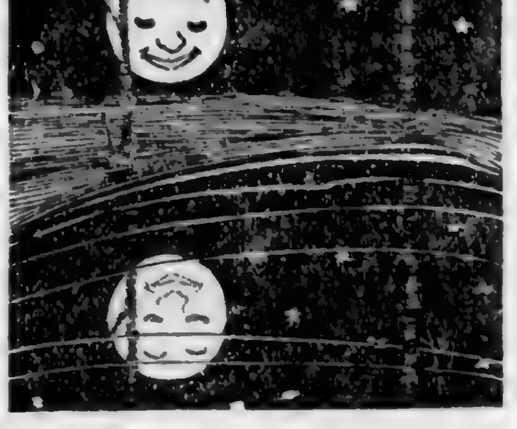
"Nonsense," said Mr. Moon. "I wouldn't have to wear spectacles at all. I'm quite bright enough without them, and I can see the whole world—so what do I need of spectacles, pray tell?"

"You're right, we're sure," said the Stars. "You really don't need spectacles at all. We were quite mistaken—quite."

"Good!" said Mr. Moon with a grin. "Then I shall tell you in the first place—the first of your school lessons—just what a portrait is. Now a portrait is a picture—a likeness of a person. See?"

"But you're not a person, Mr. Moon," said the Stars.

"But I'm the Moon, and that's far finer. Not everyone is the Moon. There is just one moon—ha, ha, ha! Now there are plenty of People, plenty of Children, plenty of Animals. There's no honor in being a Person. Not the least scrap of honor—and as for being the Moon—well, if you think of a higher, I'd like to know it. So why can't I have a portrait as well as a person?"



"The Water Is My Photographer."

"There is no reason why you don't," said the little Stars. They felt that they were being extremely stupid and that they certainly needed schooling.

"And the portrait is down in the water, you say?" asked one of the Stars so as to appear bright.

"Just what I said," answered Mr. Moon.

"And why don't you have it up in the sky in your home?"

"Because," said Mr. Moon, "I'm too famous to keep my portrait in my home. I'm like a noble creature whose portrait they would put in a picture gallery for thousands and thousands to gaze upon. That's why my portrait is in the water. Here am I up in the sky, and my portrait is down below. They can look at both—those People. They have a great treat."

"Yes," said one of the Stars, "don't they call that thing that is down in the water a reflection? I've heard it called that by some People, I'm sure. Or else the Cloud Fairies have told me that."

"Some people," answered Mr. Moon slowly, "are apt to say anything. That's why you shouldn't pay attention to them. Now I say something! There is all the difference in the world between anything and something."

"Of course," said one of the Stars. "They are two different words and mean different things."

"That doesn't always follow," said Mr. Moon. "Some words are different and mean the same. Oh, dear, how plainly I see that you are all very much in need of a schooling."

They all looked down at the reflection of the Moon in the water below, and then they looked at Mr. Moon.

"Whether that is a reflection or a portrait," said one of the Stars, "it looks very much like you, Mr. Moon."

"Of course it does, of course it does," said Mr. Moon. "That's because I always go to the best photographer."

"To whom do you go?" asked the First Star of the Evening.

"The water is my photographer," said Mr. Moon, "and we always arrange for a portrait on a clear night. He has taken me round as I am now, and when I am in my various shapes. For it is something worth while to be the photographer of the Moon—the only Moon in the World!"

FRUIT LAXATIVE FOR SICK CHILD

"California Syrup of Figs" can't harm tender stomach, liver and bowels.

Every mother realizes, after giving her children "California Syrup of Figs" that this is their ideal laxative, because they love its pleasant taste and it thoroughly cleanses the tender little stomach, liver and bowels without griping.

When cross, irritable, feverish, or breath is bad, stomach sour, look at the tongue, mother! If coated, give a teaspoonful of this harmless "fruit laxative," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, sour bile and undigested food passes out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again. When its little system is full of cold, throat sore, has stomach-ache, diarrhoea, indigestion, colic—remember, a good "inside cleaning" should always be the first treatment given.

Millions of mothers keep "California Syrup of Figs" handy; they know a teaspoonful today saves a sick child tomorrow. Ask at the store for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has directions for babies, children of all ages and grown-ups printed on the bottle. Adv.

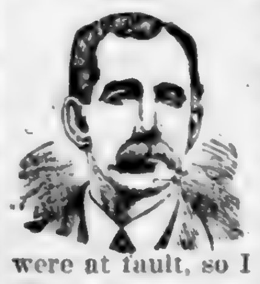
A MINISTER'S CONFESSION



Rev. W. H. Warner, Myersville, Md., writes: "My trouble was sciatica. My back was affected and took the form of lumbago. I also had neuralgia, cramps in my muscles, pressure or sharp pain on the top of my head, and nervous dizzy spells. I had other symptoms showing my kidneys were at fault, so I took Dodd's Kidney Pills. They were the means of saving my life. I write to say that your medicine restored me to perfect health." WOMEN! IT IS MAGIC! LIFT OUT ANY CORN

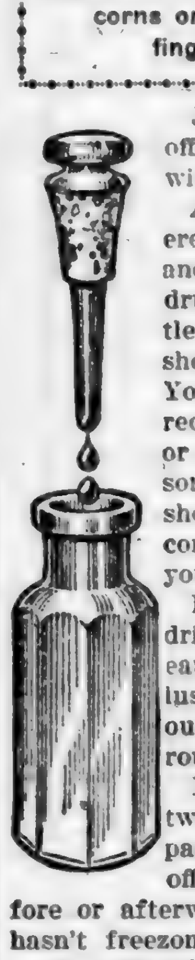
Apply a few drops then lift corns or calluses off with fingers—no pain.



Just think! You can lift off any corn or callus without pain or soreness.

A Cincinnati man discovered this ether compound and named it freezone. Any druggist will sell a tiny bottle of freezone, like here shown, for very little cost. You apply a few drops directly upon a tender corn or callus. Instantly the soreness disappears, then shortly you will find the corn or callus so loose that you can lift it right off.

Freezone is wonderful. It dries instantly. It doesn't eat away the corn or callus, but shrivels it up without even irritating the surrounding skin.

Hard, soft or corns between the toes, as well as painful calluses, lift right off. There is no pain before or afterwards. If your druggist hasn't freezone, tell him to order a small bottle for you from his wholesale drug house.—adv.

WELL DESIGNED ATTRACTIVE HOME

Abode Which Will at a Glance Stamp Owners as Persons of Refinement.

WORTH WHILE AS INVESTMENT

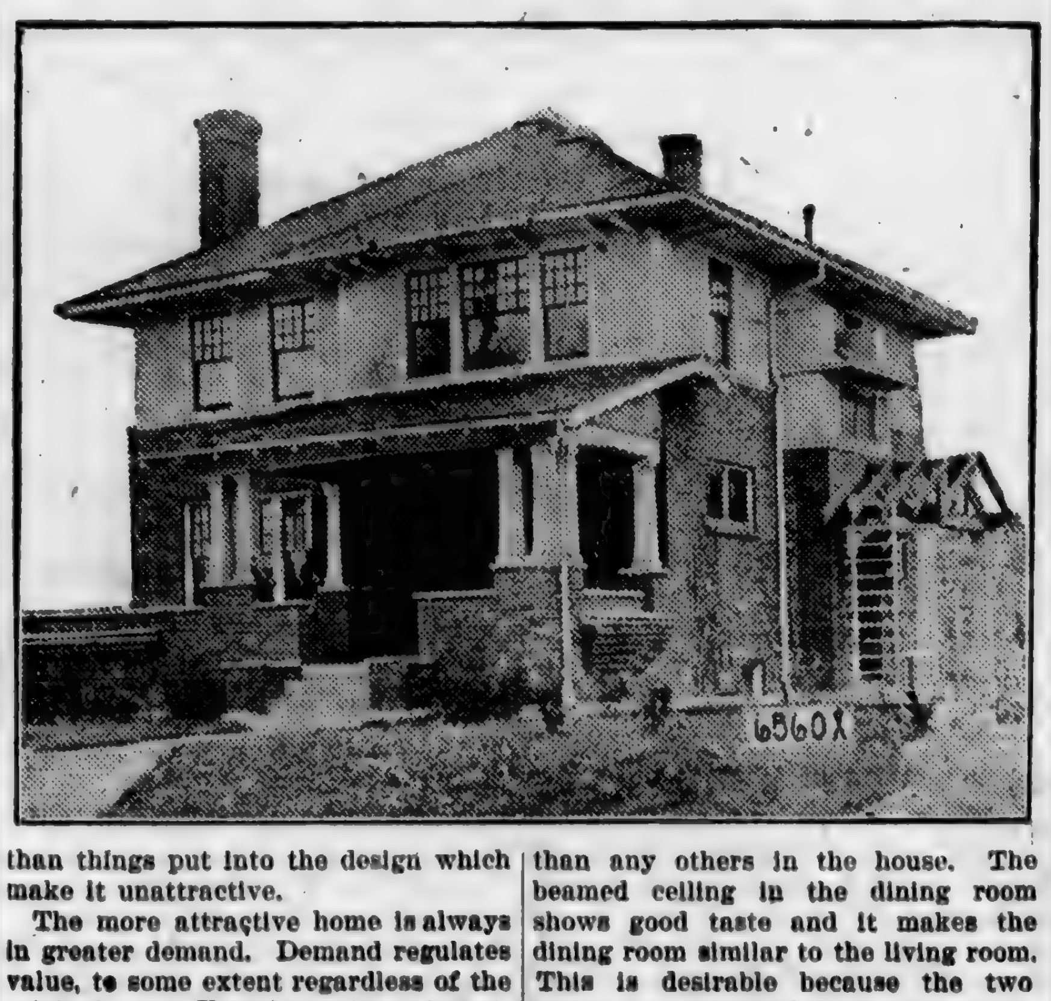
Here Is a House That Need Not Be Unduly Expensive, but Has Been Planned for the Extreme in Comfort of Occupants.

By WILLIAM A. RADFORD.

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only enclose two-cent stamp for reply.

A home to some extent shows how progressive and ambitious its owner is. If it is well designed and attractive the passer-by immediately concludes that the owner is a particular and ambitious man. If it simply consists of four walls and a roof it would rather quickly be said that the owner is content with small things and does not possess the ambition with which to advance.

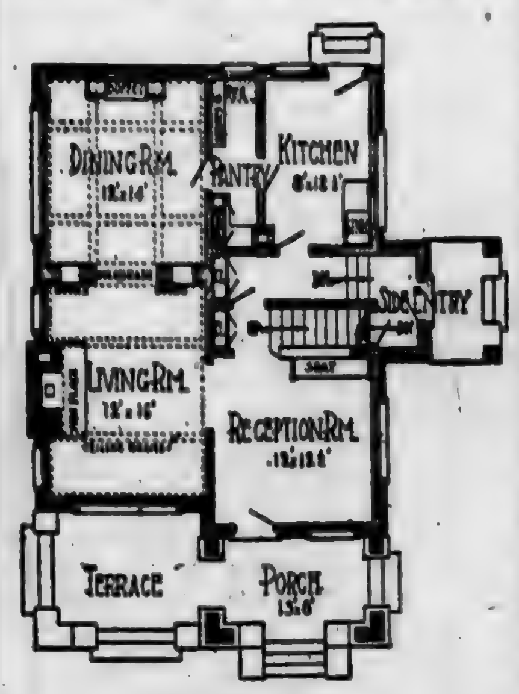
To have a home well designed and attractive does not mean, as might hastily be concluded, the most expensive home. Many features can be brought into a design which make it attractive and are no more expensive than things put into the design which make it unattractive.



The more attractive home is always in greater demand. Demand regulates value, to some extent regardless of the original cost. Your home is an investment, as well as a thing you have pride in, and at some later time you may desire to sell it. When this time comes the more attractive house you have built will show a greater value of your investment.

A greater value is what you look for in other investments. Why not embody the idea in the home you are going to build? In addition, you will then have something of which you can be more proud. Attractiveness is free, so don't neglect it.

Materials entering into the construction, as well as workmanship, are other things which should be given earnest thought before anything definite is decided on. They may add some to the cost, but this addition will be more than made up for by the additional life of the house.



First-Floor Plan.

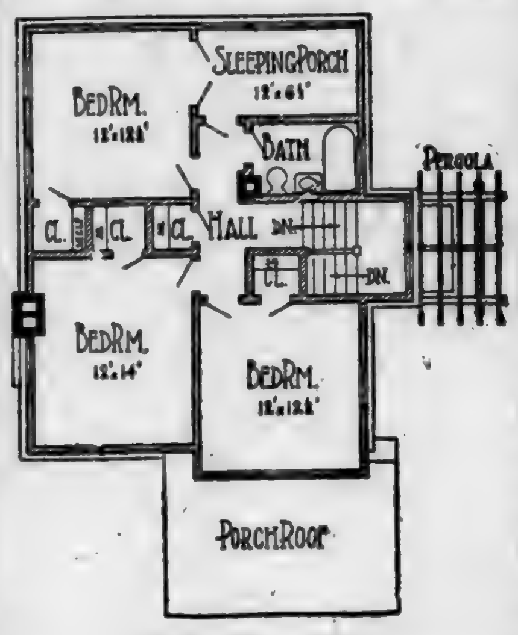
Suppose your house cost $4,000 and that by adding $100 to the cost of material and workmanship you increase the life ten years. If the house lasted 50 years, each year would show a depreciation of $80 in the $4,000. Ten years' life in the house is, then, worth $800. So note that by adding $100 to the original cost you can get the ten years of additional life, which is valued at $800.

The house as illustrated here will be found of interest as regards both its exterior appearance and the materials of which it is designed to be built.

Brick veneer is used for the outside up to the sills of the second-floor windows, and from there up to the box cornice cement plaster is used. This not only gives a longer life to the house but today is proving popular in most sections of the country.

The porch runs into a terrace through what would be termed a colonnade in interior design. The terrace in front of the living room serves all the purposes of the much-desired porch in front of the living room. In this way, however, there is no porch roof to obstruct the light coming through the windows into the living room.

Entering the reception room from the porch, one window in front, two in the side and a seat built in the corner by the stairway, give an inviting feeling. This is further added to on entering the living room. With a nice beamed ceiling and large fireplace the attention of everyone is immediately attracted. A colonnade connects the living and dining rooms. Bookcases are built in the colonnade, and both together add much to the artistic appearance of the room.



Second-Floor Plan.

In the living room there are three large windows in a group in front and two on the side, while in the dining room there are three large windows on the side. This makes both rooms nice and light, which is very desirable, since they are the two rooms occupied more than any others in the house. The beamed ceiling in the dining room shows good taste and it makes the dining room similar to the living room. This is desirable because the two rooms are connected by the colonnade, giving an open run-together appearance.

The stairway to the second floor is conveniently located in the back part of the reception room, where also are two closets for coats. People entering from the side or rear often do so because of the dirt they bring into the house. The two closets and location of the stairway with respect to the side entrance allows such people to enter, hang up their coats and go directly upstairs without tracking their dirt through the house.

Among things in the kitchen which would be appreciated by the housekeeper are the two windows over the sink and a place where the kitchen table might be placed. The exceptionally large pantry between the dining room and kitchen would be appreciated also. It is nearly 14 feet long and about four feet wide. The refrigerator is placed in the end of the pantry next to the outside wall. A door is constructed in this outer wall so that the refrigerator may be filled from the outside. This is convenient from many points of view.

Going to the second floor it will be noted that the landing of the stairway is located in a bay of the house. This is, from an artistic point of view, always looked on with favor.

The hall has been centrally located so that it is not only convenient to go from one room to the other on the second floor, but further than this, a minimum of space has been taken up and it is possible to have all of the other rooms larger.

There are three bedrooms, a sleeping porch and the bath off from this hall. Each of the bedrooms has nice large closets and from three to four windows, which allow plenty of light and make the rooms as cheerful as any of the others in the house.

A double door connects the sleeping porch with the back bedroom. It can be entered either by way of this bedroom or directly from the hall. This makes it convenient to the bath or makes it possible to use it as an individual sleeping room when necessary.

The Reason.

"There seems to be more business about the seaside resorts than about the mountains. How do you explain it?"

"I guess it is because things are dull now and then in the mountains, but there is always more or less booming of the sea."

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of Sunday School Course of Moody Bible Institute.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR FEBRUARY 25

JESUS AT POOL OF BETHESDA.

LESSON TEXT—John 5:1-15.

GOLDEN TEXT—It was Jesus which had made him whole.—John 5:15.

Following the events of last Sunday's lesson, Jesus went to Jerusalem to attend the feast (v. 1). He went up according to the requirements of the Jewish law (Ex. 34:23; see Gal. 4:4), but he was not satisfied with the conventional fulfilling of the duties for that occasion, nor was he occupied with social and commercial functions, but in "going about doing good." The feast was an occasion of joy and mirth on every hand, but in the midst of it is this great need so graphically pictured in this lesson. How true this is to our daily experience. Teachers should appeal to the imagination of their scholars and describe as vividly as possible this pool. Let them depict a room, on the floor of which is a pool; in one corner of the room a stairway leading up to the ceiling; surrounding the room, at the top of the wall a broad walk; on the wall, looking down toward the floor and the pool is "a multitude of them that were blind, halt and withered." These were the wretched ones who sought the pool, and evidently Jesus sought the most wretched of this company.

I. Jesus went where there was need (v. 6). In the midst of this company Jesus "saw" this man lie. He had been there often (v. 7), and his case seemed to be beyond all hope, but there is nothing too hard for God (Gen. 18:14; Jer. 32:17).

II. Jesus throws the responsibility upon the man (v. 6). Jesus had eyes not only to see need, but he also saw God's and his own personal power to relieve the need. The question is, what do we see as we journey through life?

III. Jesus was moved with compassion (Matt. 14:14). He always has that feeling when he looks upon suffering and the misfortunes of men (Heb. 13:8; 4:15-16; Isa. 63:9). Jesus does not do for the man what the man can do for himself; so he makes his first appeal to the man's desire and, through his desire, to the man's will, "Wilt thou be made whole?" The fact that he has been a long time in his predicament, or the fact that a sinner has been a long time in an evil state is no reason for supposing that Jesus will not take interest in him or that he cannot save and help and heal him (Matt. 9:21; Luke 8:43; Acts 3:2). His question throws the whole matter upon the will of the man. Jesus is willing and able; the only question is, are we willing?

IV. Jesus commands the impossible. The man thought the only way he could be made whole was through the efficiency of the waters in this pool, but Jesus, by speaking a word, had the power that would heal him (Ps. 107:20); so today it is the power of the word of Christ that can save all who believe on him (Rom. 1:16). All we have to do to live is to hear and believe (John 5:24). With the command of Christ, "Rise, take up thy bed," was enabling power. The cure was not only complete, but it was instantaneous (Acts 3:7,8).

V. He worked a complete cure. He was made whole even according to the question which Jesus had asked at the outset. The man at once began to use this Christ-given strength by taking up his bed, and doing exactly as he was commanded (II Tim. 3:12). Jesus likes these hard cases, those of "long standing" (v. 5). He also likes those that are the results of sin, for that was his work in the world (v. 14; Matt. 1:21).

VI. Opposition and danger (vv. 10-15). The objection raised was that Jesus had transgressed the Jewish law. The man's answer to this was, "He hath made me whole." The word of God is our law (Matt. 17:5). The strength that Jesus gives us is to be used in obedience to him in glorifying his name. The man did not tell the Jews who it was that made him whole, because he did not know, himself; but as soon as he found out who it was he told them without fear or hesitancy. He did not even wait for them to ask him, but sought an opportunity for witnessing (v. 15). Any man who is truly saved will at once give his witness to others. The admonition which Jesus gave to this man (v. 14) still holds good. How many men we have seen who have been saved from the drink habit or some other evil in life, and who have grown indifferent or careless and returned to their sin only to have "a worse thing come unto them." It is interesting to notice that Jesus performed this miracle in the face of great opposition and danger.

Summary: (1) Jesus cures the sick, not by what he does to them, but what he does in them.

(2) Christianity is the gospel for the body as well as for souls of men.

(3) The gospel of Jesus is the beginning of a new life for every man who accepts it.

(4) Sickness and trouble are frequently the instruments of God's providence, bringing men to realize their sins and their need.

(5) No matter how great the progress of modern medicine or the skill of physicians, there is always the need of the Great Physician.

Uric Acid!

Ever since the discovery of Scheele in 1775 that uric acid was found within the body—most eminent physicians agree that rheumatism is caused by it; also many distressing symptoms as headache, pain in back, stomach distress, swollen feet and ankles, gout, etc.

It was Dr. Pierce of the Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N.Y., who discovered a new agent—called Anuric, a harmless remedy that if taken before meals will carry off the uric acid from the system and in this way the pains and aches, the creaky joints and all the distressing symptoms of rheumatism and other maladies disappear. You can easily prove this yourself, by obtaining Anuric at almost any drug store, or send Dr. Pierce 10c. for trial package. Try it and be convinced that Anuric is many times more active than lithia and eliminates uric acid as hot water melts sugar.

"Are the Jibways happily married?"

"Apparently so. At least, they are not the sort of people who figure in problem plays."

"No?"

"Mrs. Jibway belongs to so many clubs that she never has time to figure out whether her soul is being starved or not and Mr. Jibway is so absorbed in business that he has long since forgotten that he ever had a soul."

Dose of His Own Medicine.

"You are not compounding that prescription as I would," remarked the stranger who had dropped in. "Dump in a little of this and a pinch of that."

"What do you mean? Are you a druggist?"

"Nope."

"Then what do you mean by telling me how to run my business?"

"Oh, I'm the manager of the ball team. I notice you in the bleachers occasionally handing me unsolicited advice."

Tri---Township on Map.

Interesting Data Furnished by B. V. Widney, Ex-President Tri-Township Farmers' Institute Association—Remarkable Record Made Last Year—Is Recognized by State and Institute Workers as the Live Institute Center

The fifth annual report of the Department of Agriculture Extension for the year ending June 30, 1916, has just been published and distributed by Purdue University. In the number of paid members reported the first five counties rank as follows:—Marion, 1164; Allen, 750; Hendricks, 699; Carrol, 684, and DeKalb, 657.

Of DeKalb's 657 members, 302 belonged to the Tri-township Farmer's Institute which was held in St. Joe. Had each institute in the county worked as hard as the Tri-township people the county membership would have been 3,020, three times Marion county which is thickly populated and has 15 different institute associations.

The aggregate attendance for 13 institutes in Kosciusko County was 3,024 which number was practically the aggregate attendance at our Tri-township meeting last year. 51 counties holding from one to nine institutes had a less total aggregate attendance that the Tri-township Association.

The aggregate attendance for Allen was 7,275 and DeKalb 4,129 of which in the latter county 3,023 attended at St. Joe leaving 1,006 for the other nine institutes in the county, an average of 111.8 each.

From these figures we are led to the conclusion that Allen County is more progressive than DeKalb along agricultural lines which we beleive is largely due to their having a start of two years with a county agent. It is evident that the southeast corner of DeKalb is leading other districts of the county by far in trying to promote better rural conditions. The fact that our own community exceeded 51 counties in the state in its activities is cause enough for saying that it is one of the leading communities of the state, a fact of which we are proud. Our good roads, stone pikes and efficient public schools which have made such marked progress the last two years testify to the truth of the above statement. The three townships Sunday School Associations being given the grade of Top Notch by the Indiana Sunday School Association speaks for the christian leadership of the Tri-townships. All of which makes us feel very good.

Authorities tell us that at the track a good start is the race half won. The tri-townships have a splendid start. Thats all. Why not make the most of our good start and keep the lead. The Farmer's Institute is the primer in rural advancement. There are feeding demonstrations, soil demonstrations, crop demonstrations, poultry demonstrations, Home and Farm Tours, Short Courses, Boys and Girls Clubs and many other things which the State and United States, jointly, stand ready to conduct and finance right here in our own community just as soon as they know that we are disposed to make the most out of such help and that we want these things.

Since the County Agent has come we already have a Hog Feeding demonstration going on near Auburn and we understand that arrangements are being made to locate a Poultry Demonstration Farm here in the Tri-townships. A Home Tour is being considered by the County Agent to take place sometime after harvest. If we give loyal support to these first efforts along this line and the extension department sees that we respond to their work they will send many a good thing our way, especially when we have a county agent to look out for our interests.

Now that we have a good start let us set a pace that will mark the Tri-townships as one of the bright spots in the state with the best farmers, the best merchants and highest citizenship. To do this, the first thing is for each of us to say to our County Agent, "Go ahead, depend on my hearty support", and then, live up to our word. Those who come to scoff will remain to pray when they see the results.

It Works! Try It

Tells how to loosen a sore, tender corn so it lifts out without pain.

Good news spreads rapidly and druggists here are kept busy dispensing freezone, the ether discovery of a Cincinnati man, which is said to loosen any corn so it lifts out with the fingers.

Ask at any pharmacy for a quarter ounce of freezone, which will cost very little, but is said to be sufficient to rid one's feet of every hard or soft corn or callus.

You apply just a few drops on the tender, aching corn and instantly the soreness is relieved, and soon the corn is so shriveled that it lifts out without pain. It is a sticky substance which dries when applied and never inflames or even irritates the adjoining tissue.

This discovery will prevent thousands of deaths annually from lockjaw and infection heretofore resulting from the suicidal habit of cutting corns.

Fairview Church Struck by Lightning at Early Morning-2 other Small Fires Later.

The greatest loss by fire in this community for some time was that of Friday morning, at 3:00 o'clock, when Fairview church was burned to the ground during the electrical storm. It is something rather rare fn winter time for lightning to play havoc as in this case and being located so far from towh it took some time for help to be summonsed. The call was made and the fire department hurried to the scene but was unable to accomplish anything. The stroke was noticed by Mr. L. J. Likes, who lives on the Knight farm, south of the church, but fire was not in evidence until about a half hour later and by that time it had a good start. Some few things were removed such as pulpit, organ carpet, a few chairs and four seats. The insurance amounted to $1,300 in all, $300 of which was on contents. The Insurance Adjuster fixed the loss at $1,210. A meeting will be called soon to determine whether the church be rebuilt or not. It is not definitely known although reports have it settled. The church was built in 1891 and since the revival meeting had taken on new life and bright hopes for the church were in evidence. A number of substantial members had been received into the church. The loss cannot be estimated to the community.

The second fire of the week was that of the Pumping Station on the B. & O. near Concord. The building being only a small part wood was not a very serious loss. The pumping was continued Monday as the men soon put it in shape. The fire occurred Saturday evening.

Sunday evening the fire bell rang and fire was located at the Iona Woodcox premises. Reports had it at first that the house was on fire and the boys made the run in good time through the heavy mud and when they reached the place it happened to be the manure pile. Sparks from a train supposed to have set fire to the straw. A large crowd gathered in a short time.

Lloyd Bertram Engle was born near St. Joe, Indiana, Dec. 11, 1881. On Feb. 22, 1917, in the prime of life, death terminated his earth life at the age—35 years, 2 months and 11 days. His matrimonial union with Esther Pearl Tyndall was solemnized on Apr. 5, 1902. They soon after changed their residence to Hillsdale County, Michigan. Eight years later they took up residence in Ft. Wayne, Ind. When they had been there six years they returned to DeKalb County where their residence has been in St. Joe or nearby. Their children have been three:-Pauline Beatrice, Evelyne Berniece and Lloyd Franklin. These with their mother survive to mourn his departure.

Sometime before his marriage, Mr. Engle became a Christian and united with the Methodist Protestant Church in St. Joe. In Michigan and Ft. Wayne, he and wife had their fellowship in the Methodist Episcopal Church. His last illness was from Tuberculosis. It was but recently that it confined him to his home and bed: but once it prostrated him, it quickly terminated his days.

For some weeks he and family were much of the time in the home of his step father, James H. Harter, helping him care for his wife, Mr Engle's mother. It was here he himself became helpless, and was kindly cared for till death. He thus expired near the bedside of his mother. Franklin Engle, his father, died in March, 1889. Besides wife and children, two brothers, a sister, and his mother survive him.

The deceased was a companionable, gentle, sympathetic, husband and father, and greatly beloved in his home. It is very sad that he had to be taken from it in the prime of life, when so greatly needed in it by his wife and children. Now that he, the main stay in the home, has been taken from them, his companion and children will need our practical sympathy. Let us not forget them.

Funeral services were held from the Methodist Church, Sunday at 1 o'clock, Rev. L. W. Spayd, officiating. E. R. Kinsey, funeral director. Interment in Riverside cemetery.

CARD OF THANKS

We extend to all those who assisted us, during our recent illness and death in our home, our sincere thanks and appreciation of their many kindnesses.

Emma S. Tustison was born near St. Joe, Indiana, Jan. 12, 1862. Death prevailing on Feb. 23, 1917, fixed her life term with us at 55 years, 1 month and 11 days. When her parents died about forty years ago, she found a home, with good foster-mother care, in the home of her sister, Mrs. Flora S. Simanton, living near St. Joe. With her she lived continuously until death, as she was never married.

Her Christian life dates from near her fourteenth year, when, with her brother Charles, she confessed her faith in Christ and was baptized into the fellowship of the Christian Church at Coburn's Corners, three miles south-east of St. Joe. On May 2, 1886, she and thirteen others, as charter members uniting in fellowship, formed themselves as Church of Christ in St. Joe, Ind. In this church she continued her fellowship till death.

Having no home or family of her own, Miss Tustison was occupied a great deal of her time in homes of need and sickness. Being thus "a friend in nee" she was "a friend indeed." For these efficient and numerous ministries in the homes about her, she will be tenderly and affectionately remembered by the many. She was one of eight children, of whom, the survivors are:—Martin, Nelson and Charles Tustison, Mrs. Louise Burley and Mrs. Flora Simanton.

Funeral services were held from the Christian Church, Monday at 11:00 o'clock, Rev. Spayd, officiating. Interment in Riverside cemetery.

ATTACKS LOBBY ON EXCISE BILL

Governor Goodrich Is Making Hot Opponents of His Measure.

TO MAKE SEVERAL SPEECHES

Defends Measure Before Muncie Chamber of Commerce—Bill to Raise Salaries of Township Trustees Killed by House.

Indianapolis. — Governor Goodrich has taken the stump in defense of the excise tax bill, which is one of the most important of the administrative measures before the legislature, and which is meeting strong opposition from the corporations of the state. He has addressed a large meeting of one of the clubs of this city, and made a scathing attack on the lobby that is working against the bill. He also addressed the Muncie chamber of commerce in defense of the bill, and spoke to large crowds of business men at Lafayette and Kokomo. He is seeking to work up a sentiment for the bill and to combat the opposition. The governor appears deeply interested in the excise tax measure, more so than in any one of the other pieces of proposed legislation.

Lively Hearing on Excise Bill.

There was a lively time at the public hearing held by judiciary B committee of the senate for consideration of the excise tax bill. Governor Goodrich appeared before the committee in behalf of the bill and presented his reasons and arguments in favor of its passage. There were present also a large crowd of corporation men from over the state who opposed the bill.

A score or more senate bills were sent to engrossment in the senate, among them being Senator Lanz's bill to reapportion the state for congressional purposes. Senator Chamber's bill to abolish the state statistician also passed second reading without amendment or objection and Senator Kinder's bill permitted railroads to charge 2½ cents a mile instead of 2 cents a mile was read a second time without objection.

This is the first time in many years that a governor in Indiana has appeared before a legislative committee in behalf of any proposed legislation. It was understood that the committee would make a divided report, some of the members favoring the passage of the bill and others being opposed to it.

While the movie fans were gaining a victory in the senate the boxing fans were delivered a blow in the house, where the measure to legalize boxing failed to carry. The vote on the boxing measure was 46 to 40. Representative Miller, the author, expects to call up the bill again. Both measures are being opposed by the church people.

Fight the Hemphill Bill.

The senate committee on manufactures made a divided report on the Hemphill bill giving brewers and distillers the right to manufacture liquor for shipment outside the state after the bill becomes effective. One member of the committee, Senator Bracken of Frankfort, signed a minority report recommending that the bill be indefinitely postponed, but the majority report recommending its passage was adopted.

The bill provides that after April 2, 1918, when the prohibition law becomes effective, it shall not be unlawful for any manufacturer of intoxicating liquors to manufacture such goods for shipment to other states where the sale of liquor is not prohibited by law.

It provides that a permit for such operation shall be given by the governor and that the manufacturers desiring to engage in that business shall pay a fee of $4,000 a year. The manufacturer would give bond of $20,000.

Bill Is Referred.

The bill was introduced by Senator Hemphill and was referred to the committee on manufacturers. Senator Mercer of Peru, chairman of the committee, and Senators Wolfson of Indianapolis, Dobyns of Greensburg, McConaha of Richmond, Summers of South Bend and Erskine of Evansville signed the majority report and Senator Bracken was alone in his minority report.

The bill recites that the operation of the prohibitory statute will cause the loss of much property in Indiana which cannot be converted into any use other than for the manufacture of liquor and that the owners of such property should be permitted to continue the operation of their plants.

Governor Goodrich allowed a bill to become a law without his signature which authorizes county commissioners to build an improved road from a county seat to the nearest railroad station where the county seat is not on a railroad. He said he believed the bill to be unconstitutional.

To Protect Creditors.

A bill provided for the garnisheeing of wages under certain conditions was passed by the house by a vote of 55 to 31, after encountering a hard fight. The bill provides for the collection of certain amount after judgments have been given and execution ordered.

A bill is in preparation, backed by the Democratic and Republican state organizations, to amend the state-wide primary law. It would eliminate the presidential preference vote at primaries and also United States senators. These would be nominated by state conventions, as in former years.

For New Medical Building.

Representative Gentry has introduced a bill in the house to appropriate $350,000 for the erection of a building for the Indiana University School of Medicine in this city. The old medical college building was damaged by fire recently and rendered unfit for use.

Representative Harker has introduced a bill to authorize cities of the fifth class to join with churches and other organizations in the establishment of hospitals.

The house killed the bill which sought to increase the salaries of all township trustees in the state. Thus far no salary increases have been made by the legislature. A bill has been introduced to increase the salaries of judges of the supreme and appellate courts to $9,000 a year, but it has made no progress.

A favorable report has been made by a committee in the house on the administration bill to abolish the state oil inspection department.

The governor and other Republican leaders are making strong efforts to put through the bills that are included in the administration legislative program.

Other Administrative Bills.

Among the important administration measures pending, in addition to the excise tax bill, are the following:

Creation of a state highway commission of four members.

Establishment of a state department of banking and insurance to take over these divisions of the auditor of state's office.

Abolition of the office of state statistician.

Creation of a conservation commission of four members, to be appointed by the governor.

Legislation to make the office of attorney general appointive by the governor instead of elective.

Abolition of the position of counsel to the public service commission and legal clerk to the governor.

Assessment of local utilities by the state board instead of by county boards of review.

Abolition of the oil inspection department and the transference of its duties to the pure food and drug department.

Legislation to make the impeachment of public officials less difficult.

Less than two weeks remain in which to get final action on this list of measures, and there are reasons to believe that some of them will never reach the final action stage. Democrats in the senate are opposed to the program, and since the senate is equally divided, with 25 Republicans and 25 Democrats, and one or two Republican members have been voting with the Democrats against some of the measures, it looks as if the governor's program will fail, at least in part.

Farm for Convicts.

The house passed the Dilworth bill to authorize the board of trustees of the state prison at Michigan City to lease farm land for farm purposes, to be worked by convicts and the products to be for the use of the prison. Another bill passed by the house is to create a second superior court in Vigo county. A bill has been introduced in the house to provide for pensions for disabled National Guard members or their widows.

To Amend Primary Election Law.

Democratic and Republican state leaders have agreed on a bill to amend the primary election law by eliminating second and third choices in the votes. The bill will be introduced in the senate.

The senate passed the Kinder bill to permit the issuance of short-term liquor licenses, to expire with the taking effect of the prohibition law on April 2, 1918. Also a bill to provide for publicity of the findings of the state board of accounts when a public official is found to be short through malfeasance in office. Installation of safety lamps in coal mines where gas is found is provided in another bill passed by the senate.

Excise Bill.

The excise tax bill was materially amended in the house, at the suggestion of the governor, and the proposed excise tax rates were reduced. The bill proposes to collect a tax from all Indiana corporations that hold a charter from the state and from all foreign corporations that do business in Indiana. The schedule of tax rates varies for the different classes of corporations, and it is estimated that the bill, if enacted into law, will produce several million dollars annually for the state treasury. Corporations from everywhere sent representatives here to fight it and the struggle over this bill has become the real sensational feature of the session.

Not in Effect Until April 1, 1918.

Attorney General Stansbury has given Senator Beardsley of Elkhart an official opinion to the effect that no part of the new state-wide prohibition law takes effect before the second day of April, 1918. It had been the understanding that all of the provisions of the law except the one prohibiting shipments of liquor and the one finally closing saloons would take effect when the governor makes public his proclamation declaring the acts of this session in force.

House Kills Miles Measure.

The house of representatives killed the Miles measure, which had the support of the state board of education, and stipulated that all teachers beginning their first term must be graduates from a commissioned high school and must have had at least a 12 weeks' course of instruction in a standard training school. The Miles bill encountered stubborn opposition, the principal object of attack being that clause providing that beginners must have taken a 12 weeks' course in a normal school in addition to being a graduate of commissioned high school.

WOMEN CRUSHED IN NEW YORK RIOTS

Thousands Storm the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel.

ATTEMPT TO SEE GOVERNOR

Police, Unable to Check Mob and Many Are Injured—Several Arrests Made After Property Is Destroyed.

New York, Feb. 26.—Women of the lower East side and other Jewish districts gathered in Madison square to protest against the high cost of living. Hundreds brought with them their children, some of them in arms, some of them in carriages. A minority of men also came, and at the height of the demonstration perhaps 3,500 were listening eagerly to speeches that were being delivered simultaneously from six stands.

Three hours of speech-making roused the crowd to an unexpected mood. It found its manifestation when Mrs. Bella Neuman Zilberman, one of those in charge of the meeting, cried:

"How many of you will go there and march about that palace of eats—the Waldorf-Astoria — where Governor Whitman is stopping, and show him that you are hungry? You need no leaders. Let your empty stomachs be your leaders."

"Five thousand of us!" cried the crowd, and before anyone was quite aware of what was happening the descent upon the Waldorf was under way.

Two Women Crushed.

Scouts who arrived in advance of the main body gave the hotel people an inkling of what was coming and calls for protection went at once to the West Thirtieth police station.

Sixty policemen were no match for the women. It took them three-quarters of an hour to quell the disturbance and when that had been accomplished two women had been trampled into unconsciousness, four arrests had been made, and the big hotel had been in a state of actual siege for nearly an hour.

Police Attacked by Women.

There was no attempt at organization as the mob moved up Fifth avenue. Children struggled to keep pace with their mothers.

The first attack was on the Thirty-fourth street doors of the hotel. The women in the front ranks found their way barred and took to beating on the glass panels.

"We want to see the governor," cried one of them to the men she could see standing inside.

"Our babies are starving," echoed those on the sidewalk.

At the end of half an hour Inspector Bolan and Capt. William Bailey agreed that argument and pushing with the hands would never get the situation under control. They began then to force the crowd back from the doors. The women shrieked protests and when Policeman Jordan began to tug at Isabella Sorkin, nineteen years old, a real issue was drawn.

Jordan was swept off his feet as though he had been a child. As he went down Miss Sorkin struck him in the mouth and before he could regain his feet 20 women had slapped or kicked him or torn at his clothing. But when assistance came Jordan had Miss Sorkin as the first prisoner of the afternoon. She was locked up on a charge of assault.

In the same melee Mrs. Lena Chernack was taken.

Rioting was resumed simultaneously in five different parts of the Bronx at night. Stands in several markets were overturned. Reserves were called out and made several arrests. The rioters said they were members of the "Anti-High Cost of Living League."

She paused again, but still he was mute and immobile.

"So now you know me—what I am. No other man has ever known or ever will. But I had to tell you the truth. It seems that the only thing my career had left uncalloused was my fundamental sense of honesty. So I had to come and tell you."

And still he held silence, attentive, but with a set face that betrayed nothing of the tenor of his thoughts.

Almost timidly, with nervously fumbling fingers, she extracted from her pocketbook a small ticket envelope.

"Max was afraid you might upset the performance again, as you did on my last appearance, Hugh," she said; "but I assured him it was just the shock of recognizing you that bowled me over. So I've brought you a box for tomorrow night. I want you to use it—you and Mr. Ember."

He broke in with a curt monosyllable: "Why?"

"Why—why because—because I want you—I suppose it's simply my vanity—to see me act. Perhaps you'll feel a little less hardly toward me if you see that I am really a great actress, that I give you up for something bigger than just love—"

"What rot!" he said with an odd, short laugh. "Besides, I harbor no resentment."

She stared, losing a little color, eyes darkening with apprehension.

"I did hope you'd come," she murmured.

"Oh, I'll come," he said with spirit. "Wild horses couldn't keep me away."

"Really, Hugh? And you don't mind? Oh, I'm so glad!"

"I really don't mind," he assured her with a strange smile. "But . . . would you mind excusing me one moment? I've forgotten something very important."

"Why, certainly . . ."

He was already at the telephone in the hallway, just beyond the living-room door. It was impossible to escape overhearing his words. The woman listened perforce with, in the beginning, a little visible wonder, then with astonishment, ultimately with a consternation that shook her with violent tremblings.

"Hello," said Whitaker; "get me Rector two-two-hundred. . . ."

"Hello? Rector two-two-hundred? North German Lloyd? . . . This is Mr. H. M. Whitaker. I telephoned you fifteen minutes ago about reservation on the George Washington, sailing Saturday . . . Yes. . . . Yes. . . . Yes, I promised to call for the ticket before noon, but I now find I sha'n't be able to go. Will you be kind enough to cancel it, if you please. . . . Thank you. . . . Goodby."

But when he turned back into the living room he found awaiting him a quiet and collected woman.

"Why did you do that?" she asked evenly

"Because," said Whitaker, "I've had my eyes opened. I've been watching the finest living actress play a carefully rehearsed role, one that she had given long study and all her heart to—but her interpretation didn't ring true. Mary, I admit, at first you got me: I believed you meant what you said. But only my mind believed it; my heart knew better, just as it has always known better, all through this wretched time of doubt and misery and separation you've subjected us both to. And that was why I couldn't trust myself to answer you; for if I had, I should have laughed for joy. O Mary, Mary!" he cried, his voice softening, "my dear, dear woman, you can't lie to love! You betray yourself in every dear word that would be heartless, in every adorable gesture that would seem final! And love knows better always. . . . Of course I shall be in that box tomorrow night; of course I shall be there to witness your triumph! And after you've won it, dear, I shall carry you off with me . . ."

He opened his arms wide, but with a smothered cry she backed away, placing the table between them.

"No!" she protested; and the words were almost sobs—"No!"

"Yes!" he exclaimed exultantly. "Yes! A thousand times yes! It must be so!"

With a swift movement she seized her muff and scarf from the chair and fled to the door. There, pausing, she turned, her face white and blazing.

"It is not true!" she cried. "You are mistaken. Do you hear me? You are utterly mistaken. I do not love you. You are mad to think it. I have just told you I don't love you. I am afraid of you; I daren't stay with you for fear of you. I—I despise you!"

"I don't believe it!" he cried, advancing.

But she was gone. The hall door slammed before he could reach it.

CHAPTER XIX.

One Way Out.

Toward eight in the evening, after a day-long search through all his accustomed haunts, Ember ran Whitaker to earth in the dining room of the Primordial. The young man, alone at table, was in the act of topping off an excellent dinner with a still more excellent cordial and a super-excellent cigar.

He wore rough tweeds, and they were damp and baggy; his boots were muddy; his hair was a trifle disorderly. The ensemble made a figure wildly incongruous to the soberly splendid and stately dining hall of the Primordial club, with its sparse patronage of members in evening dress.

Ember, himself as severely beautiful in black and white as the ceremonious livery of today permits a man to be, was wonder-struck at sight of Whitaker in such unconventional guise, at such a time, in such a place. With neither invitation nor salutation, he slipped into a chair on the other side of the table, and stared.

Whitaker smiled benignantly upon him, and called a waiter.

Ember, always abstemious, lifted his hand and smiled a negative smile.

Whitaker dismissed the waiter.

"Well . . . ?" he inquired cheerfully.

"What right have you got to look like that?" Ember demanded.

"The right of every free-born American citizen to make an ass of himself according to the dictates of his conscience. I've been exploring the dark backwards and abysm of the Bronx—afoot. Got caught in the rain on the way home. Was late getting back, and dropped in here to celebrate."

"I've been looking for you everywhere, since morning."

"I suspected you would be. That's why I went walking—to be lonesome and thoughtful for once in a way."

Ember stroked his chin with thoughtful fingers.

"You've heard the news, then?"

"In three ways," Whitaker returned, with calm.

"How's that—three ways?"

"Through the newspapers, the billboards, and from the lips of my wife."

Ember opened his eyes wide.

"You've been to see her?"

"She called this morning—"

But Ember interrupted, thrusting a ready and generous hand across the table:

"My dear man, I am glad!"

Whitaker took the proffered hand readily and firmly. "Thank you. . . . I was saying: she called this morning to inform me that, though wedded once, we must be strangers now—and evermore!"

"But you—of course—you argued that nonsense out of her head."

"To the contrary—again."

"But—my dear man!—you said you were celebrating; you permitted me to congratulate you just now—"

"The point is," said Whitaker, with a bland and confident grin; "I've succeeded in arguing that nonsense out of my head—not hers—mine."

Ember gave a helpless gesture. "I'm afraid this is one of my stupid nights . . ."

"I mean that, though Mary ran away from me, wouldn't listen to reason, I have, in the course of an afternoon's hard tramping, come to the conclusion that there is nothing under the sun which binds me to sit back and accept whatever treatment she purposes according me by courtesy of Jules Max."

Whitaker bent forward, his countenance discovering a phase of seriousness hitherto masked by his twisted smile.

"I mean I'm tired of all this poppycock. Unless I'm an infatuated ass, Mary loves me with all her heart. She has made up her mind to renounce me partly because Max has worked upon her feelings by painting some lurid picture of his imminent artistic and financial damnation if she leaves him, partly because she believes, or has been led to believe, in this 'destroying angel' moonshine. Now she's got to listen to reason. So, likewise, Max."

"You're becoming more human word by word," commented Ember with open approval. "Continue; elucidate; I can understand how a fairly resolute lover with the gift of gab can talk a weak-minded, fond female into denying her pet superstition; but how you're going to get around Max passes my comprehension. The man unquestionably has her under contract—"

"But you forgot his god is Mammon," Whitaker put in. "Max will do anything in the world for money. Therein resides the kernel of my plan. It's simplicity itself: I'm going to buy him."

"Buy Max!"

"Body—artistic soul—and breeches," Whitaker affirmed confidently.

"Impossible!"

"You forget how well fixed I am. What's the use of my owning half the gold in New Guinea if it won't buy me what I already own by every moral and legal right?"

"He won't listen to you; you don't know Max."

"I'm willing to lay you a small bet that there will be no first performance at the Theater Max tomorrow night."

"You'll never persuade him—"

"I'll buy the show outright and my wife's freedom to boot—or else Max will begin to accumulate the local color of a hospital ward."

Ember smiled grimly. "You're beginning to convince even me. When, may I ask, do you propose to pull off this sporting proposition?"

"Do you know where Max can be found tonight?"

"At the theater—"

"Then the matter will be arranged at the theater between this hour and midnight."

"I doubt if you succeed in getting the ear of the great man before midnight; however, I'm not disposed to quibble about a few hours."

"But why shouldn't I?"

"Because Max is going to be the busiest young person in town tonight. And that is why I've been looking for you. . . . Conforming to his custom, he's been giving an advance glimpse of the production to the critics and a few friends in the form of a final grand dress rehearsal tonight. Again, in conformance with his custom, he has honored me with a bid. I've been chasing you all day to find out if you cared to go—"

"Eight o'clock and a bit after," Whitaker interrupted briskly, consulting his watch. "Here, boy," he hailed a passage page; "call a taxicab for me." And then, rising alertly: "Come along; I've got to hustle home; and make myself look respectable enough for the occasion; but at that, with luck, I fancy we'll be there before the first curtain."

This mood of faith, of self-reliance and assured optimism held unruffled throughout the dash homeward, his hurried change of clothing and the ride to the theater. Nothing that Ember, purposely pessimistic, could say or do availed to diminish the high buoyancy of his humor. He maintained a serene faith in his star, a spirited temper that refused to recognize obstacles in the way of his desire.

In the taxicab, en route to the Theater Max, he contrived even to distil a good omen from the driving autumnal downpour itself.

"On such a day as this," he told his doubting friend, "I won her first; on such a day I shall win her anew, finally and for all time!" . . .

From Broadway to Sixth avenue, Forty-sixth street was bright with the yellow glare of the huge sign in front of the Theater Max. But this night, unlike that other night when he had approached the stage of his wife's triumphs, there was no crawling rank of cabs, no eager and curious press of people in the street; but few vehicles disputed their way; otherwise the rain and the hurrying, rain-coated wayfarers had the thoroughfare to themthemselves. . . . And even this he chose to consider a favorable omen: there was not now a public to come between him and his love—only Max and her frightened fancies.

The man at the door recognized Ember with a cheerful nod; Whitaker he did not know.

"Just in time, Mr. Ember; curtain's been up about ten minutes." . . .

CHAPTER XX.

Black Out.

The auditorium was in almost total darkness. A single voice was audible from the stage that confronted it like some tremendous, moonlight canvas in a huge frame of tarnished gold. They stole silently round the orchestra seats to the stage-box—the same box that Whitaker had on the former occasoin occupied in company with Max.

They succeeded in taking possession without attracting attention, either from the owners of that scanty scattering of shirt bosoms in the orchestra—the critical fraternity and those intimates bidden by the manager to the first glimpse of his new revelation in stagecraft—or from those occupying the stage.

The latter were but two. Evidently, though the curtain had been up for some minutes, the action of the piece had not yet been permitted to begin to unfold. Whitaker inferred that Max had been dissatisfied with something about the lighting of the scene. The manager was standing in mid-stage, staring up at the borders—a stout and pompous figure, tenacious to every detail of that public self which he had striven so successfully to make unforgettably individual; a figure quaintly incongruous in his impeccable morning coat and striped trousers and flat-brimmed silk hat, perched well back on his head, with his malacca stick and lemon-colored gloves and small and excessively glossy patent-leather shoes, posed against the counterfeit of a moonlit formal garden.

Oil-Burning Engines Efficient.

An English naval architect in a recent study of applying oil engines for the propulsion of warships states that in the case of a battleship he found that with an equal number of shafts, equal power and speed can be obtained with double-acting two-cycle engines as with steam, auxiliaries being included in each case, and the machinery weight being equal, says the Scientific American. He found that the radius of action could be increased at full speed at least three times and at cruising speeds at least four times.

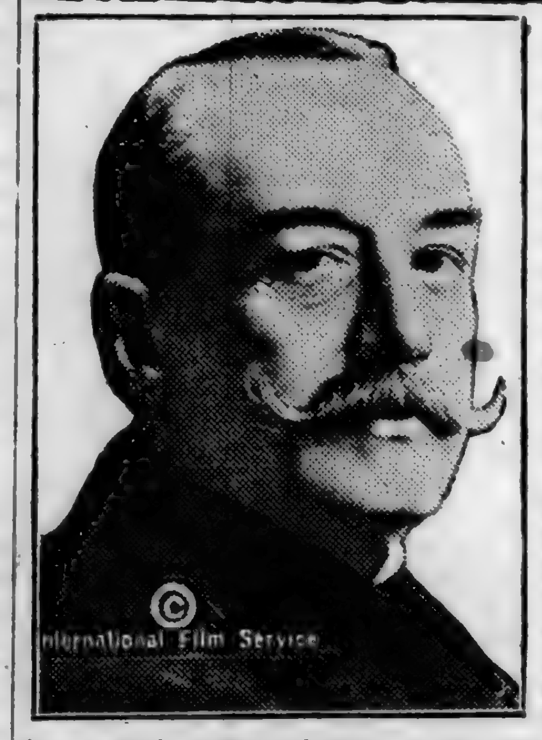
REAL RULER OF RUSSIA



A cloth manufacturer is today the real power behind the Russian throne. At his will the czar issues ukases and promulgates decrees. The membership of the cabinet is entirely changed, the traditional and legal order of the imperial council completely revolutionized, the duma prorogued and threatened with dissolution, all because of the activities of a political adventurer who knows how to make use of the sinister forces pervading Russian life. His name is Alexander Dmitrovitch Protopopoff and he is the czar's minister of the interior.

A few years ago Protopopoff's only distinction was the fact that he was the owner of one of Russia's largest cloth manufacturing establishments. Today he holds in his hands the fate of ministers; the duma fears him; Russian democracy hates him and the allies are uneasy over his moves. The fortunes of humanity and civilization, to a certain extent, depend on the way he will carve Russia's future policy.

Born in 1865, he received a military education and served in the cavalry up to 1890, when he resigned. He settled on his large estate in the province of Simbirsk, where he devoted himself to business and social work. National politics were foreign to Protopopoff till 1908, in which year he was elected to the duma by the octobrists—the party of the center.

"THE JAPANESE ROOSEVELT"

© International Film Service

Baron Shimpei Goto, Japan's great medico-statesman, who holds the portfolio of the interior in the Terauchi cabinet, has sometimes been called the "Japanese Roosevelt." He is the grandson of Choei Takano, one of the pioneer progressives of the latter Tokugawa period, who was put to death by the Tokugawa government for his denunciation of the policy of excluding foreigners. Goto was educated for the profession of medicine, and in 1890 he went to Germany, receiving the M. D. degree from the University of Berlin.

In Japan he became a leading authority on health and sanitation. He was sanitary commissioner during the Japan-China war. Later he established a reputation as an executive while civil administrator of Formosa. His vigorous administration of that island won him promotion and distinction until he became known as Japan's great colonist-organizer. He displayed ability as the first president of the South Manchurian railroad, the company becoming an independent organ of colonial administration of Manchuria.

A very romantic incident marked his earlier career. His daring imagination and strong sympathies induced him to take part in a quixotic plan to rescue a former daimyo from the hands of a band of supposed persecutors. The daimyo had been imprisoned by relatives on the plea of insanity. Goto's activities resulted in his arrest and imprisonment on the charge of complicity in obtaining illegal possession of the imprisoned nobleman. But his motives were found to be honorable. He was acquitted and restored to his official position. It is a coincidence that the judge who examined him was his present colleague, Minister Nakajoshi.

BOLD BOIES PENROSE

© International Film Service

Boies Penrose of Pennsylvania is a bold man, and when he feels like it, and is there, he can make himself very obnoxious to those who do not like him. At a dinner on McKinley day in Pittsburgh he is reported to have said that the next time President Wilson appeared before the senate to discuss public matters "I will engage him in colloquy and debate, in which I shall be strictly within my rights, as he is within his rights in coming there. Doubtless other senators will join in the debate, although I shall not ask them to do so. The president will be addressed as was Washington more than one hundred years ago, and I think I can say that this second appearance of Mr. Wilson will be his last."

The senator said that this was what he expected to do if he should be present; but some of his constituents do not think he will be there unless he breaks his record for nonattendance. If he should carry out his announced purpose, however, no one would enjoy a debate more than the president, and when it ended the senator from Pennsylvania probably would know that there had been a fight.

The W. C. T. U., met Friday afternoon with Mrs. Loretta Hull. The topic was "Co-operation of Temperance and Missions." The meeting was opened by singing the "White Ribbon Rally Song." Mrs. Iora Leighty read the scripture lesson from First Chron. 16:8—25. Prayer by Mrs. Amanda Spayd. Leaflet—"The Great Foe to Modern Missions" was read by Mrs Ethel Cheek; telling of the great harm intemperance has been to the forward work of missions in other lands as told by Missionaries. Next came a talk from two different views first "We Need the Co-operation of the Missionary Societies." This was to have been given by Mrs. Mary Buchanan but illness kept her at home, so the topic was talked on by several ones present. The second part of the talk was splendidly given by Mrs. Spayd. The topic was "Does the Missionary Society need the Co-operation of the Temperance Forces?" and her talk brought out that temperance was greatly needed at the present time in the Mission fields, as intemperance was a great hinderance. Fourteen members responded at Roll Call; one guest, Mrs. Belle Woodcox, of Adrian, Mich., was also present. Dismissed with prayer by Mrs. Spayd. After adjournment by a previous request by Mrs. Lillian Buckingham, who is still confined to her home from an operation, the Union gathered near the telephone and with the permission of "Central" who connected the two residences, sang "America" for her. Of course, the ladies present quietly rejoiced over the recent victories of Temperance and Enfranchisement of Women in Indiana.

SAGE TEA DARKENS HAIR TO ANY SHADE

Don't stay Gray! Here's an Old-time Recipe that Anybody can Apply.

The use of Sage and Sulphur for restoring faded, gray hair to its natural color dates back to grandmother's time. She used it to keep her hair beautifully dark, glossy and attractive. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect.

But brewing at home is mussy and out-of-date. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for a 50 cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get this famous old preparation, improved by the addition of other ingredients, which can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, it becomes beautifully dark and glossy.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire a more youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

DRINK MORE WATER IF KIDNEYS BOTHER

Eat less meat and take Salts for Backache or Bladder trouble—Neutralizes acids.

Uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish, ache, and feel like lumps of lead. The urine becomes cloudy; the bladder is irritated, and you may be obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night. When the kidneys clog you must help them flush off the body's urinous waste or you'll be a real sick person shortly. At first you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, you suffer from backache, sick headache, dizziness, stomach gets sour, tongue coated and you feel rheumatic twinges when the weather is bad. Eat less meat, drink lots of water; also get from any pharmacist four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active. Druggists here say they sell lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

DRINK HOT WATER IF YOU DESIRE A ROSY COMPLEXION

Says we can't help but look better and feel better after an inside bath.

To look one's best and feel one's best is to enjoy an inside bath each morning to flush from the system the previous day's waste, sour fermentations and poisonous toxins before it is absorbed into the blood. Just as coal, when it burns, leaves behind a certain amount of incombustible material in the form of ashes, so the food and drink taken each day leave in the alimentary organs a certain amount of indigestible material, which if not eliminated, form toxins and poisons which are then sucked into the blood through the very ducts which are intended to suck in only nourishment to sustain the body.

If you want to see the glow of healthy bloom in your cheeks, to see your skin get clearer and clearer, you are told to drink every morning upon arising, a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, which is a harmless means of washings the waste material and toxins from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels, thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary tract, before putting more food into the stomach.

Men and women with sallow skins, liver spots, pimples or pallid complexion, also those who wake up with a ocated tongue, bad taste, nasty breath, others who are bothered with headaches, billious spells, acid stomach or constipation should begin this phosphated hot water drinking and are assured of very pronounced results in one or two weeks.

A quarter pound of limestone phosphate costs very little at the drug store but is sufficient to demonstrate that just as soap and hot water cleanses, purifies and freshens the skin on the outside, so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the inside organs. We must always consider that internal sanitation is vastly more important than outside cleanliness, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, while the bowel pores do.

Life of Mrs. Keesler.

Mary M. Baker was born in Stark County, Massillon, Ohio, October 1, 1847 and died at her home in Spencerville, Indiana, February 13, 1917 at the age of 69 years, 4 months and 13 days. YES! MAGICALLY! CORNS LIFT OUT WITH FINGERS

You simply say to the drug store man, "Give me a quarter of an ounce of freezone." This will cost very little but is sufficient to remove every hard or soft corn from one's feet.

A few drops of this new ether compound applied directly upon a tender, aching corn should relieve the soreness instantly, and soon the entire corn, root and all, dries up and can be lifted out with the fingers.

This new way to rid one's feet of corns was introduced by a Cincinnati man, who says that, while freezone is sticky, it dries in a moment, and simply shrivels up the corn without inflaming or even irritating the surrounding tissue or skin.

Don't let father die of infection or lockjaw from whittling at his corns, but clip this out and make him try it.

LION CRIES LIKE A WOMAN

Appetite of America's Most Powerful Cat Is Whetted by Sight of Young Horse.

The mountain lion, next to the jaguar, is the largest of the cat tribe native to America, E. W. Nelson writes in the National Geographic Magazine. In various parts of its range it is also known as the panther, cougar and puma. It is a slender-bodied animal with a small head and a long, round tail, with a total length varying from seven to nine feet and a weight from about 150 to 200 pounds.

No other American mammal has a range equal to that of the mountain lion. It originally inhabited both North and South America from southern Quebec and Vancouver island to Patagonia and from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast.

The mountain lion, while powerful enough to be dangerous to man, is in reality extremely timid. Owing to its being a potentially dangerous animal, the popular conception of it is that of a fearsome beast, whose savage exploits are celebrated in the folklore of our frontier. As a matter of fact, few wild animals are less dangerous, although there are authentic accounts of wanton attacks upon people, just as there are authentic instances of buck deer and moose becoming aggressive. It has a wild, weird cry, popularly supposed to resemble the scream of a terrified woman, which is thrillingly impressive when the shades of evening are throwing a mysterious gloom over the forests.

Although inoffensive as to people, this cat is such a fierce and relentless enemy of large game and live stock that it is everywhere an outlaw. It often kills claves, but is especially fond of young horses. In many range districts of the Western states and on the table land of Mexico, owing to the depredations of this animal, it is impossible to raise horses.

Why Cecil Rhodes Went to Africa.

"Why did I come to Africa? Well, they will tell you that I came out on account of my health, or from a love of adventure—and to some extent that may be true. But the real fact is that I could no longer stand the eternal cold mutton."

The answer is characteristic of the man. A young chap who, three years after receiving his college degree, could pick up an empire 160 times the size of Rhode Island and set it as a jewel in the British crown was not likely to be content with any "review of reviews" in his diet. Men with "empires in their brains" do not usually have cold mutton in their stomachs.

But the fact remains that Cecil John Rhodes went to South Africa to battle for his life against the bug battalions of tuberculosis that had invaded his lungs. "Not six months to live!" Such was the verdict that Rhodes, in after years, read opposite his name in the doctor's faded memorandum-book.—James E. Crowther in World Outlook.

Mystery Solved.

George and Ethel were married a few weeks ago, and returned from their honeymoon to a ducky little bungalow garnished throughout with the usual valuable but useless silverware and jewelry which kind friends shower upon the newly married.

The day after their arrival two tickets for a downtown theater reached them, accompanied by a little scented note bearing the simple message: "Guess who sent them?" They found it impossible to identify the donor, but, nevertheless, decided to use them.

At the end of a pleasant evening they returned to their home to find the place stripped of everything. On the dining-room table lay another little scented note bearing the legend, "Now you know."—New York Globe.

A Physiological Phenomenon.

We are told that away up in the mountain section of Georgia lives a farmer who, like Caleb, Joshua's partner, owns a whole mountain and has cleared it off, and has the surface in cultivation. The mountain is cone-shaped and is one-fourth of a mile in height and three miles in circumference. To prevent the rich surface from being washed away the farmer runs in rows all the way around the mountain, beginning at the bottom and working up to the top. The result of continually walking around the mountain, always in the same direction, has made the whole family short-legged on one side and long-legged on the other.—Thomasville (Ga.) Post.

INDIANA WOMEN'S VICTORY SWEEPING

Given Larger Measure of Suffrage Under New Law Than in Any Other State.

GET FIRST VOTE NEXT FALL

Success Crowns Fight for Ballot Only After Years of Effort With Many Disappointments to the Workers.

By ELLIS SEARLES.

The Indiana General assembly of 1917 was good to the women of the state. It enacted a woman suffrage law that gives Indiana women the right to vote for a larger number of offices than the women of any other state in the Union have the right to vote for. Indiana women fought for many years for the ballot, and in a large part of that time they would have been glad to accept any kind of limited suffrage. But now their dreams have been realized almost entirely, and they feel that they have won a big victory.

At every session of the Indiana general assembly, beginning with 1907, there have been one or more suffrage bills to trouble the members. Delegations of women have haunted the corridors of the statehouse and the halls of the assembly at every session in all that time, working hard for the realization of their hope. Up to 1915 they never had a chance. Most of the members of previous sessions appeared to regard woman suffrage as a joke with which they were merely to have sport and fun in the 61 days of their sessions. It was not until 1915 that the subject assumed a serious aspect with them and that they began to feel that perhaps it was coming in spite of them.

Women Not Agreed.

Women's clubs throughout the state, women's organizations of various kinds, the W. C. T. U., and others, all joined hands to put the proposition over. Franchise leagues and suffrage associations were organized everywhere. But the women were not agreed as to the kind of suffrage they wanted. One faction insisted on full suffrage, carrying with it the right to vote for everything at all elections. This would have required an amendment to the state constitution, and such amendments are extremely difficult to bring about. It is a long, tedious, trying and uncertain process. Another faction, and the larger faction, by the way, took the position that they had better be satisfied with the degree of suffrage they could get by statutory enactment, and then work to extend it later. This latter element conducted the most vigorous campaign. It organized what is known as the Legislative Council of Indiana Women. Mrs. Felix T. McWhirter of Indianapolis is chairman of the council. Mrs. S. C. Stimson of Terre Haute is the chairman of the steering committee of the council. These women have led in the work that brought about their victory.

They got a suffrage bill through the senate in 1915, but it was held up in committee in the house and the women were unable to pry it loose before the end of the session.

This time, however, they tried a different plan. They had the same identical bill introduced in the house and the senate at the same time. In the house the bill was introduced by Representative Alldredge of Anderson, a Republican, because the house was overwhelmingly Republican. The senate was equally divided politically, so the women had their bill introduced jointly by Senator Masten of South Whitley, a Democrat, and Senator McKinley of Muncie, a Republican.

Senate Bill Is Passed.

As introduced, the bill would have allowed women to vote immediately after the passage of the act, and this would have been in time for the city primaries this spring. The house amended the Alldredge bill to take effect the first of next October, following the election of delegates to the constitutional convention. The senate amended its bill to take effect when the governor issues his proclamation in April or May. The women worked for the Masten-McKinley bill, put it through the senate and got it in the house. There it slipped in ahead of the Alldredge bill and was passed.

Under the terms of the Masten-McKinley bill, which was passed, women who possess the qualifications as to residence, etc., fixed for male voters have the right to vote for candidates for nomination and election to the following offices:

Presidential electors, attorney general, state statistician, state geologist, reporter of the Supreme court, judges of the appellate court, superior courts, criminal courts, probate courts and juvenile courts; members of the county council; county assessor, township trustee, township advisory board members, township assessor, all elective city and town officials, all school officials elected by the people, and for all other elective officers not provided for in the state constitution and which may be created by the legislature.

Women will not have the right to vote for governor, lieutenant governor, secretary of state, auditor of state, treasurer of state, judges of the supreme court, circuit court judges, county sheriff, county auditor, county treasurer and county commissioners.

Women will have the right to vote on all questions submitted to the people, other than amendments to the present state constitution. They may vote on the ratification or rejection of the proposed new constitution. They have the right to vote for nominations for all offices at primaries.

To Have Separate Ballots.

Since the present constitution bars women from voting for constitutional offices, the law provides that separate ballot boxes and ballots shall be prepared for them, the ballots to contain the names only of the candidates who may be voted for by the women. These ballots are to be canvassed and counted separately and then canvassed with the other ballots.

In order to be qualified to vote a woman must be twenty-one years old, must have been a resident of the state six months and of the township 60 days and of the precinct 30 days next preceding an election. She must be registered, the same as men voters. Unless a woman is registered as a voter she has no right to vote.

All of the election laws that govern voting by men also govern voting by women. They are subject to the same penalties for any violations of the election laws of the state.

Woman voters need not be registered in order to vote at the special election to be held next September for the election of delegates to the constitutional convention, because it is a special election. But they must be registered before they may vote at the city elections which will be held throughout the state next November. This will be the first regular election at which they will have the right to vote.

The legislative council of Indiana women already has mapped out a plan of campaign of education of Indiana women, in order to get them ready to exercise the newly acquired right to vote. This campaign will extend into every precinct in the state.

DOVE STIRRED WORSHIPERS

Sermon of Pastor Who Favors Intervention in European War Interrupted by a Bird.

Dr. Charles A. Eaton, pastor of the Madison Avenue Baptist church in New York city, and his congregation received a shock during a recent sermon in that church, which has caused much comment in New York city religious circles.

Doctor Eaton criticized vigorously President Wilson's policy in Mexico from his pulpit, and called on the president to insist that the United States' honor must be respected by the European belligerents. He argued that we, as a nation, should resist by force any foreign infraction of our rights as world citizens.

During a pause in his sermon there came a flutter at one of the windows, which was partly open. A dove fluttered in with wings fanning the air and paused a moment in the shaft of light.

The hush of the church became deeper as the pastor and his congregation watched the bird float quietly down to the choir rail, where it perched with folded wings. Then it flew out over the congregation, circled the room above the people's heads and flew back to the window ledge. There it stayed for the remainder of the sermon, pluming itself and cooing in soft, liquid notes.

The strangeness of the appearance of the dove affected everyone visibly, and Doctor Eaton's voice was noticeably lower when he resumed his sermon. Doctor Eaton said that he hoped the bird would abide with them as an omen of the peace that he prayed would come to assuage the sufferings of the tortured people of Europe.

Radium.

Before the war radium was one of the rarest things in the world, but the war is altering things, and it bids fair to alter this.

Millions of compasses, watch dials and signs are being rendered luminous in the dark by being painted with tiny crystals of zinc blende, which possesses the property of glowing in the dark when mixed with a small quantity of radium. There is another substance, known as mesothorium—a by-product obtained in manufacturing incandescent gas mantles—which also renders the zinc blende luminous in the dark; and although mesothorium dies out in about five years, while radium lasts for 2,500 years, mesothorium makes the crystals of zinc blende glow far more brightly than radium, and is therefore in great demand for making luminous dials and signs.

The result of this radium, the king of the elements, is being replaced by mesothorium, which is in such demand that its price is mounting up to enormous figures.—Little Paper.

Equal to the Occasion.

Old Governor Mattocks of Vemont, who, when in congress, boasted that he could "beat 'em all writing bad," was no speechmaker. Still he wasn't often at a loss to find something to say when something had to be said. One New Year's day morning, as he was bathing and preparing for breakfast, he unfortunately leaned against the door at the head of the stairs leading to the kitchen. The door gave way, and the maids of the household, while busy preparing the morning meal, were astounded to see, rolling and tumbling into their presence, a chubby, fat old gentleman in a most unpresentable attire. But his wits were with him. "Ladies," he exclaimed, politely, "I wish you a happy new year," and then bounded upstairs again, four steps at a time.

Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

SIGN OF THE TIMES.

We are saying good-by to the perambulating saloon. The rapid disappearance during 1916 of alcoholic liquors from the dining cars of many of the great transportation systems is one of the high lights of the temperance reform. Dry states and "Rule G" are the cause of this total abstinence advance.

Dining car chefs and waiters on transcontinental express trains are often more familiar with the growth of prohibition territory than are some of their liquor imbibing patrons. A humorous cartoon colloquy (New York Herald) is an illustration in point. "Can I have a highball on this train?" queries the thirsty traveler as he takes a seat in the dining car. "No, sir," replies the affable waiter, "we are crossing a dry state, sir. Be patient, for in a few moments we will be across the line." The waiter soon approached with the highball, saying, "Here's your drink, sir. We are now in a wet state. Hurry up! Be cautious! We are getting near another state line." The passenger is fatally deliberate. To his dismay the waiter returns and carries off the drink with the remark, "Give me that drink quick. You are too slow! We are again in a dry state."—From Address of Miss Anna A. Gordon Before the National W. C. T. U. Convention.

PROHIBITION FANATICS.

The men who administer the great railroad systems of the country, the heads of industrial corporations, the managers of baseball teams, the trainers of prize-fighters and football squads, and many others to be found in unexpected places, whom time would fail us to mention—these are "the whirling dervishes of prohibition fanaticism," says Rev. Matt. S. Hughes in his new book, "The Logic of Prohibition." "The genuine fanatics are these people who, in increasing numbers, for various reasons, insist that men shall not drink under such penalties as they are able to visit upon them. They are," he says, "leagues in advance of all the cranks who vote to abolish the traffic. These latter are only asking that the state forbid the distiller and brewer to manufacture and the saloonkeeper and bartender to sell; the real fanatics issue orders to American citizens prohibiting the drinking of liquor." There is fanaticism, too, Mr. Hughes points out, among the crowned heads and the war generals of Europe. And "there are some fanatical prohibitionists of the extreme type even among the saloonkeepers—that is to say, they will not allow their bartenders to drink."

FOREIGN VOTE NOT WET.

The percentage of foreign-born votes in some of the cities which have voted themselves dry is both interesting and significant. Note the following:

	Native Born Pct.	Foreign Born Pct.
Rockford, Ill.	52.7	47.3
Duluth, Minn.	41.3	58.7
Superior, Wis.	46.7	53.3
Quincy, Mass.	49.1	50.9
Cambridge, Mass.	51.6	48.4

Note further the percentage in four wet cities of Pennsylvania:

	Native Born Pct.	Foreign Born Pct.
Lancaster	89.1	10.9
Reading	84.4	15.6
Williamsport	87.5	12.5
York	93.8	6.2

MODERATE DRINKING.

Professor Durig, a famous mountain climber, conducted experiments upon himself, climbing in each case 8,000 feet to the top of Mt. Bilkencrat in the Alps. He recorded the height climbed, his personal weight and that of his pack, and carried instruments to measure exactly the bodily energy put forth, the amount of muscle work done, and the length of time required. On certain days he took alcoholic drink equivalent to two glasses of beer, and found that, while his instruments showed that he expended 15 per cent more energy than on the days of abstinence, he took 21.7 per cent longer to reach the top of the mountain.

CAUSE OF RETREAT.

Speaking recently in London, Ont., before the Canadian club, La Baronne Huard, whose home is in the Marne district of France, told of her escape from her chateau just before the Germans seized it for their commander's headquarters, and added:

"How did it happen the Germans were obliged to retreat when so near Paris? One explanation is that the army was in the champagne district and the army was literally dead drunk. We had evidence of this when we got back. I saw at least 10,000 champagne bottles in my own grounds."

WHY WE LEGISLATE.

"People say that you can't make people good by legislation," said Dr. Charles F. Aked in one of his logical and telling speeches in the California dry campaign. "We don't expect to make people good by legislation. We shall be satisfied if we can prevent the other fellow from making them bad. The thing for us to do when we have reached final conviction is to translate that conviction into legislation. We must build our conviction into the massive masonry of legislation for future generations."

KNOW LITTLE CARE

SHANTY BOATMEN CERTAINLY LIVE A HAPPY LIFE.

Will Sometimes Work, Though Pleasure Is the Real Business of Existence—Not Bothered About Rent or Taxes.

If a man were privileged to choose his own manner of living, sorting over the whole collection of life's various forms of existence, and choosing the one he liked best, no matter what anybody or everybody said, it is likely that in all that strange collection he could find nothing more charming than the life of the shanty boatman, remarks the Indianapolis News. The shanty boatman lives anywhere, according to his inclination and the season. He lives, anyway, according to his desires. It sets you dreaming of all the faraway places to think of him. He moors his little house on the cool northern streams in the summer, and drifts down the warm blue southern rivers during the winter. He is not averse to a bit of work now and then, enough to keep him in coffee and bacon, but he can choose his work as he goes, and leave it when he grows tired of it. Work is his avocation, and, as an avocation, work is not an unpleasant thing. His real business is living, smoking, fishing, drifting. He pays neither rent nor taxes. He owns only a bit of an old shack, somehow made watertight and balanced so that it will float. It is even possible, you must understand, for him to enter into the life of city men, entering into it, however, with no sense of necessity or restraint.

A shanty boatman was not so long ago a resident of this very town. With a proper sense of the fitness of things he tied his boat to a fence, in line with the houses on the shore and even painted a number over the front door. It was a jolly looking little home, with the smoke coming out of the pipe in the roof and lamplight shining from the edge of the curtains, and, for all we know, he may have a regular job and have taken to city life very contentedly for a while. The advantage he had over the rest of us, of course, was that to get away to the faraway places, he had only to untie his boat and drift, accepting now and then a bit of a lift from a friendly craft.

The thing that is likely to bother us, however, in choosing this sort of existence, is the question as to whether we should really be a shanty boatman, or just pretend to be one. Stevenson was a sort of shanty boatman. At least, he did drift about through the country in a boat, and lived very contentedly and lazily on the way. But Stevenson has written a book about his wanderings, and he was not really a shanty boatman at all. It is just the difference you may say, between art and vagrancy. Vagrancy has an idle sound, and art is a tempting thing. The very point in being a shanty boatman, however, is in not having to try to be anything else, and, perhaps the best thing about it is the fact that it is so far removed from art as to be very nearly real.

War's Convictions.

What has happened is that out of the blackest, most infernal experience through which, as far as we know, the race has ever passed there has seemed to come literally to millions of men a redeeming conviction, a healing and transfiguring assurance, that brotherhood is not a delusion; that life has a meaning; that resolution and courage and discipline and simple faith in fellowmen and loyalty to ideals are now, as they have always been, within that meaning; that these things are, as they will be forever, within man's heritage, to be displayed in war until the better way is found.—E. IS CHILD CROSS, FEVERISH, SICK

Look, Mother! If tongue is coated, give "California Syrup of Figs."

Children love this "fruit laxative," and nothing else cleanses the tender stomach, liver and bowels so nicely.

A child simply will not stop playing to empty the bowels, and the result is they become tightly clogged with waste, liver gets sluggish, stomach sours, then your little one becomes cross, half-sick, feverish, don't eat, sleep or act naturally, breath is bad, system full of cold, has sore throat, stomach-ache or diarrhea. Listen, Mother! See if tongue is coated, then give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the constipated waste, sour bile and undigested food passes out of the system, and you have a well child again.

Millions of mothers give "California Syrup of Figs" because it is perfectly harmless; children love it, and it never fails to act on the stomach, liver and bowels.

Ask at the store for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly printed on the bottle. Adv.

LIFT YOUR CORNS OFF WITH FINGERS

How to loosen a tender corn or callus so it lifts out without pain.

Let folks step on your feet hereafter; wear shoes a size smaller if you like, for corns will never again send electric sparks of pain through you, according to this Cincinnati authority.

He says that a few drops of a drug called freezone, applied directly upon a tender, aching corn, instantly relieves soreness, and soon the entire corn, root and all, lifts right out.

This drug dries at once and simply shrivels up the corn or callus without even irritating the surrounding skin.

A small bottle of freezone obtained at any drug store will cost very little but will positively remove every hard or soft corn or callus from one's feet.

If your druggist hasn't stocked this new drug yet, tell him to get a small bottle of freezone for you from his wholesale drug house.—adv.

A DIFFERENCE IN THE INVESTMENT

The Western Canada Farm Profits Are Away in Excess.

Mr. George H. Barr, of Iowa, holds seven sections of land in Saskatchewan. These he has fenced and rented, either for pasture or cultivation, all paying good interest on the investment.

Mr. Barr says that farm land at home in Iowa is held at $150 per acre. These lands are in a high state of cultivation, with splendid improvements in houses, barns, stables and silos, and yet, the revenue returns from them are only from two to three per cent per annum on investment.

Last year, 1915, his half share of crop on a quarter section in Saskatchewan, wheat on new breaking, gave him 35 per cent on the capital invested—$25.00 an acre. The crop yield was 35 bushels per acre. This year the same quarter-section, sown to Red Fife on stubble gave 3,286 bushels. His share, 1,643 bushels of 1 Northern at $1.56 per bushel, gave him $2,563.08. Seed, half the twine and half the threshing bill cost him $453.00. Allowing a share of the expense of his annual inspection trip, charged to this quarter-section even to $110.00, and he has left $2,000.00, that is 50 per cent of the original cost of the land. Anyone can figure up that another average crop will pay, not 2 or 3 per cent on investment, as in Iowa, but the total price of the land. Mr. Barr says: "That's no joke now."

Mr. Barr was instrumental in bringing a number of farmers from Iowa to Saskatchewan in 1913. He referred to one of them, Geo. H. Kerton, a tenant farmer in Iowa. He bought a quarter-section of improved land at $32.00 an acre near Hanley. From proceeds of crop in 1914, 1915, 1916, he has paid for the land. Mr. Barr asked him a week ago: "Well, George, what shall I tell friends down home for you?" The reply was: "Tell them I shall never go back to be a tenant for any man." Another man, Charles Haight, realized $18,000 in cash for his wheat crops in 1915 and 1916.

Mr. Barr when at home devotes most of his time to raising and dealing in live stock. On his first visit of inspection to Saskatchewan, he realized the opportunity there was here for grazing cattle. So his quarter-sections, not occupied, were fenced and rented as pasture lands to farmers adjoining. His creed is: "Let nature supply the feed all summer while cattle are growing, and then in the fall, take them to farmsteads to be finished for market. There is money in it."—Advertisement.

"Thus garbed, I attracted no attention when I marched with an English artillery detachment into Belgium by way of Hazebrouck. Thank God, I reached my husband's side a few hours before he died."

Get a 10-cent box now.

Turn the rascals out—the headache, biliousness, indigestion, the sick, sour stomach and foul gases—turn them out to-night and keep them out with Cascarets.

Millions of men and women take a Cascaret now and then and never know the misery caused by a lazy liver, clogged bowels or an upset stomach.

Don't put in another day of distress. Let Cascarets cleanse your stomach; remove the sour fermenting food; take the excess bile from your liver and carry out all the constipated waste matter and poison in the bowels. Then you will feel great.

A Cascaret to-night straightens you out by morning. They work while you sleep. A 10-cent box from any drug store means a clear head, sweet stomach and clean, healthy liver and bowel action for months. Children love Cascarets because they never gripe or sicken. Adv.

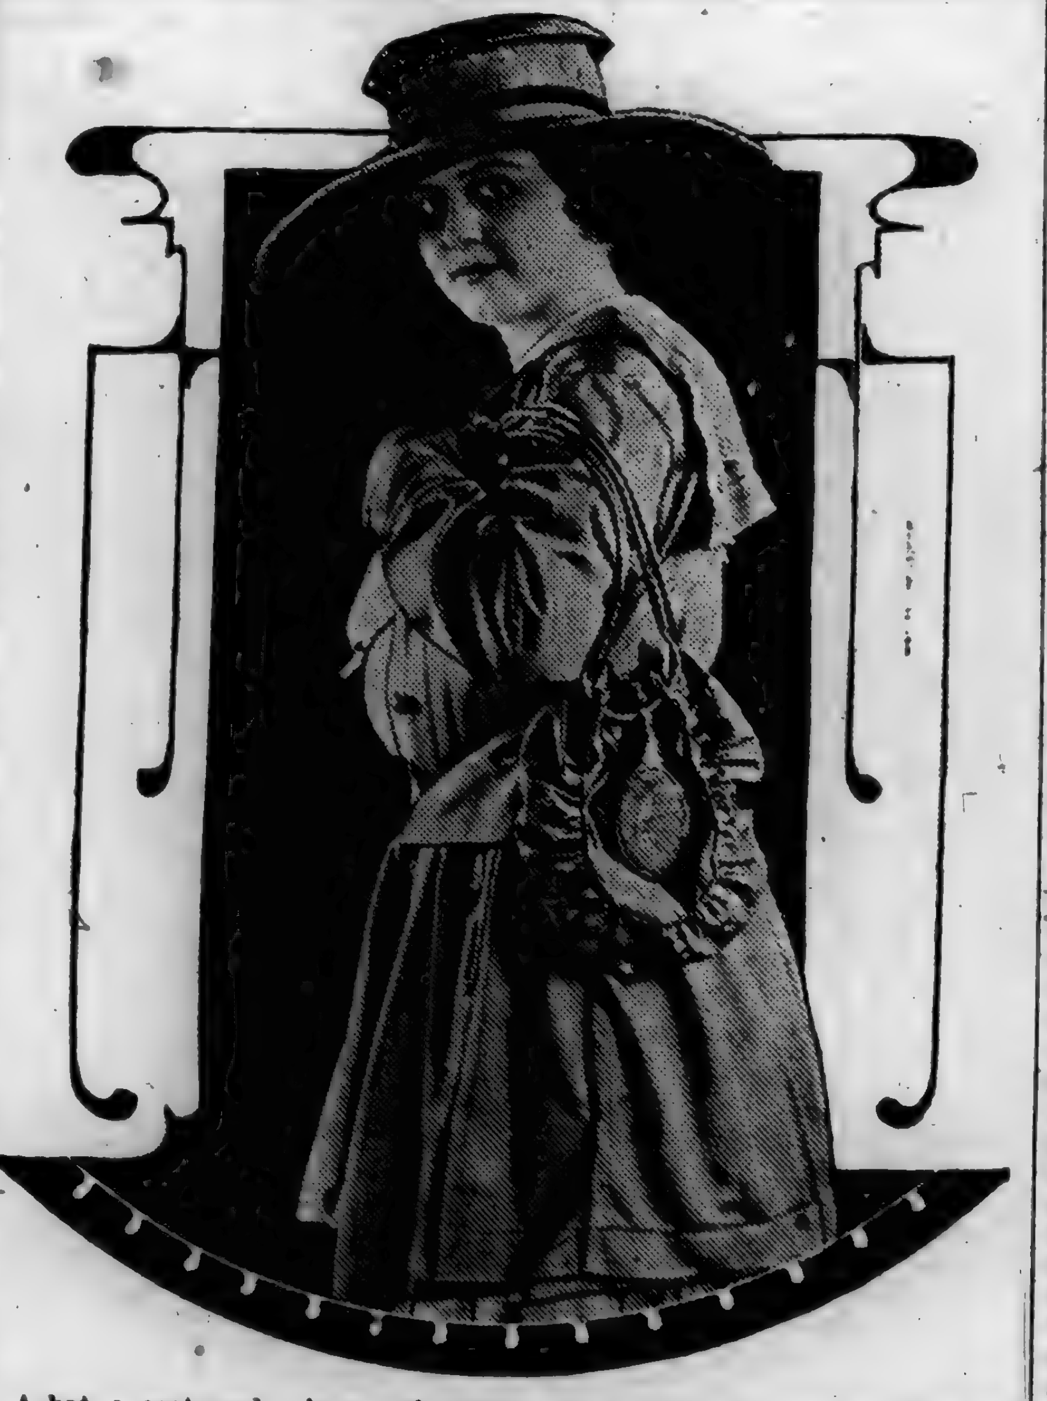
An Equipment for Easter



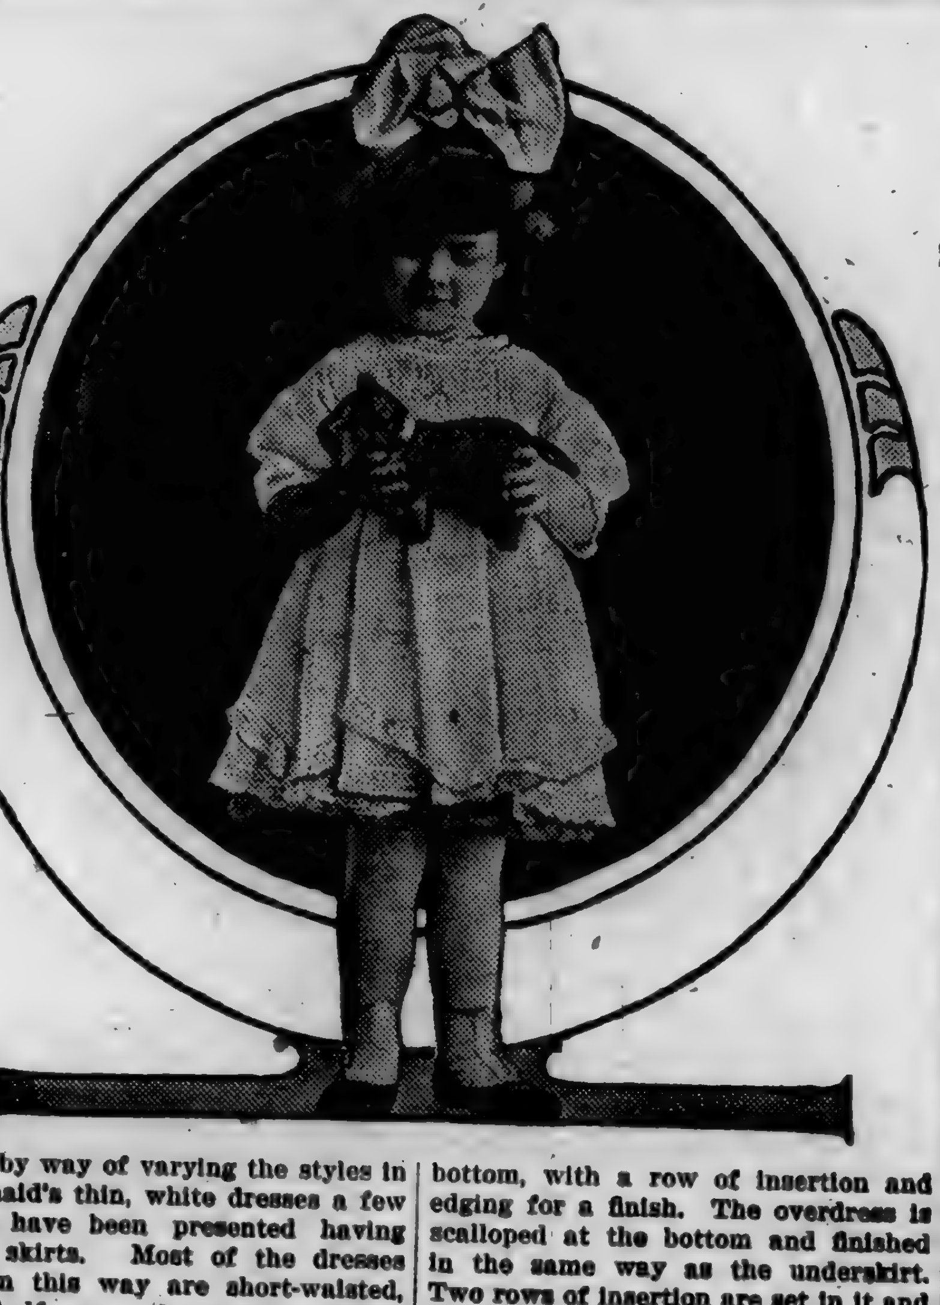
A hat, a coat, and a bag, each evidently made to keep the others company, provide an equipment for spring that is above criticism. Silk jersey, suede, and woolens, in fascinating colors, present their several lures, and panne velvet is among the possibilities that engage the attention of fashionables when they consider spring coats. It seems that we may choose coats in any length we see fit, but that a preference is already evident for half and three-quarter length garments. Even the motorcoat, which has been long and broad and big in every way, is rumored to the shrinking in all directions—except the collar.

The coat shown in the picture is of silk jersey in Talbot rose. It has a square cape collar, overlaid with a collar of crepe. It is plain and straight-hanging and has a wide girdle of the same material. It fastens at the front with covered buttons.

The hat of gray silk figures with little rose-colored flower sprays and faced with rose-colored braid is trimmed with a fan of plaited silk at the front. A narrow band of black velvet ribbon is tied in a small bow below the fan. The bag employs the same silk as the hat, with plain gray silk, and is suspended by cords covered with the plain silk. It is a simple but very clever design, and is lined with rose-colored silk.

This matching up of hat, coat, and bag is more a matter of color than of materials. The hat may be of straw and silk, the bag of silk, and the coat of any material you choose. If in doubt on this point you may select wool jersey with the certainty that it is impossible to have anything more chic.

Dainty Dress With Double Skirt



Just by way of varying the styles in little maid's thin, white dresses a few models have been presented having double skirts. Most of the dresses made in this way are short-waisted, with half or three-quarter-length sleeves. Overskirts are about as long as the skirt under them, and their fullness is disposed in plaits, as a rule, although shirrings and smockings are well considered.

Batiste seems to be the favorite material for little girls' dresses, but any of the fine sheer cotton fabrics answer the purpose. The finest weaves are chosen in order that laundering will have them unchanged. Cheaper grades, in sheer cottons, thicken up and lose their crispness and daintiness from tubbing.

The little dress shown in the picture is a pretty model, with double skirt, for the tiny maid of three years or so. It has a baby waist, with elbow-length sleeves and round neck, and fastens in the back with very small pearl buttons. Embroidered chiffon organdie and narrow val insertion and edging are the time-honored means for embellishing nearly all these dainty "dress-up" frocks. Bands of embroidered organdie are set in, between groups of fine tucks, at the front and back of the waist. There is a narrow frill of lace about the neck and at the edge of the bands that confine the sleeves.

The underskirt is straight about the bottom, with a row of insertion and edging for a finish. The overdress is scalloped at the bottom and finished in the same way as the underskirt. Two rows of insertion are set in it and it is plaited about the waist where it is set to the bodice.

Julia Bottomley

Interesting Skirts.

In view of the American woman's invariable objection to drapery in her suits, and in deference to the desire for something extremely simple and in one piece, the tailored skirt for spring, while having broken lines, will express drapery in very limited degree.

Thus, instead of being gored and seamed, so as to assume the barrel shape, the new "tonneau" skirts of tailored type are often cut in two circular portions; an upper part, extending from the hip to the knee, and a lower part, from hem to knee, these circular pieces being joined in a seam at their widest spread. The result is a very interesting new skirt, narrow at waist and hem and wide at the knee (or point of joining), and, therefore, of barrel type. There will be a difference of at least a yard in the width of this type of skirt through the center and at hem and waist.

LESSON FOR MARCH 4

JESUS FEEDS FIVE THOUSAND.

LESSON TEXT—John 6:1-14.

GOLDEN TEXT—Give us this day our daily bread.—Matt. 6:11.

This parable marks the high level of the year of our Lord's popularity. It is such an important miracle as to be the only one recorded in all four gospels. Be sure to use a good harmony. The returning twelve (Matt. 11:1) are taken by their master to a desert place that they might find rest (Mk. 6:31) and that he might comfort their hearts over the death of John the Baptist (Matt. 14:1-12). The multitude would not grant them the right use of their leisure, but flocked to this retreat in the desert. They followed that they might listen to his gracious words, and perhaps behold some new wonder (v. 2). Carlisle said he saw in England "forty millions, mostly fools." Jesus saw the multitude, and was moved, not with sarcasm, but with compassion which took a tangible form of service. Mark tells us (6:34) that Jesus was first of all teaching the multitude. It is better to teach a man how to help himself than to help the man. We should not be surprised at Philip's slowness of faith. Moses in a like manner was once nonplussed as to how to feed the multitude in the wilderness. (Num. 11:21-23). It is not so much how great the need nor how little we possess; rather, is that little given over to God? Andrew, who had revealed Jesus unto Peter, discovers as though in desperation a boy whose mother had thoughtfully provided him with a lunch, consisting of five barley biscuits and two small herring (v. 9); at least that much remained. This is a great commentary upon the tide of interest at this time, that the boy should not have eaten his entire lunch, for the boy's hunger is proverbial. It seems as though Jesus emphasizes the helplessness of the disciples in order that he may show his power. His command "Give ye them" (Mk. 6:37) teaches us that we are to give such as we have, and not look to others nor to do our charity by proxy (Prov. 11:24-25). Again the Savior asks his disciples as though he would teach them the resources of his kingdom. Give what you have, and he will bless and increase it to the supplying of the needs of a multitude. The secret of success was when he took up the loaves, and, "looking up," God also saw that day and blessed it. We need to observe the systematic procedure. The people are seated or reclining upon the ground in ranks or in companies, the master blessing and breaking the boy's cakes, giving first to the disciples. God works miracles through human agencies only. The result of this systematic procedure was that they were all satisfied, "filled" (v. 12). Luke adds that "all did eat" (Lk. 9:17). Not alone, however, was there divine order and lavishness, but there were economy and thrift as well, for Jesus gave careful direction as to the fragments. The lavishness is shown by the fact that the baskets into which the fragments were gathered were each probably large enough in which to sleep. This conservation process was a stinging rebuke to the improvident orientals and to present-day prodigals of that wonderful bounty with which God has blessed our land. God gives to us that we may use for other. Joy dies unless it is shared. Jesus is the living bread (John 6:48), and will satisfy hunger and life even as bread generates in the human body heat, vitality and power; so he would still feed the hungry soul of mankind. We have at hand the word, and it is for lack of it that men die in the deepest, truest sense of that word. The poverty and perplexity of the disciples in his presence and in the presence of this great need are being repeatd over and over today, and yet it is absurd. We have not enough to feed the multitude. Our few loaves of amusements, mental activities and social service will not feed them, but when we break unto them the Living Bread, they have enough and to spare. The difficulty with the distribution of material bread for the needs of mankind is not that there is not enough grain, but rather that in the process of distribution certain companies of men can control the fruits of the earth, and withhold them from the consumer for their own profit. Is there not a parable in this for the church in that it is so much concerned with its own joys, pleasures and profits that it is withholding from the mass of mankind, especially in the foreign field, the bread which alone can bring life and immortality to light?

Summary: (1) The hope of the world's salvation is in the wonderful power of God in multiplying the little we give to him in the way of service.

(2) If we bring no gift, how can God bless man? Compare this boy's service with the service of the little maid in Naaman's household.

(3) Conservation of the fragments, using well or wasting the fragments of time, of opportunity, etc., makes all the difference between success and failure.

(4) Let nothing be lost. The refuse of petroleum is today worth more than the oil product.

TAKES OFF DANDRUFF HAIR STOPS FALLING

Girls! Try This! Makes Hair Thick, Glossy, Fluffy, Beautiful—No More Itching Scalp.

Within ten minutes after an application of Danderine you cannot find a single trace of dandruff or falling hair and your scalp will not itch, but what will please you most will be after a few weeks' use, when you see new hair, fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair—growing all over the scalp.

A little Danderine immediately doubles the beauty of your hair. No difference how dull, faded, brittle and scraggy, just moisten a cloth with Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. The effect is amazing—your hair will be light, fluffy and wavy, and have an appearance of abundance; an incomparable luster, softness and luxuriance.

Get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any store, and prove that your hair is as pretty and soft as any—that it has been neglected or injured by careless treatment—that's all—you surely can have beautiful hair and lots of it if you will just try a little Danderine. Adv.

Too Sick To Work

Many Women in this Condition Regain Health by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Convincing Proof of This Fact.

Ridgway, Penn. — "I suffered from female trouble with backache and pain in my side for over seven months so I could not do any of my work. I was treated by three different doctors and was getting discouraged when my sister-in-law told me how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had helped her. I decided to try it, and it restored my health, so I now do all of my housework which is not light as I have a little boy three years old." —Mrs. O. M. Rhines, Ridgway, Penn.

Mrs. Lindsey Now Keeps House For Seven.

Tennille, Ga.—"I want to tell you how much I have been benefited by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. About eight years ago I got in such a low state of health I was unable to keep house for three in the family. I had dull, tired, dizzy feelings, cold feet and hands nearly all the time and could scarcely sleep at all. The doctor said I had a severe case of ulceration and without an operation I would always be an invalid, but I told him I wanted to wait awhile. Our druggist advised my husband to get Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it has entirely cured me. Now I keep house for seven and work in the garden some, too. I am so thankful I got this medicine. I feel as though it saved my life and have recommended it to others and they have been benefited".--Mrs. W. E. Lindsey, R. R. 3, Tennille, Ga.

What Is Uric Acid?

Everyone has uric acid in the system, but naturally in small quantities. Excessive amount is caused by eating too much meat and foods that ferment in stomach. The kidneys, being the filters of the blood, are supposed to separate and throw the poisons out of the system. Weak, tired and overworked kidneys fail to do this, hence the uric acid accumulates and the urate salts are carried by the blood to the solid tissue structure, causing backache, lumbago, rheumatism, dropsy, drowsiness, and tired feeling.

To overcome the trouble is only a matter of toning up the kidneys, and this is best done by a treatment with Anuric, three times a day. Anuric is a recent discovery of Dr. Pierce of Buffalo, N. Y., and can be obtained at any drug store.

Experience taught Doctor Pierce that Anuric is a more powerful agent than lithia in dissolving uric acid, and it is then carried out of the system.

THE ONWARD MARCH of Bronchitis, and deep seated Coughs is arrested by Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

In those scrofulous conditions of the blood which invite Consumption; in severe, lingering Coughs, and Weak Lungs, which threaten you with this fatal disease, and when other help has failed—this medicine is a proved remedy.

As a blood-cleanser, strength-restorer, and tonic it is sure to benefit. In all lingering Bronchial and Throat affections, and in every disease that can be reached through the blood, it never fails to benefit or cure. In tablet or liquid form.

The machinery of the body needs to be well oiled, kept in good condition just as the automobile, steam engine or bicycle. Why should the human neglect his own machinery more than that of his horse or his engine? Yet most people do neglect themselves. Clean the system at least once a week with Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets.

PROFITABLE SOIL CULTURE

SECRET OF CORN GROWING.

Maintaining a Balance Between Heat, Moisture and Fertility.

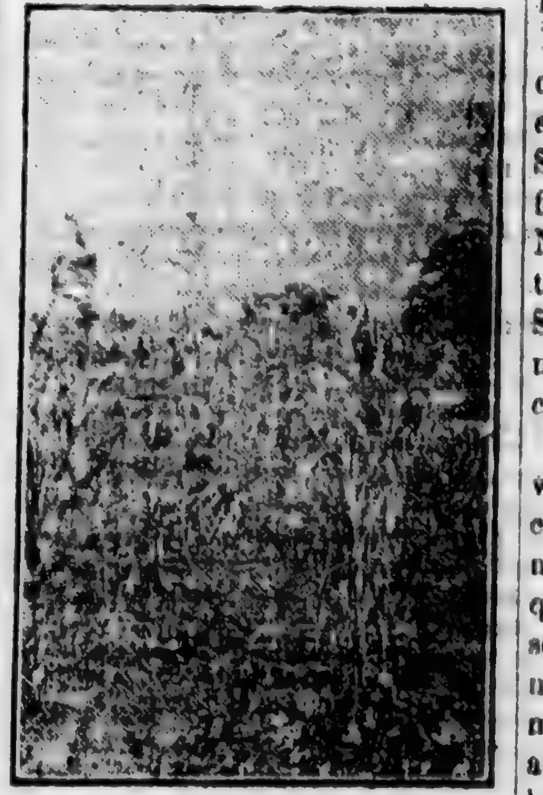
[Prepared by United States department of agriculture.]

The secret of successful corn culture is to maintain a proper balance of moisture, heat and fertility. These three factors, together with the nature of the seed, determine yields in all parts of the country.

A change in the supply of one may make a change in another advisable. Thus the moisture requirement varies with the amount of heat available. In addition to water and heat, soil fertility and seed also must be regarded among the chief essentials. No one of these can be said to be more important than another. Where all are abundant except one—as water, for example—this one becomes the limiting factor, and methods of supplying it become the important means of increasing the yield.

Corn possesses characteristics which appear to make it adapted to drought conditions and, on the other hand, has qualities which limit its possibilities as a crop for semiarid regions and call for special adjustments. In producing a given weight of feed or dry matter corn uses less water than certain other crops, as oats, clover and alfalfa. It is deep rooted and can if necessary draw water from a depth of five or six feet. In hot, dry weather the rolling of the blades reduces the loss of water. On the other hand, the heat requirements and peculiar flowering habits of this crop make it less adapted to semiarid regions than other grain or forage crops.

Corn makes its entire growth during the season of highest temperature, growing best when the thermometer registers 80 to 100 degrees F. It cannot grow in early spring or late fall, and its growth is retarded during the summer by cold nights or cool weather. It needs its greatest supply of moisture during the summer weeks when droughts are most likely and when rains are less effective because of losses from evaporation. In other words, the heat requirement of corn prevents growth at times when moisture conditions are likely to be most favorable, while lack of moisture frequently retards growth when heat conditions are most favorable. The problem, therefore, where heat is great and moisture deficient is to store up moisture, and where moisture is plentiful and heat deficient so to handle the soil as to prevent moisture from lessening unduly such heat as may be available.



The corn crop here pictured was a failure because the soil moisture became exhausted just when the plants should have begun to form ears.

In the case of corn, which differs in this respect from perfect flowering plants, the setting of seed and the filling of the ears are seriously interfered with by summer droughts. Corn has two kinds of flowers—the tassel or pollen bearer and the seed forming or silk bearing flowers. The pollen from one falling on the silk of the other is necessary to the development of grain. Droughty conditions often hasten the shedding of pollen, but delay the appearance of silks, with the result that the pollen is mostly wasted. If fertilization is prevented in this way no amount of later rain can cause kernels to form or make a good grain yield. The corn crop is sometimes injured by hot winds that do less damage to such crops as alfalfa and the grain sorghums. The problem here is by the choice of planting time and the selection of early maturing or late maturing varieties to bring about the double flowering of the corn at times when drought is least liable to interfere with fertilization.

Everything corn gets from the soil is in liquid form, and the crop cannot grow unless the soil contains moisture to spare.

Irrigating Upland.

Where uplands near and overlooking lowlands are irrigated provision should be made for subdrainage or the filtering of the drainage, as the salts in the upland soils will be carried to the lowlands and damage them for agriculture. This has shown quite clearly in research work following the drainage from irrigated uplands.

Stop! Look! and Listen!

is the warning to motorists issued by the Hoosier State Automobile Association.

A campaign, to prevent automobile accidents at grade crossings is being launched by the Hoosier State Automobile Association. More than one thousand persons are killed in this country on grade crossings each year. Many more are seriously injured. About fifty are killed in the State of Indiana, and twice that many are seriously injured each year—the number is steadily increasing. There has been an increase of 100% in this class of accidents in the United States in the past five years.

Crossing watchmen are placed at many railroad crossings, but where there is not a watchman, motorists are criminally negligent in refusing to STOP or slow down, and then LOOK and LISTEN.

One hundred thousand circulars on this subject are being distributed from the office of the Hoosier State Automobile Association, 9th. floor of the Claypool Hotel. M. E. Noblet, Secretary of the Association, and Ed Jackson, Secretary of State, have united forces in planning the distribution of these circulars.

Any corporation or individual, willing to enclose one of these little circulars in their outgoing mail, may secure the circulars upon request sent to the Automobile Association headquarters. This admirable work in the interest of humanity has already met with favorable response and many concerns have requested a quantity of the circulars.

Native of Korea Lecture

In Lutheran Church last Thursday Evening—Interesting Account of Meeting Herein Given.

A most interesting lecture was given at the Lutheran Church, Thursday evening, by Joseph Kem, of Marion, Ind., a Korean student of the Taylor University at Upland. He is 29 years old spent three years in the Korean Army and worked his way to this country. His lecture was along the line of contrast between the United States and Korea (the latter place is about the size of Kansas and have twenty million inhabitants, five million of whom are Christians.) All Koreans have black, straight hair. They do not turn gray until 75 or 80 years old and if one happens to live one hundred years the hair turns black again. The Chinese, Japanese and Koreans are nearly the same race. The former being taller and slimmer, and the second being shorter than the latter. He told how the Japanese and Koreans happened to be geographically located, or the story as handed down through the generations which is as follows:—The first Emporer of China had heard that there was, somewhere a medicine that would give eternal life. He very much desired this medicine so he sent out 500 boys and girls to find it. They wandered onto what is now the Islands of Japan and never came back thus founding the Japanese race, and later he sent out 50 more boys and girls in another direction. These also did not return, but settled in Korea.

The little country of Korea was taken by the Japanese in 1911 and are still under their government, and are very appressive. The women wear high necked and long sleeved, long full skirted dresses, both summer and winter; the width of their girdle telling if they are married or single. The young girls wear their hair in a braid. The older women wear theirs combed on top of their heads in a knot. The men shave the crown of their heads brushing the rest to the top os the head in a knot. They also wear long coats and long pants with no pockets in them—They have two bags, one on each side, into which they put whatever it is wanted to carry or whatever an American would put into pockets. The boys sometimes fill their pants legs with fruits which they have taken from someones fruit trees, because they have no pockets in which to carry them.

The written language is the same in China, Japan and Korea but the spoken language is quite different, one country not being able to understand the other. The books, unlike ours, begin in the back or the right hand side of the book and the lines run up and down also from right to left. Girls were not educated at all before the Missionaries came there about 35 years ago. Now, boys and girls attend the same school and church. The schools were not like the American as no matter how large the school was only one instructor or proffessor is employed. He teaches the highest class, that class teaches the one below and so on down. But since the coming of the missionaries schools are more like ours; only in place of using a black board and and white chalk they use a white board and black chalk. They read or did read out loud and rapidly so they could hardly think or learn, he says. In this country small children wear white, as a rule, and older people wear dark clothes; there babies wear dark always and the older ones wear white. White is also the color they use for mourning. Ladies pay respect to the men there which is different from the American way.

The marriages take place very young and the couple to be wedded were not allowed to see each other until the wedding day, all arrangements being made by parents or friends. The bride is purchased for a sum of money. He said that was the reason he was a bachelor as his parents were very poor. He thought also it was very nice that he could have a chance to pick his own wife now. Rice boiled in just water with no seasoning of any kind and vegatables are the main food. They do not all sit at the same table or in the same room to eat. The man of the house sits in the best rooms and the wife sits in the kitchen while the children are perhaps on the porch. But unlike the American again, where each have separate sleeping rooms, the Korean family all sleep in the same room on mattresses laid on the floor. They do not have very gay social life.

The buildings instead of being built up in stories as are ours, are built all on the ground and in circles; and as wealthy as a man is so will be the number of circles or rooms which his house will contain. The houses of the wealthy are rooted with tile; the middle class, with stone, and the dwellings of the poor are made of mud and have thatched roofs. He says the Americans worship the living God here, the Koreans worshiped idols made of gold, silver, wood, stone and straw. But these three countries, China, Japan and Korea are better educated since the coming of the Missionary. He said, since they have found the living God they are becoming civilized and are being greatly blessed. Those who have not been reached by the missionary, go once a year to the mountains where they bury their dead and spend sometime worshiping their ancestors. They are very superstitious but this is being overcome by education and christianity. He favored the audience with several songs sung in his language. Our hymns translated in their language and set to our tunes Their National songs are divided in two classes, the "Happy" songs and the "Sorrow" songs.

At the end of his lecture anyone wishing to could ask any question they wished. He was asked how he came to be converted, he said, he was at Ping Yan and a Missionary gave him a tract containing the four gospels, which he read. Then on his way to this country he stopped at the Hawaii Islands and there learned more about the Bible. Then he desired to become better educated so he could go back and teach his own people, and would go now but the Japanese try to kill all Korean young people who are educated, and he will not go back yet.

It might be interesting to the ladies of the W. C. T. U., to know that to help pay his college expenses, he did housework for the State W. C. T. U., President, Mrs. Culla J. Veyhinger. He said, he washed dishes, swept and made beds.

PAIN? NOT A BIT!
LIFT YOUR CORNS
OR CALLUSES OFF

No humbug! Apply few drops then just lift them away with fingers.

This new drug is an ether compound discovered by a Cincinnati chemist. It is called freezone, and can now be obtained in tiny bottles as here shown at very little cost from any drug store. Just ask for freezone. Apply a drop or two directly upon a tender corn or callus and instantly the soreness disappears. Shortly you will find the corn or callus so loose that you can lift it off, root and all, with the fingers.

Not a twinge of pain, soreness or irritation; not even the slightest smarting, either when applying freezone or afterwards.

This drug doesn't eat up the corn or callus, but shrivels them so they loosen and come right out. It is no humbug! It works like a charm. For a few cents you can get rid of every hard corn, soft corn or corn between the toes, as well as painful calluses on bottom of your feet. It never disappoints and never burns, bites or inflames. If your druggist hasn't any freezone yet, tell him to get a little bottle for you from his wholesale house.—adv.

Plain rations, implements, a small stock of cows, poultry, etc., roofing material, water tanks, etc., will be supplied for the first year. This will be charged as a loan and must be eventually refunded to the state.

When the source of the laughter is located it turns out to be a silly-looking bird with clumsy, square body and open mouth, sitting unconcernedly on a stump.

THE DESTROYING ANGEL

By
LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

—22—

Aside from him, the only other occupant of the stage was Sara Law. She sat on a stone bench with her profile to the audience, her back to the right of the proscenium arch; so that she could not, without turning, have noticed the entrance of Ember and her husband. A shy, light, deathlessly youthful figure in pale and flowing garments that molded themselves fluently to her sweet and girlish body, in a posture of pensive meditation: she was nothing less than adorable. Whitaker could not take his eyes from her, for sheer wonder and delight.

He was only vaguely conscious that Max, at length satisfied, barked a word to that effect to an unseen electrician off to the left, and waving his hand with a gesture indelibly associated with his personality, dragged a light cane-seated chair to the left of the proscenium and sat himself down.

"All ready?" he demanded in a sharp and irritable voice.

The woman on the marble step nodded imperceptibly.

"Go ahead," snapped the manager.

An actor advanced from the wings, paused and addressed the seated woman. His lines were brief. She lifted her head with a startled air, listening. He ceased to speak, and her voice of golden velvet filled the house with the flowing beauty of its unforgettably sweet modulations. Beyond the footlights a handful of sophisticated and skeptical habitues of the theater forgot for the moment their ingrained incredulity and thrilled in sympathy with the wonderful rapture of that voice of eternal Youth. Whitaker himself for the time forgot that he was the husband of this woman and her lover; she moved before his vision in the guise of some divine creature, divinely unattainable, a dream woman divorced utterly from any semblance of reality.

That opening scene was one perhaps unique in the history of the stage. Composed by Max in some mad, poetical moment of inspired plagiarism, it not only owned a poignant and enthralling beauty of imagery, but it moved with an almost Grecian certitude, with a significance extraordinarily direct and devoid of circumlocution, seeming to lay bare the living tissue of immortal drama.

But with the appearance of other characters there came a change: the rare atmosphere of the opening began to dissipate perceptibly. The action clouded and grew vague. The auditors began to feel the flutterings of uncertainty in the air. Something was failing to cross the footlights. The sweeping and assured gesture of the accomplished playwright faltered: a clumsy bit of construction was damningly exposed; faults of characterization multiplied depressingly. Sara Law herself lost an indefinable proportion of her rare and provoking charm; the strangeness of failing to hold her audience in an ineluctable grasp seemed at once to nettle and distress her. Max himself seemed suddenly to wake to the amazing fact that there was something enormously and irremediably wrong; he began with exasperating frequency to halt the action, to interrupt scenes with advice and demands for repetition. He found it impossible to be still, to keep his seat or control his rasping, irritable voice. Subordinate characters on the stage lost their heads and either forgot to act or overacted. And then—intolerable climax!—of a sudden somebody in the orchestra chairs laughed in outright derision in the middle of a passage meant to be tenderly emotional.

The voice of Sara Law broke and fell. She stood trembling and unstrung. Max, without a word, turned on his heel and swung out of sight into the wings. Four other actors on the stage, aside from Sara Law, hesitated and drew together in doubt and bewilderment. And then, abruptly, with no warning whatever, the illusion of gloom in the auditorium and moonlight in the postscenium was rent away by the glare of the full complement of electric lights installed in the house.

A thought later, while still all were blinking and gasping with surprise, Max strode into view just behind the footlights. Halting, he swept the array of auditors with an ominous and truculent stare.

So quickly was this startling change consummated that Whitaker had no more than time to realize the reappearance of the manager before he caught his wrathful and venomous glance fixed to his own bewildered face. And something in the light that flickered wildly behind Max's eyes reminded him so strongly of a similar expression he had remarked in the eyes of Drummond, the night the latter had been captured by Ember and Sum Fat, that in alarm he half rose from his seat.

Simultaneously he saw Max spring toward the box, with a distorted and snarling countenance. He was tugging at something in his pocket. It appeared in the shape of a heavy pistol.

Instantly Whitaker was caught and tripped by Ember and sent sprawling on the floor of the box. As this happened, he heard the voice of the firearm, sharp and vicious—a single report.

Unhurt, he picked himself up in time to catch a glimpse of Max, on the stage, momentarily helpless in the embrace of a desperate and frantic woman who had caught his arms from behind and, presumably, had so deflected his arm. In the same breath Ember, who had leaped to the railing round the box, threw himself across the footlights with the lithe certainty of a beast of prey and, seemingly in as many deft motions, knocked the pistol from the manager's hand, wrested him from the arms of the actress, laid him flat and knelt upon him.

With a single bound Whitaker followed him to the stage; in another he had his wife in his arms and was soothing her first transports of semi-hysterical terror. . . .

* * * * * * *

It was possibly a quarter of an hour later when Ember paused before a door in the ground-floor dressing-room gangway of the Theater Max—a door distinguished by the initials "S. L." in the center of a golden star. With some hesitation, with even a little diffidence, he lifted a hand and knocked.

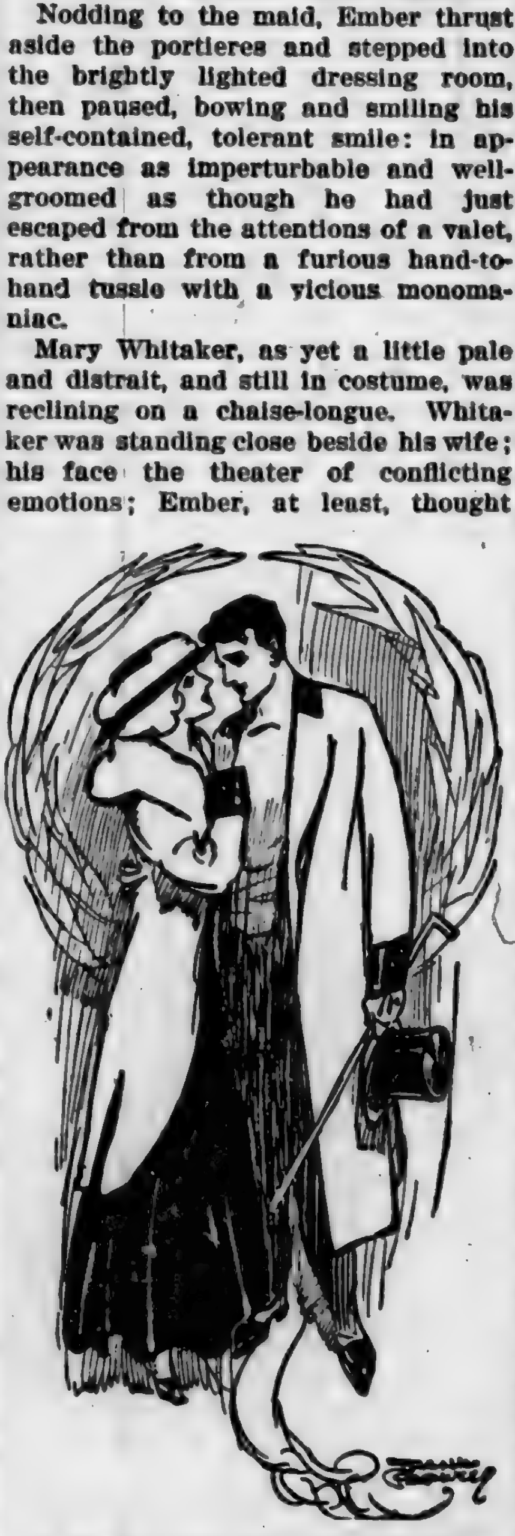
At once the door was opened by the maid, Elise. Recognizing Ember, she smiled and stood aside, making way for him to enter the small, curtained lobby.

"Madam—and monsieur," she said with smiling significance, "told me to show you in at once, Monsieur Ember."

From behind the curtains, Whitaker's voice lifted up impatiently: "That you, old man? Come right in!"

Nodding to the maid, Ember thrust aside the portieres and stepped into the brightly lighted dressing room, then paused, bowing and smiling his self-contained, tolerant smile: in appearance as imperturbable and well-groomed as though he had just escaped from the attentions of a valet, rather than from a furious hand-to-hand tussle with a vicious monomaniac.

Mary Whitaker, as yet a little pale and distrait, and still in costume, was reclining on a chaise-longue. Whitaker was standing close beside his wife; his face the theater of conflicting emotions; Ember, at least, thought with a shrewd glance to recognize a pulsating light of joy beneath a mask of interest and distress and a flash of embarrassment.



"I Want to See the End of It All."

"I am intruding?" he suggested gravely, with a slight turn as if offering to withdraw.

"No."

The word faltering on the lips of Mary Whitaker was lost in an emphatic iteration by Whitaker.

"Sit down!" he insisted. "As if we'd let you escape now, after you'd kept us here in suspense!"

He offered a chair, but Ember first advanced to take the hand held out to him by the woman on the chaise-longue.

"You are feeling—more composed?" he inquired.

Her gaze met his bravely. "I am—troubled, perhaps—but happy," she said.

"Then I am very glad," he said, smiling at the delicate color that enhanced her exquisite beauty as she made the confession. "I had hoped as much." He looked from the one to the other. "You have . . . made up your minds?"

The wife answered for both: "It is settled, dear friend: I can struggle no longer. I thought myself a strong woman; I have tried to believe myself a genius bound upon the wheel of an ill-starred destiny; but I find I am"—the glorious voice trembled slightly—"only a woman in love and no stronger than her love."

"I am very glad," Ember repeated, "for both your sakes. It's a happy consummation of my dearest wishes."

"We owe you everything," Whitaker said with feeling, dropping an awkward hand on the other's shoulder. "It was you who threw us together, down there on the Great West bay, so that we learned to know one another . . ."

"I plead guilty to that little plot—yes," Ember laughed. "But, best of all, this comes at just the right time—the rightest time, when there can no longer be any doubts or questions or misunderstandings, no ground for further fears and apprehensions, when 'the destroying angel' of your 'ill-starred destiny,' my dear"—he turned to the woman—"is exorcised—banished—proscribed—"

"Max—!" Whitaker struck in explosively.

"—is on his way to the police station, well guarded," Ember affirmed with a nod and a grim smile. "I have his confession, roughly jotted down, but signed, and attested by several witnesses. . . . I'm glad you were out of the way; it was rather a painful scene, and disorderly; it wouldn't have been pleasant for Mrs. Whitaker. . . . We had the deuce of a time clearing the theater: human curiosity is a tremendously persistent and resistant force. And then I had some trouble dealing with the misplaced loyalty of the staff of the house. . . . However, eventually I got Max to myself—alone, that is, with several men I could depend on. And then I heartlessly put him through the third degree—forestalling my friends, the police. By dint of asserting as truths and personal discoveries what I merely suspected, I broke down his denials. He owned up, doggedly enough, and yet with that singular pride which I have learned to associate with some phases of homicidal mania. . . . I won't distress you with details: the truth is that Max was quite mad on the subject of his luck; he considered it, as I suspected, indissolubly associated with Sara Law. When poor Custer committed suicide, he saved Max from ruin and innocently showed him the way to save himself thereafter, when he felt in peril, by assassinating Hamilton and, later, Thurston. Drummond only cheated a like fate, and you"—turning to Whitaker—"escaped by the narrowest shave. Max hadn't meant to run the risk of putting you out of the way unless he thought it absolutely necessary, but the failure of his silly play in rehearsal tonight, coupled with the discovery that you were in the theater, drove him temporarily insane with hate, chagrin and jealousy."

Concluding, Ember rose. "I must follow him now to the police station. . . . I shall see you both soon again—?"

The woman gave him both her hands. "There's no way to thank you," she said—"our dear, dear friend!"

"No way," Whitaker echoed regretfully.

"No way?" Ember laughed quietly, holding her hands tightly clasped. "But I see you together—happy—Oh, believe me, I am fully thanked!"

Bowing, he touched his lips gently to both hands, released them with a little sigh that ended in a contented chuckle, exchanged a short, firm grasp with Whitaker, and left them. . . .

Whitaker, following almost immediately to the gangway, found Ember had already left the theater.

For some minutes he wandered to and fro in the gangway, pausing now and again on the borders of the deserted stage. There were but few of the house staff visible, and those few were methodically busy with preparations to close up. Beyond the dismal gutter of the footlights the auditorium yawned cavernous and shadowy, peopled only by rows of chairs ghostly in their dust-cloths. The street entrances were already closed, locked and dark. On the stage a single cluster stand of electric bulbs made visible the vast, gloomy dome of the flies and the whitewashed walls against which sections of scenery were stacked like cards. An electrician in his street clothes lounged beside the doorkeeper's cubicle, at the stage entrance, smoking a cigarette and conferring with the doorman while subjecting Whitaker to a curious and antagonistic stare. The muffled rumble of their voices was the only sound audible, aside from an occasional racket of bootheels in the gangways as one actor after another left his dressing room and hastened to the street, keen-set for the clash of gossiping tongues in theatrical clubs and restaurants.

Gradually the building grew more and more empty and silent, until at length Whitaker was left alone with the shadows and the two employees. These last betrayed signs of impatience. He himself felt a little sympathy for their temper. Women certainly did take an unconscionable time to dress! . . .

At length he heard them hurrying along the lower gangway, and turned to join his wife at the stage entrance. Elise passed on, burdened with two heavy handbags, and disappeared into the rain-washed alleyway. The electrician detached his shoulders from the wall, ground his cigarette under heel and lounged over to the switchboard.

Mary Whitaker turned her face, shadowy and mystical, touched with her faint and inscrutable smile, up to her husband's.

"Wait," she begged in a whisper. "I want to see"—her breath checked—"the end of it all."

They heard hissings and clickings at the switchboard. The gangway lights vanished in a breath. The single cluster stand on the stage disappeared—and the house was blotted out utterly with its extinguishment. There remained alight only the single dull bulb in the doorman's cubicle.

Whitaker slipped an arm round his wife. She trembled within his embrace.

"Black out," she said in a gentle and regretful voice: "the last exit: Curtain—End of the Play!"

"No," he said in a voice of sublime confidence—"no; it's only the prologue curtain. Now for the play, dear heart . . . the real play . . . life . . . love . . ."

LIKE PROHIBITION.

The Gothenburg Independent, a weekly paper published in Nebraska, wrote to the editor of the Denver Bulletin (official organ of union labor in Colorado) asking about the effect of prohibition as it affects the working people of that state. The following reply was received:

"The law in nine months has worked a wonderful revolution for good; and at least 75 per cent of the union voters who were against the amendment would support it now. The wage earners have ceased to spend their money for booze, and are buying bread and clothing for their families. I would say on the whole the condition of Colorado working people is at least 50 per cent better as a result of statewide prohibition, and the city of Denver is a great deal more prosperous. All the storerooms vacated by saloons are now occupied by legitimate enterprises, and the citizens only wonder why they tolerated the booze joints as long as they did. The increase in savings deposits has been remarkable, and merchants report collections from 40 to 60 per cent better.

"Take the Bulletin as a concrete illustration. It was prophesied by our wet friends that a labor paper couldn't exist in a dry town. We lost about fifty dollars a month in liquor advertising, and some 350 bartenders and brewery worker subscribers. Today, we are doing four times the advertising business, and have five times as many subscribers as when Denver had 350 saloons and five breweries in operation. Besides, the subscribers and advertisers pay their bills much more promptly."

DIFFERENCE IN SONS.

A business man was approached one day by a saloonkeeper who asked if he had a position in which he could place his (the saloonkeeper's) son. The two men had been life-long friends. The business man hesitated a moment and the saloon man quickly followed up his request with this statement:

"I know he was a little bit wild and reckless for a time, and it is my fault, because of the business I am in. I think I have him straightened out now, and I want to place him outside of and away from the saloon and put it up to him to make good in a respectable line of business."

The business man promised to give the young man a chance at the first opportunity. His friend thanked him, and then went back to his saloon, put on his white apron and was ready for the sons of other fathers as they might drop into his place, to sell them his beer and his whisky and give them their start or help them on their way down the grade to the state of incompetents and undesirables.

NOT ENOUGH PRISONERS!

Two of the questions which are vexing the minds of residents of Birmingham, Ala., are what to do with the handsome new $100,000 prison which after 17 months of prohibition is practically empty, and how to keep the city streets clean when the number of prisoners has fallen off so materially that there are not nearly enough men to do this work. The larger number of arrests now are for speeding and illegal sale of alcohol. The arrests for speeding are not due to joy riding, but to the increased number of automobiles, another evidence of the city's prosperity under prohibition.

BOY'S PROHIBITION SPEECH.

The saloon question was the subject of a debate before a Pennsylvania club of boys. One young fellow was on the side opposed to the saloon. He was the youngest and smallest boy on either team and was not accustomed to debate. When he arose to speak, he had a bad case of stage fright and forgot what he had prepared. The boy's father was a drunkard and the little fellow won the debate by simply saying:

"If any of you do not believe the saloon is an evil, just look at our home. No one can deny what it has done for us."

HAVE BANK ACCOUNTS.

"It's great!" said the longshoreman of Seattle, speaking of prohibition. "I know a lot of longshoremen that used to spend every cent they could get hold of in the saloons and that now have $200 or $300 in the bank." Mr. James A. Duncan, secretary of the Central Labor council in that city, bears out this testimony. "It is indeed encouraging," he says, "to see men of such crafts as the longshoremen, who were content but a short time ago to walk around during their leisure in overalls, now dressed in such manner as would do credit to bankers."

DRINKERS AND TEETOTALERS.

The military hospitals are realizing the difference between them, and doctors and nurses are commenting upon it. The constant drinker inspires dread, for the merely superficial wound often becomes septic and complications ensue, protracted illness and imperfect recovery. Much more serious wounds in the abstainers are easily and speedily treated, complications of septic origin are generally avoided, and quick recoveries are the rule.—British Temperance Advocate

Dividends From Potatoes.

Farmers are prosperous, at least down in southern New Jersey, where a large percentage of New York city's potatoes are grown. The South Jersey Farmers' Exchange has declared a 100 per cent stock dividend and an 8 per cent cash dividend. The exchange is a co-operative selling organization, with 750 farmers as members. At its sixteen stations last year 907 carloads of white potatoes were handled at an average price of 90 cents a bushel. It did a total business in 1916 of 1,087,347.70, with a net profit of $34,237.79. This was the biggest year since its organization in 1900.

MOTHER! LOOK AT CHILD'S TONGUE

If cross, feverish, constipated, give "California Syrup of Figs."

A laxative today saves a sick child tomorrow. Children simply will not take the time from play to empty their bowels, which become clogged up with waste, liver gets sluggish; stomach sour.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, or your child is listless, cross, feverish, breath bad, restless, doesn't eat heartily, full of cold or has sore throat or any other children's ailment, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," then don't worry, because it is perfectly harmless, and in a few hours all this constipation poison, sour bile and fermenting waste will gently move out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again. A thorough "inside cleansing" is ofttimes all that is necessary. It should be the first treatment given in any sickness.

Beware of counterfeit fig syrups. Ask at the store for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly printed on the bottle. Adv.

Long Distance Heroism.

"I see where a vaudeville performer bills himself as the 'Lusitania Singing Fireman.'"

"I presume he sang while the Lusitania was sinking?"

"That is what he wishes the public to infer, but he may have been singing in a theater 4,000 or 5,000 miles away."

Wash day is smile day if you use Red Cross Ball Blue, American made, therefore the best made. Adv.

A Mother's Burden

A mother who suffers kidney trouble, finds it hard to keep up her daily work. Lameness, backache, sharp pains when stooping and "blue", nervous or dizzy spells, make home life dreary. Active kidneys bring back vigor, health and a pleasure in family duties. If the kidneys are weak try a box of Doan's Kidney Pills.

New Master Explosive.

"Silver Picric acetylide," a new explosive discovered by Rev. Dr. Julius A. Nieuwland, C. S., dean of science at Notre Dame university, Indiana, will prove more destructive, it is said, than any other agent known to the scientific world if the experiments now being conducted in the local laboratory indicate its actual power.

Doctor Nieuwland first came upon an atom of the new compound two months ago when a minute particle completely wrecked an apparatus being used by one of his students.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER

DOGS' PARTY.

"Bow-wow," said Pat, the Dog.

"Bow-wow," barked Gyp, another Dog.

"I am wagging my tail," said Pat. "I would like so much to play with you."

"And I am shaking my paw at you," said Gyp. "I would like to play with you just as much as you would like to play with me."

"Good-good-good," barked Pat.

And Gyp danced around very happily. They were both young dogs and they loved to play and frisk about.

It was a snowy day, and the snow was soft and light. Gyp and Pat were both white fox terriers; Pat had one black spot on his back, and Gyp had a brown spot over one eye. But in the snow they looked almost as white as the snow did.

"Let's play snowballs," said Pat.

"Do you mean throw snowballs?" said Gyp.

"That's just what I mean," said Pat.

So they began lifting the soft snow with their paws and throwing it at each other. Such fun as they had! They frolicked in the snow, and they put their heads right into the snowbanks.

Then they would take turns in playing Dead Dog, and one would lie down while the other covered him up with a little snow.

Then he would stay quite still until the dog who had covered him up would bark,

"Wake up, wake up you sleepy head,
"We're all through playing that you are dead."

With a bound they'd both start playing and frisking in the snow again. Such a time as they had. Soon two little girls came walking by. They were both carrying books and pencil boxes, for they had been to school.

"There's Pat," said the little girl, named Helen.

"And there's my Gyp," said the second little girl, whose name was Dorothy.

"How did they ever happen to be together I wonder?" asked Helen.

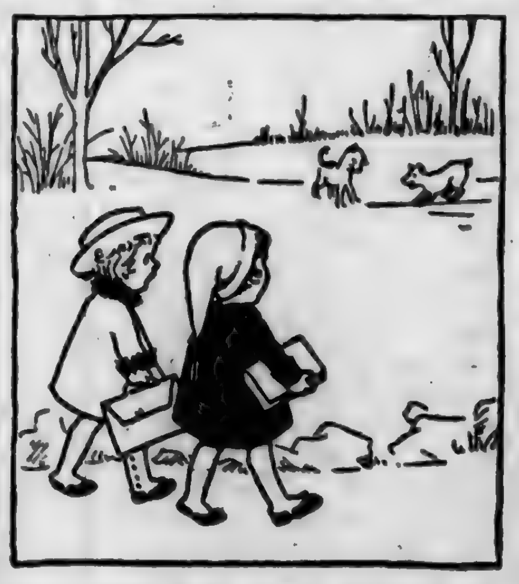
For while Helen and Dorothy were the very best of friends, and their dogs loved to play with each other, still they lived quite far apart. They didn't usually go to each other's homes unless Dorothy and Helen were going to play together.

"Well," said Helen, "I say we'll have a tea party. I'm sure mother will be willing. She said I could ask you very soon. That was this morning, and this afternoon means very soon."

"All right," said Dorothy, "I'd love to come."

"And of course the Dogs will play together," said Helen.

"As they've found each other now I don't suppose they would enjoy anything better than a tea party, for I've a new set of dishes for Gyp and Pat," added Helen.



Two Little Girls Came Walking By.

So the little Girls and the Dogs all played together. The Dogs did their tricks and the little Girls laughed and clapped.

Then the Dogs played with balls while the little Girls played with their Dolls.

When it came time for the tea-party, the little Girls sat by a small blue painted table, and the Dogs had cushions to sit on.

They had tea, which was mostly sugar and milk, but it was good and hot and it had a very pretty tea color. Then they had delicious bread and butter and jam. And large bowls of milk for the Dogs. Gyp and Pat also had a fine chop bone apiece.

It was certainly a very jolly little tea party, and when Dorothy had to leave she said, "It was all because our Dogs were playing together that we decided to have this little party, and it has been such fun."

"Yes," said Helen. "Our Dogs know when it's time to have a party, don't they?"

And the Dogs wagged their tails and barked as though to say, "We know when to have parties."

The Elusive Nickel.

Every boy knows how annoying it is to drop something into a sidewalk grating or between the cracks of a sidewalk. And nearly all boys have had such an experience at some time or other. A simple remedy is generally at hand in the form of a stick and a piece of chewing gum or tar. Smear the gum on the end of the stick and then lower it into the hole or grating. When the gum adheres to the lost article all that is left to do is to lift it out. I have had several occasions to use this idea and it has always worked fine.—American Boy.

LESSON FOR MARCH 11

JESUS THE BREAD OF LIFE.

LESSON TEXT—John 6:24-37.
GOLDEN TEXT—Jesus said unto them, I am the bread of life.—John 6:35.

Following the feeding of the five thousand, Jesus saw the design of the multitude (v. 15), and separated himself unto prayer. Following that communion, the disciples went over the sea toward the City of Capernaum (v. 17), but in his supernatural power he followed them, walking upon the water (v. 19). Midway he entered their ship, and immediately they reached the land toward which they had been striving (v. 21; Mk. 6:48-49). The next day (John 6:22) the people who at this period were following him in such great multitudes, took steps to reach him. Finding that he was not at their side of the lake, they took boats and came to Capernaum, "seeking for Jesus" (v. 24). We read that the common people heard him gladly. These people wanted the comradship of Jesus, and the longest bread line in the world today is that of hungry-hearted men. The question is, are we willing to give them the loaves of comfort?

I. Bread Which Perisheth (vv. 23-24). "If you think you will always get the loaves and fishes simply because you have followed the Lord, you have handed yourself a goldbrick."—Dr. Griffin Bull. Most of us will go further for victuals than we will for a vision. When the people found Jesus (v. 25) they rather reprimanded him for leaving them, when the fact of the matter was that he was not beholden to them in any sense whatsoever. It looks very well for these people to be "seeking Jesus," but they were seeking the wrong thing (v. 26). It was not really Jesus himself they wanted, but the loaves and the fishes. It was not the "sign" as indicating his divine character that drew them, but simply the wonder as indicated by the fact that they expected a constant supply of bread, nor did they see in that bread the sign but only the bread.

Salvation is the free gift of God apart from works. Nevertheless he commands the exercise of will. "This is the work of God that ye believe on him whom he hath sent" (v. 29). This is not inconsistent with I Cor. 12:3, i. e., "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord but by the Holy Ghost." Like the two blades of a pair of shears, the executive act of my will in believing on Jesus is met by the regenerating energy of God's spirit making me a son of his.

The Jews demanded a sign as a condition of believing on him, when he, himself, was the greatest of all signs (v. 36). They sought to enforce their demands by reference to Moses and the manna, but Jesus showed them that the manna was a type of "the (true) bread of God." The characteristics of this bread are: (1) It comes down from heaven; (2) It giveth life unto the world. Jesus' hearers did not understand what he meant, and exclaimed: "Evermore give us this bread." Jesus was trying to impress upon his hearers the same diligence in heavenly matters as in the pursuit of earthly meals.

III. The Everlasting Bread (vv. 35-37). Misunderstanding his teaching (v. 34) Jesus said unto them plainly: "I am the bread of life," meaning that he is the true bread of God. He is not only the giver of the bread of life, but he, himself, is the Bread of Life. As bread will satisfy the needs of the physical body, giving strength, vitality and energy, so he will supply the needs of the soul. He will satisfy the deep hunger and longing which is the evidence of need, and he will also satisfy the thirst which is the more intense desire—the spiritual craving of the soul. Jesus ministers to the never-failing strength of all who come to him, and who believe on him. Coming to him is seeking help and blessing from him. Believing on him is the absolute abandonment of self to him. This multitude had actually seen the living bread (v. 36), yet they believed not because they were so occupied with the material and unreal things of this world.

Today we find men so taken up with the material and unreal that they neither appreciate nor believe upon the true bread which has been sent down from God out of heaven. Not all will come to him (John 5:24), but anyone can prove that he belongs to the elect of God and the company of the Father by coming to Jesus (v. 37). If any man does come, he will be received. These words of Jesus are very positive, "I will in no wise cast him out."

Jesus, the One who raises the dead, is therefore co-equal with God. Note the remainder of this chapter: "I will raise him up at the last day" (v. 40); "He that believeth on me hath everlasting life" (v. 47); "I am the bread of life" (v. 48); "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, ye have no life in you" (v. 53); "Whoso eateth my flesh hath eternal life" (. 54); "For my flesh is meat indeed" (v. 55); "He that eateth my flesh dwelleth in me and I in him" (v. 56); "He that eateth me, even he shall live by me" (v. 57).

This is symbolical, it is true, but it is very real.

A Comprehensive Order.

Bill Pinkerton of the Chicago detective force was accosted on State street by an ex from Joliet, to whom he had shown some favors in former years. The ex, being temporarily flush with money, invited Bill to have lunch with him at one of the fashionable restaurants.

The ex offered the bill of fare to Bill, and the waiter, having taken his order, handed the French menu card to the ex. He looked at it a moment, puzzled at the strange hyeroglyphics, and then turned to the waiter:

"Where are the pork and beans on this card?"

The waiter indicated the item.

"Well, bring me everything above and below that line."

THICK, GLOSSY HAIR FREE FROM DANDRUFF

Girls! Beautify Your Hair! Make It Soft, Fluffy and Luxuriant—Try the Moist Cloth.

Try as you will, after an application of Danderine, you cannot find a single trace of dandruff or falling hair and your scalp will not itch, but what will please you most, will be after a few weeks' use, when you see new hair, fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair—growing all over the scalp.

A little Danderine immediately doubles the beauty of your hair. No difference how dull, faded, brittle and scraggy, just moisten a cloth with Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. The effect is immediate and amazing—your hair will be light, fluffy and wavy, and have an appearance of abundance; an incomparable luster, softness and luxuriance, the beauty and shimmer of true hair health.

Get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any store and prove that your hair is as pretty and soft as any—that it has been neglected or injured by careless treatment—that's all. Adv.

Donald was troubled with indigestion, which made necessary a careful supervision of his diet. One night at dinner he asked for a second helping of dessert.

"No, Donald," said his aunt. "Don't you remember the last time you ate so much pudding, how it made you dream about lions and bears and tigers and all sorts of wild animals?"

"Well, I don't care," he whispered, "it made me dream that I had a great big gun there, too!"

HIGH COST OF LIVING

This is a serious matter with housekeepers as food prices are constantly going up. To overcome this, cut out the high priced meat dishes and serve your family more Skinner's Macaroni and Spaghetti, the cheapest, most delicious and most nutritious of all foods. Write the Skinner Mfg. Co., Omaha, Nebr., for beautiful cook book, telling how to prepare it in a hundred different ways. It's free to every woman.—Adv.

Many a man's idea of comfortable clothing is the kind his wife won't let him wear.

Diet, Exercise or Death!

"An eminent medical authority writes that most of our city folks die of a thickening of the arteries or of kidney disease. The kidneys become clogged and do not filter the poisons from the blood, and one trouble follows another, high blood pressure damages the heart, arteries and kidneys. Usually its danger signals are backache, pain here or there, swollen feet or ankles, rheumatic twinges or spots appearing before the eyes.

"The very best remedy is this: Eat meat but once a day, or not at all. Plenty of outdoor exercise, and drink pure water frequently. Before meals take a little Anuric, the great uric acid neutralizer that is easily obtained at the drug store. When you have dizziness, chills or sweating, worry, or dragging pains in back, try this wonderful enemy to uric acid, which Dr. Pierce of Buffalo, N. Y., discovered and named Anuric. Anuric, more potent than lithia, dissolves uric acid as hot water does sugar."

Prudent Decision.

"Would you go to war if your country called you?"

"Of course I would," answered the patriotic citizen, "but I would first make sure that my country was calling me, and not a lot of leather-lunged jingoes."

GERMAN PLOT AGAINST U. S. IS REVEALED

War on America by Alliance of Mexico and Japan With Teutons Proposed.

WILSON HAS THE EVIDENCE

President Has Copy of Official Instructions Outlining Details of Conspiracy Against Our Government—Carranza Told to Reconquer Texas, Arizona and New Mexico.

Washington, March 3.—On Friday morning the Western Newspaper Union was enabled to reveal that Germany in planning unrestricted submarine warfare and counting its consequences, proposed an alliance with Mexico and Japan to make war on the United States if this country should not remain neutral.

Japan, through Mexican mediation, was to be urged to abandon her allies and join in the attack on the United States.

Mexico, for her reward, was to receive general financial support from Germany, reconquer Texas, New Mexico and Arizona—lost provinces—and share in the victorious peace terms Germany contemplated.

Details of the Plot.

Details were left to German Minister von Eckhardt in Mexico City, who by instructions signed by German Foreign Minister Zimmermann at Berlin January 19, 1917, was directed to propose the alliance with Mexico to General Carranza and suggest that Mexico seek to bring Japan into the plot.

These instructions were transmitted to Von Eckhardt through Count von Bernstorff, former German ambassador here, now on his way home to Germany under a safe conduct obtained from his enemies by the country against which he was plotting war.

Pictures World Dominion.

Germany pictured to Mexico by broad intimation England and the entente allies defeated; Germany and her allies triumphant and in world domination by the instrument of unrestricted warfare.

A copy of Secretary Zimmermann's instructions to Von Eckhardt, sent through Von Bernstorff, is in possession of the United States government.

Duplicity Is Exposed.

The document has been in the hands of the government since President Wilson broke off diplomatic relations with Germany. It has been kept secret while the president has been asking congress for full authority to deal with Germany, and while congress has been hesitating. It was in the president's hands while Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg was declaring that the United States had placed an interpretation on the submarine declaration "never intended by Germany" and that Germany had promoted and honored friendly relations with the United States "as an heirloom from Frederick the Great."

Of itself, if there were no other, it is considered a sufficient answer to the German chancellor's plaint that the United States "brusquely" broke off relations without giving "authentic" reasons for its action.

Supplies Missing Link.

The document supplies the missing link to many separate chains of circumstances, which until now have seemed to lead to no definite point.

It sheds new light upon the frequently reported but indefinable movements of the Mexican government to couple its situation with the friction between the United States and Japan.

It adds another chapter to the celebrated report of Jules Cambon, French ambassador in Berlin before the war, of Germany's world-wide plans for stirring strife on every continent where they might aid her in the struggle for world domination which she dreamed was close at hand.

It adds a climax to the operations of Count von Bernstorff and the German embassy in this country, which have been colored with passport frauds, charges of dynamite plots and intrigue, the full extent of which never has been published.

Emphasizes Our Perils.

It gives new credence to persistent reports of submarine bases on Mexican territory in the Gulf of Mexico; it takes cognizance of a fact long recognized by American army chiefs, that if Japan ever undertook to invade the United States it probably would be through Mexico, over the border and into the Mississippi valley to split the country in two.

German Foreign Minister's Instructions to the German Minister to Mexico.

Berlin, Jan. 19, 1917.—On the 1st of February we intend to begin submarine warfare unrestricted. In spite of this, it is our intention to endeavor to keep neutral the United States of America.

If this attempt is not successful we propose an alliance on the following basis with Mexico: That we shall make war together and together make peace. We shall give general financial support, and it is understood that Mexico is to reconquer the lost territory in New Mexico, Texas and Arizona. The details are left to you for settlement.

You are instructed to inform the president of Mexico of the above in the greatest confidence as soon as it is certain that there will be an outbreak of war with the United States, and suggest that the president of Mexico, on his own initiative, should communicate with Japan, suggesting adherence at once to this plan; at the same time offer to mediate between Germany and Japan.

Please call to the attention of the president of Mexico that the employment of ruthless submarine warfare now promises to compell England to make peace in a few months.

(Signed) ZIMMERMANN.

* * *

It recalls that Count von Bernstorff when handed his passports was very reluctant to return to Germany, but expressed a preference for asylum in Cuba.

It gives a new explanation to the repeated arrests on the border of men charged by American military authorities with being German intelligence agents.

Last of all, it seems to show a connection with General Carranza's recent proposal to neutrals that exports of food and munitions to the entente allies be cut off, and an intimation that he might stop the supply of oil, so vital to the British navy, which is exported from the Tampico fields.

What Will Congress Do?

What congress will do, and how members of congress who openly have sympathized with Germany in their opposition to clothing the president with full authority to protect American rights will regard the revelation of Germany's machinations to attack the United States is the subject of the keenest interest.

Such a proposal as Germany instructed her minister to make to Mexico borders on an act of war, if, actually, it is not one.

No doubt exists here now that the persistent reports during the last two years of the operations of German agents not alone in Mexico but all through Central America and the West Indies are based on fact.

There is now no doubt whatever that the proposed alliance with Mexico was known to high Mexican officials who are distinguished for their anti-Americanism. Among them are Rafael Zubaran, Carranza's minister to Germany, and Luis Cabrera, Carranza's minister of finance.

The Hand of Mexico.

It is apparent that the proposal had taken definite form when Zubaran returned to Mexico City from Berlin recently. His return from his foreign post was covered by the fact that Carranza had called in many of his diplomats for "conferences."

Denied at Japanese Embassy.

It was declared by a high Japanese authority on Wednesday night that if the German proposal of an alliance ever reached Tokyo it was regarded as merely a new ebullition of German "kultur" and that it was thrown in the wastebasket where it belonged.

He asserted no such proposal had been made to the embassy here and that if it had been no attention would have been paid to it.

He said: "The whole idea was absolutely preposterous."

In order to make an alliance with Germany, he added, it would be necessary for Japan to break from the allies and negotiate a separate peace with the Teutonic powers. But above all that, he said, the Japanese sincerely desired friendly relations with the United States.

READY FOR WAR WITH U. S.

Chancellor Hollweg's Speech Regarded as Preparing People of Germany for Conflict.

Berlin, March 2.—Declaration of war on Germany by the United States would be no surprise to the people.

It is no exaggeration to say they look for it and would be rather surprised if it did not come.

They are convinced President Wilson is determined to throw the full weight of the United States into the scales on the side of the allies.

This nation-wide sentiment was manifest as the German people "digested" the speech of the chancellor in the reichstag. It was the first time in Dr. Bethmann-Hollweg's career that he voiced criticism of America's attitude in this war.

War with America would mean the removal of the last barriers to the U-boat campaign, and the submarine could sweep every part of all oceans.

ITS FAME RESTS ON PREPAREDNESS

Congress That Has Just Passed Responded to Demand for Defense Acts.

INCREASED NAVY AND ARMY

Vast Sums Appropriated for Fighting Vessels—Ship Purchase, Child Labor, Immigration and Other Important Laws Passed.

Washington, March 5.—On its response to the popular demand for national preparedness will rest the fame of the Sixty-fourth congress, which has just expired. Though it also enacted some economic statutes of great moment, the preparedness measures stand out above all other legislation.

Although ample provision has been made for fortifications, and authority has been granted by congress to more than double the standing army of the country, the metamorphosis of the United States from a commercial to a fighting nation has been wrought by the naval increases authorized. The congress now expired has authorized naval armaments destined to make Uncle Sam eventually the peer of any nation on earth in sea power, excepting, perhaps, Great Britain.

In the two sessions comprising the Sixty-fourth congress there have been authorized and appropriated for no less than 118 war craft. Nor is this all. The first session adopted a three-year-building program, the construction of which should be undertaken prior to July 1, 1918. This program included this allotment of fighting ships: Ten battleships, six battle cruisers, ten scout cruisers, 50 torpedo-boat destroyers, nine fleet submarines, 58 coast submarines, one experimental submarine (Neff system), three fuel ships, one repair ship, one transport, one hospital ship, two destroyer tenders, one fleet submarine tender, two ammunition ships, two gunboats.

Naval Vessels Appropriated For.

By the act which adopted this building program congress appropriated for four battleships, four battle cruisers, four scout cruisers, 20 destroyers, 30 submarines, and one each of these craft: Experimental submarine, fuel ship, hospital ship, ammunition ship and gunboat. During the second session provision was made for three battleships, one battle cruiser, three scout cruisers, 15 destroyers, one destroyer tender, one submarine tender and 18 submarines.

If the Sixty-fifth congress adopts the three-year program the remainder of the units for the reorganized battle fleet will be appropriated for next year. Staggering sums have been required to meet these demands, the naval appropriation for the second session of the expired congress alone amounting to almost a round half-billion dollars.

So great have been these expenditures that the ordinary sources of revenue are not sufficient and a special revenue measure had to be passed. Representative Kitchin, majority leader and chairman of the house ways and means committee, a small-navy man, in drafting the revenue measure and pressing it to passage through the house charged full responsibility for the measure to the advocates of preparedness.

Increase of the Army.

Increases of the regular army and its reorganizations under the national defense act were less striking than the naval increases. But the regular army was increased from an authorized peace strength of 100,000 to an authorized peace strength of 216,000, capable of expansion in war time to 256,000. After prolonged agitation for preparedness both on land and sea, the consensus of the military experts was that the United States with its enormous length of coast line must rely on its fleet to defend its shores.

In the discussions that preparedness agitation in congress provoked it was again and again demonstrated that the temper of the American people is absolutely against a big standing army. Former Secretary Garrison formulated and laid before congress with President Wilson's approval a scheme for a Continental army to be recruited and trained under the universal military training principle. Representative Hay of Virginia, then chairman of the powerful house military committee, opposed the Continental army idea and substituted for it in the national defense act, the federalization of the National Guard. Mr. Hay won President Wilson over to his way of thinking—the Federalized National Guard became the second line of the land defenses and Secretary Garrison resigned from the cabinet.

Other Notable Acts.

Although preparedness was the keynote of legislation, the Sixty-fourth congress found time also to enact a ship purchase bill, the Adamson eight hour railroad law, a child labor law, a measure to forbid the immigration of illiterate aliens, a rural credits bill, a vocational educational bill and an act reorganizing the government of Porto Rico and extending citizenship to the islanders.

The ship purchase bill established a government shipping board to supervise shipping matters generally. It appropriated $50,000,000 to be obtained from the sale of Panama canal bonds for the purchase or construction of ships to be leased to private individuals in an effort to restore the American merchant marine.

The Adamson eight-hour railroad law was enacted on the eve of adjournment of the first session of the last congress. The enactment of the measure prevented a nation-wide railroad strike. It, however, has never become effective. Between the time of its enactment and the time for the commencement of its operation, January 1 last, the constitutionality of the measure was challenged by the railroads, and the whole matter is now pending in the Supreme court.

Supplemental railroad legislation, proposed by President Wilson in his annual message last December, failed of enactment. This legislation would have provided for the prevention of strikes by compulsory legislation. It was heartily opposed by all of the bodies of organized labor which had previously sought the eight-hour railroad law.

Child Labor and Immigration.

The child labor law barred from interstate commerce all products of children under sixteen years of age in mines or of children under fourteen in factories.

The passage of the immigration bill with its literacy test was accomplished over President Wilson's second veto. The literacy feature had been a subject of controversy between the executive and legislative branches of the government for the past twenty years. Presidents Taft and Cleveland both vetoed immigration measures because they carried the literacy feature, which all three presidents thought was not a proper measure of the fitness of aliens for admission to the United States.

The federal farm-loan act, commonly called the rural-credits bill, created 12 federal land banks with $750,000 capital each. The bill provides a system whereby loans may be made to farmers for productive purposes through national farm-loan associations. It will meet more particularly the needs of agriculturists in the West and South.

Under the vocational educational act the federal government on a gradually increasing scale covers every state appropriation dollar for dollar for secondary school instruction in agriculture and the mechanical and industrial arts.

On the eve of adjournment congress passed the post-office appropriation bill, with an amendment making "bone dry" all states having prohibitory laws. This measure was introduced in the senate by Senator Reed of Missouri. Its unexpected enactment had the effect of absolutely prohibiting the shipment in interstate commerce of intoxicants into states or territories which forbid the manufacture or sale of liquor.

It also closes the mails to all liquor advertising, including newspaper advertising. Neither can letters soliciting liquor orders be carried in the mails.

Sixteen Senators Retire.

Sixteen senators have now discarded their togas and prefixed their titles with "ex." This disturbance of personnel reduces but does not upset the Democratic control of the upper house. The Democratic majority of 16 is cut to 12, leaving out of consideration such senators and senators-elect as La Follette, Hiram Johnson, Poindexter and Norris, officially classed as Republicans but not always voting according to classification.

Among the nationally known senators now retired to private life are Clarence D. Clark of Wyoming, who has served in the senate continuously since January 23, 1895; Moses E. Clapp of Minnesota, one of the original Progressives; Luke Lea of Tennessee, now only thirty-seven years old, known as the "Baby Senator;" James E. Martine, of New Jersey, who acquired fame early in his senatorial career by his stanch defense of applejack as a beverage, and John W. Kern of Indiana, who has been Democratic leader of the senate.

"Needing no introduction" among the new senators are Hiram Johnson of California, Frank B. Kellogg, "trust buster," of Minnesota, and Philander C. Knox of Pennsylvania. Unlike the rest of the senators-elect, "their reputations are made;" all they need to do is to "live up to 'em."

SENATORS KILL ARMED SHIP BILL WITH FILIBUSTER

President Plans to Equip U. S. Vessels Despite Congress.

SOLONS ISSUE MANIFESTO

Seventy-Six Lawmakers Tell People That They Wanted to Vote Power to the President, But Were Prevented by Rules of the Senate—La Follette Talks Bill to Death.

Washington, March 5.—President Wilson will arm American merchant ships and take whatever other steps he deems necessary to protect them, even though the senate failed to pass the armed neutrality bill giving him specific authority, according to administration leaders. The president is confident he has the power to take this action, and believes the vote on the bill in the house and the general attitude in the senate show him that congress is behind him.

Twelve senators, led by Senator La Follette and encouraged by Senator Stone, Democratic chairman of the foreign relations committee, in a filibuster denounced by President Wilson's spokesmen as the most reprehensible in the history of any civilized nation, defied the will of an overwhelming majority in congress up to the last minute on Sunday, and denied to the president a law authorizing him to arm American merchant ships to meet the German submarine menace.

Unyielding throughout 26 hours of continuous session to appeals that their defiance of the president would be humiliating to the country; uncompromising in a crisis described to them as the most serious to the nation since the Civil war, La Follette of Wisconsin and his small group of supporters refused a majority of their colleagues an opportunity to vote on the armed neutrality bill.

It died with the Sixty-fourth congress at noon Sunday.

To fix responsibility before the country, 76 senators, 30 Republicans and 46 Democrats, signed a manifesto proclaiming to the world that they favored passage of this measure.

This declaration, embodied in the record of the senate, referred to the fact that the house on Thursday night had passed a similar bill by a vote of 403 to 13, and also recited that the senate rule permitting unlimited debate gave a small minority opportunity to throttle the will of the majority.

Protest of Majority.

The text of the manifesto is as follows:

"The majority of United States senators favored the passage of the senate bill authorizing the president of the United States to arm American merchant vessels, a similar bill having already passed the house by a vote of 403 to 13. Under the rules of the senate allowing unlimited debate it appears to be impossible to obtain a vote previous to noon March 4, 1917, when this session of congress expires.

"We desire the statement entered on the record to establish the fact that the senate favored the legislation and would pass it if a vote could be obtained."

Those Who Signed Manifesto.

The 76 senators who signed the manifesto were:

Democrats — Ashurst, Bankhead, Beckham, Broussard, Bryan, Chamberlain, Chilton, Fletcher, Hardwick, Hitchcock, Hollis, Hughes, Husting, James and Johnson (S. D.), Kern, Lea, Lee, Lewis and Martin (Va.), Martine (N. J.), Myers, Newlands, Overman, Owen, Phelan, Pittman, Pomerene, Ransdell, Reed, Robinson, Saulsbury, Shafroth, Sheppard, Shields, Simmons and Smith (Ga.), Smith (Md.), Smith (S. C.), Swanson, Thomas, Thompson, Tillman, Underwood, Walsh and Williams—46.

Republicans—Borah, Brady, Brandegee, Catron, Clark, Colt, Curtis, Dillingham, DuPont, Fall, Fernald, Harding, Jones, Lodge, McCumber, McLean, Nelson, Oliver, Page, Poindexter, Sherman, Smith (Mich.), Smoot, Sterling, Sutherland, Townsend, Wadsworth, Warren, Watson and Weeks—30.

Hours before the end senators who fought throughout the night to break down the filibuster conceived a way to thwart La Follette's well-laid plans to occupy the center of the legislative stage at the climax of the bitter fight.

Its execution brought the session to a dramatic end, with La Follette fighting vainly for a chance to deliver a speech on which he had worked many days. He saw friends of the doomed legislation inflict the death blow which he planned.

Instead of La Follette, Senator Hitchcock, leader of the majority in favor of the bill, talked out the waning hours of the session. Timing his opportunity to the minute, Senator La Follette entered the senate chamber shortly after nine o'clock Sunday morning, prepared to take the center of the stage for the last act of the tragedy. When the moment he had chosen arrived he addressed the chair, but Senator Hitchcock prevented his recognition

MADE $5,000 OUT OF HOGS

On His Western Canadian Farm.

It is getting to be a long drawn out story, the way that Western Canadian farmers have made money. Many of them a few years ago, came to the country with little more than their few household effects, probably a team of horses and a cow or two, and sufficient money to do them for a few months, until they got a start. Hundreds of such can be pointed out, who today have splendid homes, well equipped farms, the latest machinery and an automobile. Here is the case of A. E. Merriam, formerly of Devil's Lake, N. D. He didn't leave there because the land was poor, or farming not a success, for all who know that country are aware that it is an excellent country. He wanted to expand, to take advantage of the cheap land that Western Canada offers. And that same story has appealed to hundreds of others who have had like success with Mr. Merriam. But his story, and he signs it, too, is:

"I came to Alberta in the Spring of 1909 from Devil's Lake, North Dakota, locating on my farm near Dalroy.

"I arrived with six head of horses and two head of cattle and about $1,500. Since then, I have increased my live stock to seven head of horses, four head of cattle, and about one hundred head of hogs, a four-roomed house, good barn with all modern improvements, a feed grinder, elevator, chopper, fanning mill, etc. I have increased my original capital at least four times more since coming here.

"From the feeding of hogs during the last year, I had a gross return of $5,000.

"I first started grain farming, but during the past four years I have made hogs my specialty, and you may see by the foregoing statement for 1916 that I have not done so badly.

"Land has increased at least twenty per cent in value during the past few years, now selling for from $25 to $35 per acre, with nominal taxes of about $27 a quarter section yearly.

"The climate here is better than Dakota in that we do not have so much dry wind; the winters are similar to Dakota.

"As for farming in general, the growing and feeding of live stock is more sure than the grain farming, if continued year after year, and if every farmer follows this he will be ahead of the grain growers in the long run. Taking everything into consideration, I feel satisfied with my success in Alberta."

(Sgd.) A. E. MERRIAM.

Dalroy, Alberta, Jan. 12th, 1917.

There will be the greatest demand for farm labor in Western Canada during the early spring, and, in fact, all season until November, and the highest wages will be paid. Some San Francisco men on their way to Eureka by auto came to a fork in the road and were uncertain which to take. Finally they saw an old man digging in a hillside a short distance ahead. The old fellow signified that he was deaf, so the questioner, using his hands as a megaphone, roared with all the power of his lungs. "We want to go to Eureka! We want to go to Eureka! We want to go to Eureka!" The old man gazed at him with a pitying look. "Well, go on, then," he said. "I ain't a-holdin' ye back."

PRESIDENT AGAIN IS INAUGURATED

Woodrow Wilson Inducted Into Office of Chief Executive for Second Time.

CEREMONY AT THE CAPITOL

Proceedings Marked by Unusual Solemnity and Show of Patriotism—Marshall Takes Oath as Vice President—Parade Is Imposing.

By EDWARD B. CLARK.

Washington, March 5.—Today, with all due ceremony and solemnity, Woodrow Wilson and Thomas R. Marshall were inaugurated president and vice president of the United States respectively, for the second time.

For several nights prior to the inauguration, Washington was a flood of light. Thousands of American citizens came to the capital of their nation from all over the United States to witness the ceremonies attending the inauguration. The situation of the country in reference to its foreign relations added more than a touch of seriousness and a distinct flavor of patriotism to the entire proceedings. Washington is a city of flags at all times, but it became ten times a city of flags one day before the ceremonies of inauguration.

President Wilson drove from the White House to the capitol with his wife at his side. In the carriage with him were two members of the congressional committee which had general charge of the ceremonies, and of which Senator Overman of North Carolina is chairman.

Vice President Marshall, with Mrs. Marshall in the carriage with him, was escorted in like manner to the capitol.

Big Crowds, Many Flags.

From an early hour the sidewalks were crowded with persons waiting to see the president and "the first lady of the land" pass along the avenue to the place of the oath-taking. All the windows commanding a view of Pennsylvania avenue also were crowded with onlookers. The red, white and blue was everywhere in evidence. The only foreign flags to be seen in Washington were those flying from the flagpoles of the foreign embassies and legations which, even though they are located in the city of Washington, are recognized as being foreign territory.

Woodrow Wilson

Vice President Marshall was resworn into office before the inauguration of the president. The exercises took place in the senate chamber. The legislative day of March 3, so far as the senate was concerned, had been continued by recesses until the hour of 12 noon of the calendar day March 5.

The president pro tempore of the senate presided at the ceremonies preceding the administering of the oath to the vice president-elect. The president of the United States, the members of the cabinet, the foreign ambassadors and other notable guests occupied seats in the senate chamber. At twelve o'clock the president pro tempore administered the oath of office prescribed by law to the vice president-elect.

Immediately following the taking of the oath of office by Mr. Marshall, the newly elected senators of the United States were sworn into office. Then the vice president made this announcement: "The sergeant-at-arms of the senate will carry out the order of the senate for the inauguration of the president of the United States."

The president-elect, accompanied by the chief justice of the United States, the joint committee on arrangements, the associate justices of the Supreme Court, the foreign ambassadors and ministers plenipotentiary, the members of the senate, preceded by the vice president and secretary of the senate, the holdover members of the house of representatives, preceded by the officers of the house who have just relinquished office by virtue of the expiration of their terms, and other distinguished guests made their way to the inaugural stand.

Inauguration of the President.

The procession, headed by the president-elect, wound through the east senate door, the main corridors of the senate and through the rotunda of the capitol to the place set for the oath-taking. On reaching the inaugural stand, Woodrow Wilson took a place directly in front of Edward D. White, the chief justice of the United States, and the chief clerk of the Supreme court, James D. Maher. The sergeant-at-arms of the senate and the congressional committee on arrangements were immediately on the left of the president. The vice president, the associate justices of the Supreme Court and the members of the senate sat upon his right.

When all were assembled Chief Justice White, having in his right hand the open Bible upon which the hands of many former presidents have rested, advanced to Woodrow Wilson and administered to him this oath, which is imposed by the Constitution of the United States:

"You do solemnly swear that you will faithfully execute the office of president of the United States and will to the best of your ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States."

Woodrow Wilson said in a firm voice, "I do," and he became for the second time president of the United States of America.

Then the president delivered his inaugural address and on its conclusion he made his way with Mrs. Wilson to his carriage and was driven slowly to the White House at the head of the procession formed in honor of the inaugural ceremonies.

Luncheon Deferred for Parade.

In years past the presidential party always has entered the White House for luncheon prior to the review of the parade from the stand in front of the executive mansion. This invariably in the past caused such a delay that it was decided this year to do away with the luncheon feature.

President Wilson with Mrs. Wilson, the Vice President and Mrs. Marshall, and two members of his cabinet went immediately to the little inclosed structure, much like a sentry box, which had been built in the middle of the great grandstand in front of the White House and from which the chief executive viewed the paraders.

It was the gravity of the situation in connection with our foreign affairs which gave to the inaugural ceremonies their serious tone and patriotic features. The parade of the day was largely military in its nature, although there were in the procession many bodies which in a sense might be said to represent the spirit of industrial preparedness of the United States for any eventuality which might come.

Make-up of the Procession.

At the forefront of the parade as it left the capitol were, of course, the president and the vice president of the United States with their guards of honor. Major General Hugh L. Scott, U. S. army, was the grand marshal of the occasion. George R. Linkins was the marshal of the civic organizations which took part in the marching ceremonies.

Immediately preceding the carriages of the presidential and vice presidential parties and of Col. Robert N. Harper, inaugural chairman, was the famous United States Marine band. The president had as his guard of honor the squadron of the Second United States cavalry.

The Vice President and Mrs. Marshall were escorted by the Black Horse troop of the Culver Military academy, Indiana, the state of which the vice president and his wife are natives

The West Point cadets and the Annapolis cadets took part in the procession. In addition to these young soldier and sailor organizations there was as large a representation of the forces of the United States as properly could be spared from post and garrison duty. In addition there were troops from Delaware, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, Virginia, and some other states of the Union representing the National Guard.

A patriotic and picturesque feature of the ceremonies attending the inauguration was supplied by the rapidly thinning ranks of the Grand Army of the Republic. In years past the soldiers of the war between the states have made the entire length of the line of march, but this year the distance which they tramped was shortened. They added to the picture of the parade as they moved by the presidential reviewing stand with their old flags above them.

At night Washington was aglow with fireworks and with the combined effects of gas and electric light illuminations. In addition searchlights showed the heavens here and there, and one great shaft of light illuminated the apex of the Washington monument while another lighted up and brought into bold relief the dome of the capitol.

Deer Makes Calls in City.

Lean and gaunt, as though it had just completed a long trip, a doe stalked out of the brush on Bailey peninsula, and after a stiff-legged trot up Orcas street, turned into the yard of Mrs. A. E. Esper, at Orcas street and Wilson avenue. It ran about the yard for a few minutes and then trotted into the yard of Virgil Stewart, at Orcas street and Fifty-first avenue.

Before anyone could make an attempt to stop it, the animal ran down toward the brush that skirts the shore of Lake Washington and disappeared. When last seen it was running toward Leschi park.

Residents of the district, some of whom have been frightened at intervals during the past two months by the reports of cougars on Bailey peninsula believe that it was the deer that was sighted on former occasions.—Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Mrs. Quinn's Experience Ought to Help You Over the Critical Period.

Lowell, Mass.—"For the last three years I have been troubled with the Change of Life and the bad feelings common at that time. I was in a very nervous condition, with headaches and pain a good deal of the time so I was unfit to do my work. A friend asked me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which I did, and it has helped me in every way. I am not nearly so nervous, no headache or pain. I must say that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the best remedy any sick woman can take."—Mrs. MARGARET QUINN, Rear 259 Worthen St., Lowell, Mass.

NOT LIKE LOWER ANIMALS

Man's Consciousness Places Him Outside Darwin's "Struggle for Existence."

Man is a thinking animal, because he is a conscious animal, writes W. P. Pycraft in the Illustrated London News. It is his consciousness of himself and his surroundings that has placed him outside the operations of his animal and physical environment. The lower animals depend for their existence on their ability to respond to the conditions imposed by their physical environment and their powers of adaptability to their animate environment, the struggle to obtain food, to avoid enemies, and so on. For them there is indeed a "struggle for existence." But the "struggle for existence" has nothing to do with human progress. For man is a thinking and scheming animal. He lives by his wits.

The failure to realize this, the proneness of the layman to apply Darwin's great generalization to the development of the human race today, is answerable for much pernicious doctrine, culminating in the most disastrous war which the world has ever seen.

Quite a Difference.

"Politics in this country seems to have undergone a radical change."

"In what particular?"

"Time was when 'big business' dictated who was to be the successful candidate."

"And now?"

"The successful candidate lends an ear to the common people while 'big business' sits glowering in an anteroom waiting to get an audience."

The Kind It Was.

"How did that smart yachting party get on?"

"They found the sea very rough."

"Then it was a real swell affair."

Undaunted.

"Have you a bete noire, Mrs. Comeup?"

"Yes, indeed. I got one the last time we were in dear Paris, and we all just dote on it."

Farmer's Benefit Club

Has Profitable Meeting.

Beginning Feb. 20th., the members of the Farmer's Benefit Club weighed each milking from each of their cows for a week. They also kept an account of the feed fed and at the close of the week, Tuesday, the 28th., County Agent Arehart tested samples of each cow's milk for the percentage of butterfat therein. The purpose was to find out whether or not the cows were being fed at a profit. On the evening of the 28th., the club met at the pleasant home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Tustison to discuss and compare results and receive information on the management of cows from Mr. Arehart.

To say that the meeting was interesting and profitable scarcely does the occasion justice. There were cows that gave only 60 lbs. of milk for the entire week and there were some that gave as much as 230 lbs. Some tested 2.8% and the highest was 5.4%. All but five of the cows tested between 3 and 4 which indicates the test of the average cow in this community. It was noted that the cows that tested highest were among those with the lesser flow and vice versa. As it is the total number of pounds of butterfat that determines the profitableness, the cows with the low test and heavy flow were as profitable if not more profitable than the cows with the high test but small flow of milk.

It was learned that very few of the farmers were feeding a mash due to the high prices of mill feeds but it was made evident that mill feeds fed judiciously would net returns. None of the cows were making enough money over their feed to cause anyone to get excited. The margins between cost of feed and butterfat produced (valued at 40c) run from $1.00 to $1.60.

Mr. Arehart pointed out that the first thing to do to put our cows on a reasonably paying basis from the dairy standpoint was to increase the flow of milk by intelligently feeding a balanced ration in and caring for the cows in a methodical manner. Next, improvement could be made by raising the percentage of butterfat with breeding to pure bred sires that have the power to stamp their offspring with this desirable characteristic of a high test. Or should one wish they might dispose of their present herd and buy new stock possessing the qualities they most desire. It should always be remembered that it is the number of pounds of butterfat that a cow produces that determines her profitability. A cow testing 3% and giving 250 lbs., of milk a week, is better than a cow testing 6% and giving, say, 100 lbs. The test of a cow cannot be changed but by increasing the flow with good feeding the 6% cow might be made much more profitable than the 3% one. The subject of Beef Cattle was not taken up.

One of the members did not beleive that the stripings were richer in butterfat than the first of the milking and to set his mind at ease on the question he sent in two samples of milk, one taken at the first of the milking, and the other, the stripings. The stripings tested 7.1% and the first of the milking 3%. This justifies grandmothers habit of keeping the stripings seperate.

Due to some irregularity in organizing, the club re-elected officers as follows:—H. M. Widney, Pres.; John Ulm, Vice-pres.; Carrol Carpenter, Sec., and Frank Tustison, Treas.

Mrs. A. Z. Arehart and Mrs. B. V. Widney entertained those present with vocal and instrumental solo which were very much appreciated.

The next meeting will be at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Ulm, March 27th.

At Rest.

Her Lifes Record Closed

With sad hearts, we the Members of St. Joe Rebekah Lodge, chronicle the death of our beloved sister and co-worker, Emma Tustison. When death comes into our midst, the changes it brings are full of the pangs of sorrow. We realize her place in our circle can never be filled. Our deceased Sister will be mournfully missed, whether in Lodge circles or without; for she possessed a kind and generous heart, loving and cheerful disposition, sunny and unselfish nature, unswerving devotion to her duty, always careful to be just in her decisions. As the lilly dispences its fragrance, so her lovely character had its benign influence and years shall roll into the gulf of time, before sweet recollections of our departed Sister shall fade from our memories.

Yes, we feel her risen Spirit,
That has passed our vision scope,
Somewhere joined a blissful circle:
In the border land of Hope.

To the bereaved family, we extend our sincere sympathy. In your sorrow we commend you to Him, whose wisdom is infinite and unerring, and whose love is as the mighty deep.

Some day, sometime, our eyes shall see,
The facts thats kept in memory,
Some day her hand, shall clasp our hand,
Just over in the Morning Land.

COULD NOT EXPECT MORE

Two Years Illness Cured by Glando The Great Gland Tonic.

Mrs. Susan B. Taylor, 348 S. Williams St., Paulding, Ohio, said: "Two years ago I had a general break-down. I was nervous, languid, and hardly able to drag around. My liver and kidneys were sluggish and my complexion sallow. I felt sleepy and drowsy most all day, yet I did not sleep well at night. My heart fluttered terribly at times. I was in this miserable condition two years. A friend persuaded me to try Glando Tonic. The first treatment helped me. I am taking the sixth treatment and am feeling so well that I gladly recommend Glando Tonic to any one who suffers as I did."

Nearly every case of poor health is due to inactivity of the liver, kidneys and other glands. There is enough poison produced in the body every day to cause poor health if it is not eliminated. This poison can be removed only by keeping the glands in a good working condition. Some of the most common symptoms of inactive ganlds are headache, dizziness, indigestion, constipation, backache, pain or ache under the shoulder blade, biliousness, tonsilitis and quinsy. These conditions can be most quickly relieved by using Glando the Great Gland Tonic. It restores the glands to action, removes the impurities and builds up the entire system. Sold only in 50-cent treatments and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Manufactured by the Gland Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Hurrah! How's This

Cincinnati authority says corns dry up and lift out with fingers.

Hospital records show that every time you cut a corn you invite lockjaw or blood poison, which is needless, says a Cincinnati authority, who tells you that a quarter ounce of a drug called freezone can be obtained at little cost from the drug store but is sufficient to rid one's feet of every hard or soft corn or callus.

You simply apply a few drops of freezone on a tender, aching corn and soreness is instantly relieved. Shortly the entire corn can be lifted out, root and all, without pain.

This drug is sticky but dries at once and is claimed to just shrivel up any corn without inflaming or even irritating the surrounding tissue or skin.

If your wife wears high heels she will be glad to know of this.

IF HAIR IS TURNING GRAY, USE SAGE TEA

Here's Grandmother's Recipe to Darken and Beautify Faded Hair.

That beautiful, even shade of dark, glossy hair can only be had by brewing a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When it fades, turns gray or streaked, just an application or two of Sage and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundredfold.

Don't bother to prepare the mixture: you can get this famous old recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients for 50 cents a large bottle, all ready for use. It is called Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound. This can always be depended upon to bring back the natural color and lustre of your hair.

Everybody uses "Wyeth's" Sage and Sulphur Compound now because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair has disappeared, and after another application it becomes beautifully dark and appears glossy and lustrous. This ready-to-use preparation is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire dark hair and a youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

VOL. XXXI — ST JOE, DeKALB COUNTY INDIANA, THURSDAY MAR. 15, 1917 — NO. 11

Was a Great Meeting.

One of the greatest treats that has come to St Joe in many a day was the visit of the Newlin Evangelistic Party at the Methodist Protestant Church, on Monday evening. The party which consists of seven persons is now in the midst of a six weeks evangelistic campaign in Defiance, Ohio. Monday is rest day and no services whatever are held on that day, and for this reason it was possible for the party to be secured for the one evening. However, three of the party were detained in Defiance because of the press of business connected with their work there. The members of the party attending the revival services here were: Mr. Newlin, the evangelist and leader of the party; Mr. Upson, the soloist and choir leader; Mr. Gourley, the pianist, and O. E. Ginther, of St. Joe, who is also a member of the party. The members of the party together with Mr. Baskett and wife, who are assisting in the revival in the local church, and the Pastor, and Sol Barney, were entertained for dinner and supper in the home of F. B. Leighty and wife, by the Friendly Bible Class. Extra chairs had been provided and the church was filled to its utmost capacity for the evening service.

The playing of Mr. Gourley was superb, and Mr. Upson captivated and swayed the audience by his sweet singing. The musical program consisted in congregational singing led by Messrs. Baskett and Upson; a duet by Mr. Gourley and Mr. Upson; two instrumental solos by Mr. Gourley, which were his own musical arrangements of the two well known and popular religious hymns, "The Church in the Wildwood" and 'Oh Happy Day"; three solos by Mr. Upson, and a quartet composed of Messrs. Newlin, Upson, Gourley and Baskett.

Mr. Newlin's sermon subject was "Crossing the Jordan" drawn from scripture found in II Samuel XIX: 18. He is a magnetic and interesting speaker whom it is a pleasure to hear. From some actual experiences in his own life he drew some vivid and impressive pictures illustrative of the thought of the transitory character of this life and of the certainty of death and the future life and the need of preparation for a sure passage across the turbulent River of Death. In his closing words he made a strong appeal for men and women to accept Jesus Christ as their personal Savior. In his appeal many were melted to tears and at the invitation three persons responded to the call and came forward to claim Christ as their Savior. The Holy Spirit was present and conviction was intense. This was a fine beginning for the second week of the revival and their coming to St. Joe will be long remembered.

Special services each night this week with a rousing song service led by Joseph G. Baskett, and the pastor John C. Coons, occupying the pulpit. School night Friday evening.

Grandma Sherer Dead.

Martha Sherer died Tuesday at noon at the home of her daughter Mrs. John T. Betz, after a few days illness. Funeral will be held at 2 o'clock Thursday, from the M. P. church.

Had Some Bad Scare.

The buss line was put out of commission last Saturday evening just out of Wayne, when a machine attempted to go around the buss and struck the front wheels, turning the machine over, breaking the windows out. The front wheels were torn off and the passengers given a severe jolt and all of them escaped injury, save a few scratches. The machine was heavily loaded, having 1C passengers. M. T. Bishop, Roy Haifley, Zay Sailer, Mr. Bayman and son, of St. Joe, were among the party. Damages were paid by the party amounting to $50.

"The Shaking Quakers" a comical sketch by six little girls and one boy in somber quaker gray. "I'm the Guy" Song by a ten year old girl, which will be an eye opener. "The Gypsy Bride" by sixteen, Seventh and Eighth Grade girls, in flashing costumes, graceful sashes and gay tambourines.

Ethel Berry Found Dead in Bed Saturday Morning - A Shock to Our Community. Funeral Service Tuesday.

Gertrude Ethel Berry, eldest daughter of Edwin E. and Ada S. Berry, was born in DeKalb County, Indiana, Oct. 10th 1888, and died at the home of her sister, Mrs. W. P. Steward in Spencerville, March 10-1917. Age 28 years, 5 months. Her girlhood days were spent with her parents in St. Joe where she was educated, graduating from the High School in 1905. She then worked in the Post Office 2 years and was then Post Mistress for two years, after which she took a course in a business college at Ft. Wayne where her father died. Three years ago she went to Ligonier, where she held a position in the Citizens' Bank until her health failed, after which she lived in Spencerville.

At the age of 13 she was converted and joined the M. P. Church at St. Joe, when Rev. J. C. McCain was pastor. When going to Ligonier she transfered her membership to the M. E. Church of that place where it remained to the time of her entering into the higher life in the world to come. For two years she had been in failing health, when on Friday night she fell asleep to wake in the land where sickness and death shall never come.

She held her membership in the H. S. Alumni Association of St. Joe, and was a member of the Daughters of Rebekah. While in Spencerville she belonged to Class 8 in the M. E. Sunday School. She was a good girl, kind and loving and helpful in the home, being, after the death of her father, of special help and comfort to her mother. She was a faithful Christian and Bible reader. She was congenial among her associates, and was highly esteemed by all who knew her.

She leaves a mother, one brother, two sisters, a grand-mother at the time of her death but she too has passed away; and many other friends and relatives to mourn their loss. Funeral services were held from the M. P. Church, Tuesday afternoon at 2:00 o'clock, Rev. J. C. Valentine, officiating, assisted by Rev. J. C. Coons. E. R. Kinsey, funeral director. Interment in Riverside Cemetery.

MILLIONS FOR BETTER ROADS

Sum of $85,000,000 of Federal Funds Made Available for Construction of Country Highways.

By the passage of the federal aid road bill the government of the United States has put itself in the way to reap great benefits. According to the new law, the sum of $85,000,000 of federal funds is made available for the construction of country roads. Of this amount $75,000,000 is to be expended for the construction of rural post roads under co-operative arrangements with the highway departments of the various states and $10,000,000 is to be used in developing roads and trails within or partly within the national forests.

Indiana will be able to share in this appropriation to the extent of $2,109,000 when she creates a highway department to superintend the building of a correct system of main market roads.

Such a bill is to be a feature of the legislative work at this session of the legislature and the big business and educational forces of the state are back of the bill. The commission is to be non-partisan and under the promise of Governor James P. Goodrich to be made up of the very biggest and most capable men in the state.

Speaking of the wisdom of the state taking advantage of the federal aid in the building of her roads, George E. Martin, assistant professor of highway engineering in Purdue university, says, in a Purdue bulletin.

"Federal aid for road building is now a fact. The federal government will not treat with anything but a state. Some form of state organization is necessary to obtain that aid.

"Indiana has long stood as a conspecuous example of extreme local control in road matters. Her laws have been drawn to give the people of the smallest subdivision of her territory the greatest latitude in the selection of the roads to be improved and the methods to be used for their improvement. The results have been good in the past. Indiana can well be proud of her system of local roads reaching practically all of her people.

Conditions are rapidly changing. Roads which were entirely satisfactory ten years ago are now inadequate to carry the traffic which comes upon them. Road building is speedily advancing from rule of thumb methods to its proper place as one of the engineering sciences. It is no longer possible for every man to be a good road builder. To build roads to meet present conditions requires extensive training and experience. It is not possible for the small subdivisions to obtain men qualified to design and construct these modern highways."

A Health Statement.

A recent article on health makes the astonishing statement that since the outbreak of the war tuberculosis has increased in Germany 300 per cent. and that in France thousands of men pass thru the fire of the trenches only to return home to die of the dread white plague a few months later. The war is not only killing and maiming the soldiers of the warring nations, but it is also breaking down the physical resisting power of soldiers and destroying the stamina of the nations.

Friend Fred:—

As I am just 65 years old today, I thought of President Wilson's inauguration and I wondered who had the biggest day of it. I was at church and heard a good sermon and was invited to preach at the same place to-night. I expect to deliver a sermon to the convicts at the State Farm, being asked by the man who has preached there for three years. It seems good to be in Florida, where we only get a cold breeze occasionally. I dare say this is a fine and desirable place to live, in this land of sunshine and flowers. I am now enjoying the blessings I used to think this climate afforded when I was a boy in school and studied Geography. Bradford County is one of the best counties in the state. Some of the chief productsare turpentine, strawberries and cotton. There are 15 cotton ginns in this county now and another in construction.

To see the pine trees boxed reminds me of opening our sugar camp in the north, only it is done in a different manner. There is 2 faces hewn on each side of the tree and two diagonal strokes made with a broad axe in the faces then two strips of tin inserted to convey the turpentine to the cup which holds over a quart, it is then dipped, put into barrels and hauled to to the still. Thousands of bushels of strawberries are raised here annually. As many as ten car loads per day are shipped from this County. The recent cold spell gave them a backset; as it reached hard freezing as far south as Ft. Pierce, killing all early grown vegetables, oranges and peaches, and some orange trees. Many growers have already cut down there groves. It was the coldest since 95 and may not occur again for many years.

All eyes are turned toward the cotton fields this year. It brought a high price last year, selling as high as 18 cents in the seed and 63 cents in the lint. Counties that have only grown it by hundreds will grow it by the thousands this year Some have planted already. I expect to grow 8 acres myself. There is much good farming land in this county, and for this reason the State Farm was located here. I see by your paper many of my old friends are passing away. All who came south when I did have gone back but me. I often think of the good times we had in meetings at St. Joe, but I am having some of the best in my life. The dear Lord does wonderfully bless me in preaching the gospel and have more calls than I can answer.

Yours truly,
A. J. Collins.

SYRUP OF FIGS FOR A CHILD'S BOWELS

It is cruel to force nauseating, harsh physic into a sick child.

Look back at your childhood days. Remember the "dose" mother insisted on—castor oil, calomel, cathartics. How you hated them, how you fought against taking them.

With our children it's different. Mothers who cling to the old form of physic simply don't realize what they do. The children's revolt is well-founded. Their tender little "insides" are injured by them.

If your child's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing, give only delicious "California Syrup of Figs." Its action is positive, but gentle. Millions of mothers keep this harmless "fruit laxative" handy; they know children love to take it; that it never fails to clean the liver and bowels and sweeten the stomach, and that a teaspoonful given today saves a sick child tomorrow.

Ask at the store for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on each bottle. Adv.

Barber Worked by Pattern.

A man wearing his hair long under a wide western hat and concealing his face behind a beard of much length and breadth strode into the barber shop of the Parker house in Boston and settled into a chair. "Just a minute," he said, searching in a pocket. "Five years ago I came to Boston and got a shave and haircut here. I liked the work so well that I had my picture taken. Here is the picture. That's how I want to look. Do it again." And with the photograph on a stand before him as a pattern, the barber began operations.

Knew the Game.

One of Rob's pet rabbits had disappeared, and having searched in vain for the bunny, Rob appeared before his little playmate suggesting that with the assistance of Harold's bird dog they might recover the pet. The playmate, delighted that his dog might be of service, rushed to his mother for permission to accompany Rob and the dog. "But where are you going to look?" inquired the mother. "Oh, down the railroad," replied the small son. "But why must you follow the railroad, Harold?" "Why, mother, don't you know, the dog has to smell the tracks," he replied in disgust.

Plucky Danish Captain.

A hero in every sense of the word is the captain of the Danish steamer Iris which, sailing from one neutral port to another and having no contraband aboard, was halted by a German submarine and the crew ordered to leave the ship, in order that it might be sunk. The Danish captain flatly refused to leave his ship. "You may sink us, but I and my men will remain on board," he told the submarine commander. And his pluck won. His ship was allowed to proceed when it was seen that he knew his rights and was not afraid to assert them.

DOES A DOG REASON?

Who can say whether or not a dog thinks? Cold scientists may say that a dog's thinking processes are merely the operation of instinct. Those of us who have now or have had in youth one or more dogs in the close circle of our friendship will be apt to say that an intelligent dog can be considered really intellectual—that he reasons things out for himself and quite as often follows the course of reason as the average fool man or woman! But what we started out to say was this: That "Kazan" is one of the best animal stories that has been written in many years; ranking with "Rab and His Friends," by Dr. John Watson, and old, old "Black Beauty." It has no element of obvious humor, but devotion, courage, sacrifice, resignation, love and pathos are woven into the tale with utmost skill. James Oliver Curwood is to be congratulated for his authorship of this story, and we feel that we can congratulate ourselves in the possession of it for serial use.

CHAPTER I.

The Miracle.

Kazan lay mute and motionless, his gray nose between his forepaws, his eyes half closed. Yet every drop of the wild blood in his splendid body was racing in a ferment of excitement, every nerve and fiber of his wonderful muscles was tense as steel wire. Quarter-strain wolf, three-quarters "husky," he had lived the four years of his life in the wilderness. He had felt the pangs of starvation. He knew what it meant to freeze. He had listened to the wailing winds of the long Arctic night over the barrens. His throat and sides were scarred by battle, and his eyes were red with the blister of the snows. He was called Kazan, the Wild Dog, because he was a giant among his kind and as fearless, even, as the men who drove him through the perils of a frozen world.

He had never known fear—until now. He had never felt in him before the desire to run—not even on that terrible day in the forest when he had fought and killed the big gray lynx. It was his first glimpse of civilization. He wished that his master would come back into the strange room where he had left him. It was a room filled with hideous things. There were great human faces on the wall, but they did not move or speak, but stared at him in a way he had never seen people look before.

Suddenly Kazan lifted his ears a little. He heard steps, then low voices. One of them was his master's voice. But the other—it sent a little tremor through him! Once, so long ago that it must have been in his puppyhood days, he seemed to have had a dream of a laugh that was like the girl's laugh—a laugh that was all at once filled with a wonderful happiness, the thrill of a wonderful love, and a sweetness that made Kazan lift his head as they came in. He looked straight at them, his red eyes gleaming. At once he knew that she must be dear to his master, for his master's arm was about her. In the glow of the light he saw that her hair was very bright, and that there was the color of the crimson bakneesh vine in her face and the blue of the bakneesh flower in her shining eyes. Suddenly she saw him, and with a little cry darted toward him.

"Stop!" shouted the man. "He's dangerous! Kazan—"

She was on her knees beside him, all fluffy and sweet and beautiful, her eyes shining wonderfully. He saw the man running forward, pale as death. Then her hand fell upon his head, and the touch sent a thrill through him that quivered in every nerve of his body. With both hands she turned up his head. Her face was very close, and he heard her say, almost sobbingly:

"And you are Kazan—dear old Kazan, my Kazan, my hero dog—who brought him home to me when all the others had died! My Kazan—my hero!"

And then, miracle of miracles, her face was crushed down against him, and he felt her sweet, warm touch.

In those moments Kazan did not move. He scarcely breathed. It seemed a long time before the girl lifted her face from him. And when she did, there were tears in her blue eyes, and the man was standing above them, his hands gripped tight, his jaws set.

"I never knew him to let anyone touch him—with their naked hand," he said in a tense, wondering voice. "Move back quickly, Isobel. Good heaven—look at that!"

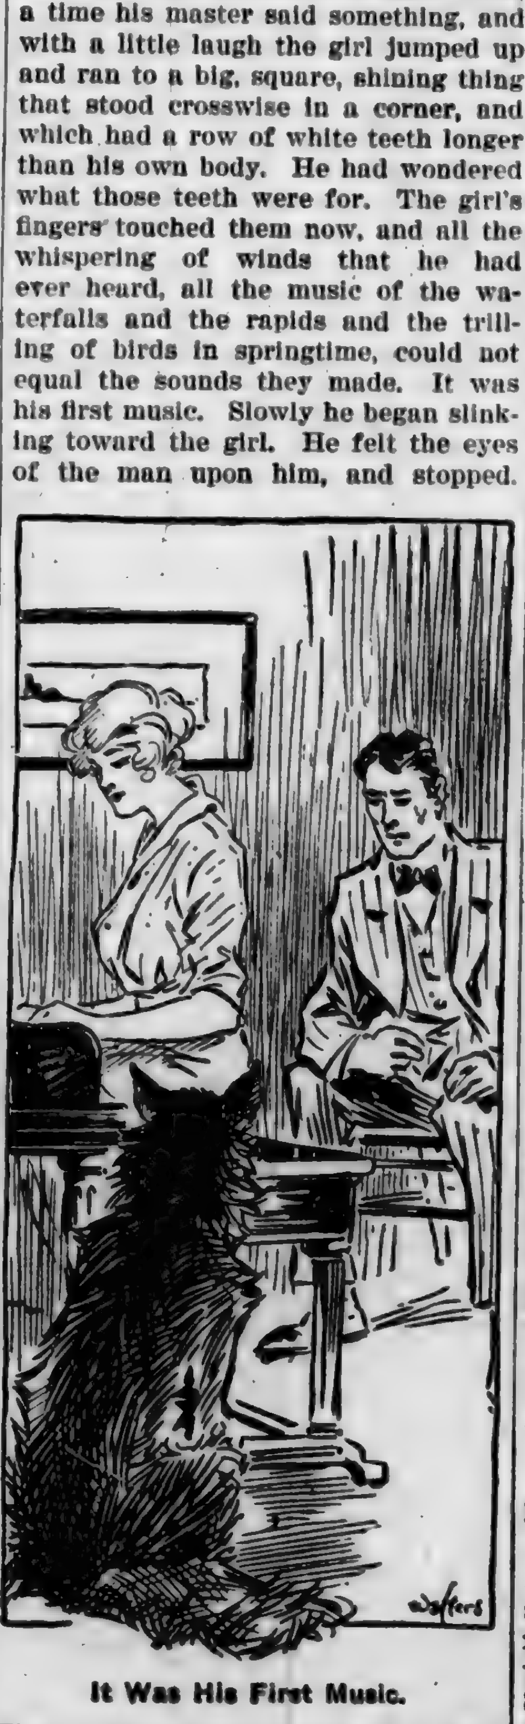
Kazan whined softly, his bloodshot eyes on the girl's face. He wanted to feel her hand again; he wanted to touch her face. Would they beat him with a club, he wondered, if he dared! He meant no harm now. He would kill for her. He cringed toward her, inch by inch, his eyes never faltering. He heard what the man said—"Good heaven! Look at that!"—and he shuddered. But no blow fell to drive him back. His cold muzzle touched her filmy dress, and she looked at him, without moving, her wet eyes blazing like stars.

"See!" she whispered. "See!"

Now his muzzle traveled slowly upward—over her foot, to her lap, and at last touched the warm little hand that lay there. His eyes were still on her face; he saw a queer throbbing in her bare white throat, and then a trembling of her lips as she looked up at the man with a wonderful look. He, too, knelt down beside them, and put his arm about the girl again, and patted the dog on his head. Kazan did not like the man's touch. He mistrusted it, as nature had taught him to mistrust the touch of all men's hands, but he permitted it because he saw that it in some way pleased the girl.

"Kazan, old boy, you wouldn't hurt her, would you?" said his master softly. "We both love her, don't we, boy? Can't help it, can we? And she's ours, Kazan, all ours! She belongs to you and to me, and we're going to take care of her all our lives, and if we ever have to, we'll fight for her like h—l—won't we? Eh, Kazan, old boy?"

For a long time after they left him where he was lying on the rug, Kazan's eyes did not leave the girl. After a time his master said something, and with a little laugh the girl jumped up and ran to a big, square, shining thing that stood crosswise in a corner, and which had a row of white teeth longer than his own body. He had wondered what those teeth were for. The girl's fingers touched them now, and all the whispering of winds that he had ever heard, all the music of the waterfalls and the rapids and the trilling of birds in springtime, could not equal the sounds they made. It was his first music. Slowly he began slinking toward the girl. He felt the eyes of the man upon him, and stopped.



It Was His First Music.

Then a little more—inches at a time, with his throat and jaw straight out along the floor! He was half-way to her—half-way across the room—when the wonderful sounds grew very soft and very low.

"Go on!" he heard the man urge in a low, quick voice. "Go on! Don't stop!"

The girl turned her head, saw Kazan cringing there on the floor, and continued to play. The man was still looking, but his eyes could not keep Kazan back now. He went nearer, still nearer, until at last his outreaching muzzle touched her dress where it lay piled on the floor. And then—he lay trembling, for she had begun to sing. He had heard a Cree woman crooning in front of her tepee; he had heard the wild chant of the caribou song—but he had never heard anything like this wonderful sweetness that fell from the lips of the girl. He forgot his master's presence now. Quietly, cringingly, so that she would not know, he lifted his head. He saw her looking at him; there was something in her wonderful eyes that gave him confidence, and he laid his head in her lap. For the second time he felt the touch of a woman's hand, and he closed his eyes with a long, sighing breath. The music stopped. There came a little fluttering sound above him, like a laugh and a sob in one. He heard his master cough.

"I've always loved the old rascal—but I never thought he'd do that," he said; and his voice sounded queer to Kazan.

CHAPTER II.

Into the North.

Wonderful days followed for Kazan. He missed the forests and deep snows. He missed the daily strife of keeping his teammates in trace, the yapping at his heels, the straight, long pull over the open spaces and the barrens. He missed the "Koosh—koosh—Hooyah!" of the driver, the spiteful snap of his twenty-foot caribou-gut whip, and that yelping and straining behind him that told him he had his followers in line. But something had come to take the place of that which he missed. It was in the room, in the air all about him, even when the girl or his master was not near. Wherever she had been, he found the presence of that strange thing that took away his loneliness. It was the woman scent, and sometimes it made him whine softly when the girl herself was actually with him. He was not lonely, nights, when he should have been out howling at the stars. He was not lonely, because one night he prowled about until he found a certain door, and when the girl opened that door in the morning she found him curled up tight against it. She had reached down and hugged him, the thick smother of her long hair falling all over him in a delightful perfume; thereafter she placed a rug before the door for him to sleep on. All through the long nights he knew that she was just beyond the door, and he was content. Each day he thought less and less of the wild places and more of her.

Then there came the beginning of the change. There was a strange hurry and excitement around him, and the girl paid less attention to him. He grew uneasy. He sniffed the change in the air, and he began to study his master's face. Then there came the morning, very early, when the babiche collar and the iron chain were fastened to him again. Not until he had followed his master out through the door and into the street did he begin to understand. They were sending him away! He sat suddenly back on his haunches and refused to budge.

"Come, Kazan," coaxed the man. "Come on, boy."

He hung back and showed his white fangs. He expected the lash of a whip or the blow of a club, but neither came. His master laughed and took him back to the house. When they left it again, the girl was with them and walked with her hand touching his head. It was she who persuaded him to leap up through a big, dark hole into the still darker interior of a car, and it was she who lured him to the darkest corner of all, where his master fastened his chain. Then they went out, laughing like two children. For hours after that Kazan lay still and tense, listening to the queer rumble of wheels under him. Several times those wheels stopped, and he heard voices outside. At last he was sure that he heard a familiar voice, and he strained at his chain and whined. The closed door slid back. A man with a lantern climbed in, followed by his master. He paid no attention to them, but glared out through the opening into the gloom of night. He almost broke loose when he leaped down upon the white snow, but when he saw no one there, he stood rigid, sniffing the air. Over him were the stars he had howled at all his life, and about him were the forests, black and silent, shutting them in like a wall. Vainly he sought for that one scent that was missing, and Thorpe heard the low note of grief in his shaggy throat. He took the lantern and held it above his head, at the same time loosening his hold on the leash. At that signal there came a voice out of the night. It came from behind them, and Kazan whirled so suddenly that the loosely held chain slipped from the man's hand. He saw the glow of other lanterns. And then, once more, the voice—

"Kaa-aa-zan!"

He was off like a bolt. Thorpe laughed to himself as he followed.

"The old pirate!" he chuckled.

When he came to the lantern-lighted space back of the caboose, Thorpe found Kazan crouching down at a woman's feet. It was Thorpe's wife. She smiled triumphantly at him as he came up out of the gloom.

"You've won!" he laughed, not unhappily. "I'd have wagered my last dollar he wouldn't do that for any voice on earth. You've won! Kazan, you brute, I've lost you!"

His face suddenly sobered as Isobel stopped to pick up the end of the chain.

"He's yours, Issy," he added quickly, "but you must let me care for him until—we know. Give me the chain. I won't trust him even now. He's a wolf. I've seen him take an Indian's hand off at a single snap. I've seen him tear out another dog's jugular in one leap. He's an outlaw—a bad dog—in spite of the fact that he hung to me like a hero and brought me out alive. I can't trust him. Give me the chain—"

He did not finish. With the snarl of a wild beast, Kazan had leaped to his feet. His lips drew up and bared his long fangs. His spine stiffened, and with a sudden cry of warning, Thorpe dropped a hand to the revolver at his belt.

Kazan has good reason to hate McCready—so have the others. This dog's vision penetrates deeper than mere eyesight, and he does his best to warn his friends.

VESSELS ARMED BY ORDER OF WILSON

President Also Calls an Extra Session of Congress to Meet April 16.

SECRECY CONCERNING SHIPS

Names of Those Receiving Guns Are Withheld by Government and Secretary Daniels Asks Voluntary Censorship by U. S. Press.

Washington, March 12.—President Wilson has decided to arm American merchant ships, under his constitutional authority, and also has called a special session of congress for April 16.

American merchant ships sailing for the submarine zone have been armed by the government and they are ready to sail.

The names of the armed ships will not be made public by the government and are not expected to be published in the newspapers.

The president signed the proclamation for the extra session on Friday while lying in bed with a cold. Orders for carrying out the president's decision to arm ships were immediately sent to the navy department.

Backed by Cabinet.

The president decided to arm ships after receiving formal opinions from Attorney General Gregory and Secretary Lansing that he had such authority, in spite of old statutes which some believe forbade it.

Mr. Wilson has the backing of the entire cabinet in taking the step. Guns for arming merchantmen have been assembled at navy yards along the Atlantic coast and everything is ready to carry out the policy announced by the president.

Ask Secrecy for Ships.

The navy department issued an appeal to the American newspapers to refrain from publishing any information whatever of the nature or armament of ships and already has appealed to the cable companies to suppress all information of ships crossing the Atlantic in either direction.

Because of the passage by the house of the armed neutrality bill and the signing of the manifesto approving such a step by a majority of the senate during its last session, the president feels he has congress and the country behind him. As soon as congress convenes additional legislation on the question will be asked.

Under a bill passed near the end of the last session the amount of money at the disposal of the government war risk bureau for insuring American ships was increased to $15,000,000.

Tumulty Makes Statement.

The following statement was issued: "Secretary Tumulty stated in connection with the president's call for an extra session of congress that the president is convinced that he has the power to arm American merchant ships and is free to exercise it at once. But so much necessary legislation is pressing for consideration that he is convinced that it is for the best interests of the country to have an early session of the Sixty-fifth congress, whose support he will need in all matters collateral to the defense of our merchant marine."

After the White House announcement the navy department announced "we are prepared as to gunners as well as guns."

Secretary of the Navy Daniels, calling the Washington representatives of the newspapers of the country together, asked that all definite information as to the arming of ships, or the movement of armed ships be suppressed.

May Ask Approval of Step.

It was stated that as soon as the new congress convenes the president will lay before a joint session his views and desires as to legislation. If he wants legislative sanction for his step in arming American ships, congressional leaders declared that it would be promptly forthcoming.

The adoption of a cloture rule in the senate has cleared the way for action in both houses to hold up the president's hands in dealing with Germany.

Immediately following the issuance of the call for an extra session there was a succession of events tending to make it extremely possible that here will be bi-partisan organization in the next house withe Champ Clark continued as speaker.

White Book to Tell Plotting.

It became known that the administration is preparing a White Book setting forth all of the evidence of German plotting against the United States, chiefly in the Latin-American countries, and in the activities of German agents in inciting acts of violence on American soil. These documents are to be published in the event that relations with Germany take a more serious turn.

New York Police Raided a Plant Where Adulterated Honey Was Made.

One of the oldest assertions of the beekeeper has been that honey could not be adulterated with success, but health department inspectors have found a full-grown honey plant in the basement of a private home in Manhattan.

There were no bees at work in the plant when it was raided, but there were half a dozen women and a man as busy as bees with pots and pans about a stove. They were boiling up a concoction the chief ingredients of which were sugar and about ten per cent of genuine honey. The plant was discovered after honey purchasers had complaine dthey were receiving adulterated honey.—New York Mail.

The room was full of little girls in pink slips and pigtails. They sat in rows at wooden desks, as quiet as mice. Over them presided a sweet-faced damsel, stern withal. The lesson concerned coins of the realm, and they had been through the entire range, from pennies to silver dollars. One little miss, however, was singularly inattentive. Her gaze was fixed upon a playful sparrow on the window-sill, and she had no thought for coins. Suddenly the teacher pounced upon her. Placing a half-dollar on the pupil's desk, she demanded: "What's that?" "Heads," came the instantaneous reply.

17-YEAR LOCUST AGAIN DUE

Coming of Periodical Cicada Is Predicted in Pennsylvania by College Profesor.

The "17-year locust" is due in Pennsylvania this year, according to C. H. Hadley, Jr., in charge of entomology extension at State college. The pest is what is known as "brood eight of the periodical cicada," and it apeared here last in 1900.

"This is one of the largest insect broods to occur in this state," Hadley says. "While locusts are usually of importance mainly because of the popular interest aroused, it is quite possible that considerable damage may be caused in those places where the insects appear in unusual abundance."—Philadelphia North Amelcan.

Saves Eggs

Royal Baking Powder makes it possible to produce appetizing and wholesome cakes, muffins, cornbread, etc., with fewer eggs than are usually required.

In many recipes the number of eggs may be reduced and excellent results obtained by using an additional quantity of Royal Baking Powder, about a teaspoon, for each egg omitted. The following tested recipe is a practical illustration:

SPONGE CAKE

- 1 cup sugar
- ⅓ cup water
- 3 eggs
- 2 teaspoons Royal Baking Powder
- 1 cup flour
- 1 teaspoon salt
- ⅛ cup cold water
- 1 teaspoon flavoring

DIRECTIONS:—Boil sugar and water until syrup spins a thread and add to the stiffly beaten whites of eggs, beating until the mixture is cold. Sift together three times the flour, salt and baking powder; beat yolks of eggs until thick; add a little at a time flour mixture and egg yolks alternately to white of egg mixture, stirring after each addition. Add ⅛ cup cold water and flavoring. Mix lightly and bake in moderate oven one hour.

The old method called for six eggs and no baking powder

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of Sunday School Course of Moody Bible Institute.)
(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR MARCH 18

JESUS SAVES FROM SIN.

LESSON TEXT—John 8:12, 31-37, 56-59 (Read entire chapter).

GOLDEN TEXT—If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed.—John 8:36.

Teachers should sketch rapidly in a chronological way the events in the life of our Lord, (See any good harmony) and show that this lesson belongs to the period of the Galilean ministry of Jesus when he had gone up to Jerusalem to attend the feast of the tabernacle (John 7:1-52). Let us be sure to load our guns with temperance ammunition, be familiar with facts, take careful aim, concentrate all we have to say upon one definite aim, and then pull the trigger and be sure to shoot a temperance charge and make a temperance application.

I. The Slavery to Sin. Jesus' previous references to water (Chs. 4 and 7) and to bread (ch. 6) were occasioned by outward occurrences; so with this reference to light. In the treasury (v. 20) near to Jesus as he spake were two colossal, golden lamp stands around which when lighted the people gathered with rejoicing. Amid the blaze of this illumination, Jesus exclaims: "I am the light of the world." What is more beneficent than light as it reveals, cheers and brings life, health and happiness to mankind? Without light there is no vision. Without Jesus there is no spiritual wisdom. Without light we know not whither we are going. Without Jesus we grope in the darkness. Every ray of light, of truth, of holiness and love comes from him, for God is light, and in him is no darkness at all (I John 1:15). Some think that these words were occasioned by the onlookers, seeing what Jesus had written in the sand (vv. 1-11). The first step in the slavery of sin is blindness; the second is habit; and the third is that of absolute slavery (Prov. 5:22). Jesus was the incarnation of the light of God. We cannot conceive of Jesus making such an assertion as this, and being merely a good man.

II. The Possibility of Freedom (vv. 31-36.) These words were spoken to "those which had believed on him," and as the result they were to know the truth, and the truth should make them free. Knowledge and liberty come from a continuance (abiding) in the word of God (John 14:15; 16:12-13). Many men reject Jesus Christ because they claim they wish to have their liberty, and by so doing they lose their liberty. A disciple is a learner; Jesus is the teacher; the entrance examinations to the school of Christ are the simple and necessary condition of believing or accepting him as Lord and teacher. The scholars are all the disciples who continue under his instruction. The object of the schooling is to make perfect men, "unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ" (Eph. 4:22; Col. 4:12). Christ's school is not only in the church and in the Sunday school and Young People's society, but it is everywhere, in the home, in the office, at work and play; wherever one is trying truly to live according to Christ's will, he is in his school, and that school is open both day and night; there are no vacations and no recesses. The text book is the Book of books. We need not argue as to the necessity of sin, but realize the fact that all are under sin (Rom. 5:12), but being under sin does not necessitate our abiding there, nor is sin necessary to our being. This freedom here is from sin and the love of sin and the curse and the penalty of sin and the bondage and corroding care of sin. It is also mental freedom, freedom for Christian activity. A knowledge of the English Bible is a liberal education, and brings true liberty to those who are thus educated. As contrasted to that we have the slavery of sin (vv. 34, 36). The drunkard is a slave because he is restrained from doing what he knows he ought to do. He cannot even do wrong freely for his conscience constantly upbraids him. He is a slave because he is compelled to bear the consequences of sin against his will. The way of escape (v. 36) is through the son: "If the son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed."

III. The Authority (vv. 56, 58). The Jews took exception to the words of Jesus (33-55). When did Abraham see Jesus? Read the 18th and 19th chapters of Genesis, and we find that one of the three who visited Abraham was different from the other two, and remained behind while two went on to Sodom. The one who remained was the Lord Jesus, Jehovah appearing in human form before his later incarnation as Jesus of Nazareth.

"I Am" is the name of Jehovah. Jesus here takes that name to himself. There was a time when Abraham came to be or was (v. 58), but there was no time when our Lord ever came to be for he is the eternal "I Am." Being thus one with God, he has the power to set men free.

We have in this chapter the picture which Jesus draws of the character of the devil as the enemy of mankind under two aspects: First, he is a murderer (v. 44).

No war has slain what intemperance (one of his favorite instruments) has slain. Second, he is a liar.

Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

ALCOHOL AN EXCRETION.

The origin of alcohol is most significant of its character.

It is an excretion of the yeast plant, thrown out because the plant has no further use for it and its retention would have a poisonous effect. Just as the human body is poisoned by an accumulation of waste matter, so the yeast plant is injured by its waste product. When the alcohol has reached a strength of 14 per cent it is sufficiently poisonous to the yeast plant to stop all of its activities.

It is an odd thing that any excretion is poisonous to the living organism which produces it and to all higher forms of life. "The excretion of a mammal might serve as food for some of the lower vertebrates and certainly for fungi and bacteria, but inevitably has a toxic action upon any organism of a higher rank," says Dr. Winfield Scott Hall, of Northwestern Medical school, and he continues:

"The relation of alcohol to life may thus be summed: (1) Ethyl alcohol is the excretion of a fungus; (2) excretions which are toxic (poisonous) to the organism which excretes them are also toxic to all higher organisms; (3) alcohol is toxic to the yeast plant and in conformity to laboratory observations as well as to the logic of the case alcohol is toxic to all animal protoplasm."

And the layman's conclusion would probably be: "The yeast plant, in common with animals, first consumes food and then decomposes it. Man drinks the excreted decomposed food of the yeast plant, called alcohol, and naturally is poisoned thereby."

SCAB WHISKY.

(John F. Connelley, Labor Leader.)

Ninety-four per cent of the whisky made in the United States is made by the whisky trust. Whisky is made by nonunion labor, paid only $9.19 per week according to the United States bureau of census reports. The hours of labor range from ten to 17 per day. Out of $100 paid for whisky at manufacturer's price only $2.08 goes back to the wage earners who made the whisky.

It costs only 12 cents to make a gallon of whisky.

If at some future time a distillery would be unionized, it would be four years before whisky made there could be put on market unless it goes out as rot-gut whisky.

If scab whisky is put into a whisky bottle made by union bottle blowers with words "Union Made" blown on bottle, it will not make the whisky inside the bottle union-made whisky.

It will take eight years to use up all the scab and nonunion-made whisky now in stock in United States.

DRINK AND WAR COMPARED.

In a recent published statement Dr. C. W. Saleeby, F. R. C. S., R. F. S., one of the leading physicians of Great Britain, says that every year alcohol makes 45,445 widows and orphans in England and Wales alone, or over 124 a day.

"The first year of the great war," he says, "cost us about 80,000 lives of our soldiers and sailors. But during every year of peace, alcohol takes at least 60,000 lives in this country. On the most moderate reckoning it is responsible for one-seventh, or about 14 per cent, of the whole death rate. This toll of over a thousand lives a week, year in and year out, is three-fourths of the toll exacted by the greatest war in history."

FAIR EXCHANGE.

A converted drunkard was walking past a saloon in Scranton, Pa., one night after he had "hit the trail" at one of "Billy" Sunday's meetings in that city. It was a place to which he had formerly resorted and which had taken much of his money for the deadly drink. The bartender stood in the door and yelled after him: "I suppose you're one of those religious guys who's given 'Billy' his last cent and had to walk home!"

"Many's the time I've given you my last cent and couldn't see to walk anywhere!" shouted back the man.

GREAT ECONOMIC ISSUE.

"If for no other reason than the fact that prohibition would mean money saving for this country, it would be a good thing," points out ex-Governor Hanly of Indiana. "It cost $1,000,000,000 to run this government last year, and during that time more than $2,000,000,000 was spent for liquor in the United States. In other words, all of the cost of preparedness, of the pension roll, of the operating expenses of the government could have been met with this liquor money, and still there would have been more than $400,000,000 to spare."

NOW READY TO FIGHT.

The Spokane (Wash.) Daily Chronicle says that it was not on the side of prohibition in the fight of 1914, but that it "is ready on ten seconds' notice to fight its best against any effort to repeal or cripple the prohibition law."

ALCOHOL NOT NEEDED.

God never made a normal brain that needed alcohol to stimulate it. If a man needs alcohol he is a defective—inferior to his fellows.—William Jennings Bryan.

BILIOUS, HEADACHY, SICK "CASCARETS"

Gently cleanse your liver and sluggish bowels while you sleep.

Get a 10-cent box.

Sick headache, biliousness, dizziness, coated tongue, foul taste and foul breath—always trace them to torpid liver; delayed, fermenting food in the bowels or sour, gassy stomach.

Poisonous matter clogged in the intestines, instead of being cast out of the system is re-absorbed into the blood. When this poison reaches the delicate brain tissue it causes congestion and that dull, throbbing, sickening headache.

Cascarets immediately cleanse the stomach, remove the sour, undigested food and foul gases, take the excess bile from the liver and carry out all the constipated waste matter and poisons in the bowels.

A Cascaret to-night will surely straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist means your head clear, stomach sweet and your liver and bowels regular for months. Adv.

Sudden Death

Before an insurance company will take a risk on your life the examining physician will test your water and report whether you are a good risk. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog, you suffer from backache, sick-headaches, dizzy spells, or twinges and pains of lumbago, rheumatism and gout, or sleep is disturbed two or three times a night—take heed, before too late!

You can readily overcome such conditions and prolong life by taking the advice of a famous physician, which is: "Keep the kidneys in good order, avoid too much meat, salt, alcohol or tea. DARING DEEDS PERFORMED BY KNIGHTS OF AIR

Feats of British Aviators in Somme Campaign Related by Correspondent.

GREAT HELP TO ARTILLERY

Flying Men, Ringed by White Puff Clouds of Exploding Shells, Direct Deadly Fire Upon Foe—Many Musicians Among Pilots.

London.—Mr. Philip Gibbs, a correspondent with the British armies in the field, sends to the Daily Chronicle an interesting article dealing with the British supremacy in the air and its vital relation to the operations of the Somme. He writes:

"All through the battle of Picardy most of us have kept glancing up into the sky across the enemy's lines from day to day and looking for a Prussian aeroplane. It is a rare bird.

"Now and again when our flying men are not out because the clouds are lying low and it is a 'dud day,' as they call it, a hostile machine sneaks through the mist and drops a few bombs and goes full speed back again; and more often, but not very often, a flight of Prussians will come in a gang through a clear sky and attack one or more of our scouts if they can be sure of having all the odds in their favor. Behind their own lines they are more bold (and there is nothing wrong with their courage as individual fighters), and lie in wait in the crossroads of the air like modern Black Knights (with the Iron Cross as their badge) to defend their territory from all intruders—not, however, with any great success—and to provide exciting combats for our own knights errant. But across our lines they venture rarely.

"During the first week of the battle, which began on July 1, the hostile machines were invisible, and yet during all this time of fighting we cannot go up to the lines without seeing our own aeroplanes flying above the shell fire in Prussian territory.

Ringed by White Puff Clouds.

"The 'Archies' are firing at them, ringing them round with white puff clouds, which burst very close, so close that one holds one's breath or speaks a whisper—'They've got him!'—until a second later one can see the aeroplane skimming onward steadily and quite careless of these explosions which follow on the trail of his wings. Below these flying men of ours shells are crashing and smoke is vomiting up, and villages are burning, and there is all the tumult of battle, but they circle round as aloof as the winged gods themselves, it seems, from all this earthly strife—yet not aloof, because they help to direct the thunderbolts, as some of the old gods did.

"So far from prowling on our side of the lines, these pilots and observers make a daily habit of going for far journeys into the enemy's zone, often as far as Bapaume, which is a dozen miles beyond our own trenches, and to places like Martinpuich and Courcelette and Flers. A few days ago they set Martinpuich on fire, and it was still burning when they flew over it again next day.

"On July 28 four of our aeroplanes paid a surprise call on Mons, the scene of our earliest fighting two years ago, and reminded the enemy of our 'contemptible little army' of those days by flying low and dropping bombs on the rolling stock in the railway station and upon sheds full of munitions. They were leisurely in their circlings, and stayed until fires had exploded at four different points and much ammunition had been blown up. Then they came home to dinner.

"Every day and all day long they are out and about, across the Prussian lines, observing for our artillery and directing the fire of our guns upon the enemy's batteries and other targets which they have seen below with their hawk's eyes. This work, so audaciously and skillfully done, has given us an undoubted mastery of observation, which the enemy no longer holds. The Prussian gunners now have to shoot, mostly, by the map, and although they are very wise in science, it is not the same thing as being able to direct their fire by direct observation of results. Our airmen have been of vast service in the daily battle of guns, and it is largely due to their flights that our artillery has been able to destroy many of the enemy's batteries.

Seven Batteries Silenced.

"One day seven batteries reported active by one machine were all silenced in ten minutes and direct hits were made on five or more batteries.

"On July 28 one of our air squadrons controlled nine direct hits on the enemy's batteries.

"Those things tell. The knocking out of an opposing battery means less loss of life to our infantry and a greater certainty of progress. It is the hardest blow that can be given, for this is a battle of guns, and every battery destroyed is better than the taking of a trench, or at least the easiest way to take it.

"A machine of ours ranged howitzers on a battery of two 5.9 howitzers, which were destroyed, and another machine directed guns on another battery, destroying one emplacement and causing explosions which lasted an hour.

"So the record runs from day to day, and the enemy is getting frightened for his guns and withdrawing some of them at least to safer places.

"The fearlessness of our men is not a virtue with them. It is a natural instinct. They attack unequal odds with the gusto of schoolboys who fling themselves into a football scrimmage.

"Literally, the enemy is put to flight by these modern men of ours, as when the other day one of our pilots dived at five hostile machines attacking one of our scouts and drove them off; and as when, a day or two ago, two others attacked four Fokkers—'the deadly Fokker,' as it used to be called—and drove them down into their own lines.

"They are a new type of men, these pilots and observers of the Royal Flying corps. It is difficult to place them or to account for them. They seem to have been born to fly. For the most part they are very young men—boys of nineteen or twenty—though older men, twice their age and more, are found here and there, having come out of professions like the law and the civil service and taken to the air like ducks to water, but surprised with themselves. The younger men are clean cut, fine and delicately made fellows, as far as I know them, rather highly strung and nervous in temperament.

"Flight the Music of Life."

"It is quite curious that many of them are men of great musical talent. In one squadron I know there are nearly 20 men who are all very full of musical talent. One of them, a stripling, came out of the trenches to volunteer as an airman, with long screeds of music which he had written down 'out of his head,' as children say, without hearing a note of it played until he came back. At night, when dusk creeps through the sky, and one by one the homing birds fly down (there is always an anxious question about the squadron commander, who is the best beloved), the flying men settle round the piano in the aerodrome, and one of them brings out his violin and plays it with a master touch, and another sings in a bass voice that may be heard one day at Covent Garden, and through the evening the men take turns at the piano, to play what comes into their heads and out of their hearts.

"This link between music and flight may be a coincidence in the case of one squadron (though I have heard of it elsewhere), but it may be that flight is the new music of life, and that the imagination of the younger generation is soaring upon real wings, inspired by flight to the deep chords of emotion that in earlier days went into sound and color. The pity is that just now they are instruments of death.

"They have amazing adventures up there in the sky and learn strange things. They learn the look of the great country below, so that every landmark is familiar to them, and any strange flash or shape is detected at once, and those things they must learn in three different scales of light, morning, afternoon and evening, because at each of those times the landscape and the shape and shadows of it are quite different.

"They fly above the bursting shells and the tumult of war, but hear nothing of it unless they come down very low, for the humming of their engine is a great song in their ears.

"But they hear the 'Archies,' which make the puff clouds above them, and sometimes, but not often, the scream of great shells going by them. A friend of mine had a queer and frightful case of this not long ago.

"He was flying fairly low when he saw coming straight for him three-quarters of a ton of metal, in the shape of a shell, and heard its whining note and was tossed as though in a rough sea by the rush of the wind it made. It was a shell from one of our 15-inch Grannies, and this pilot who met it on its way within 100 yards was annoyed for the moment with the gunners below, who had not worried about the bird in the sky, which was my friend.

"They are humorous, keen, sensitive men, these air pilots of ours, and though some of them are very musical they do not disdain other joys of life, like a dinner in some good dining place behind the lines when a 'dud day' makes flying 'off.' And for some of us not of the air it is better than a banquet to see these flying men and to hear them building castles in the air and telling tales more wonderful than those of fairy lore."

FORTY YEARS TO GET SWITCH

Pupil Returned With Birch to Receive Switching Promised in Boyhood.

Milledgeville, Ga.—O. M. Cone, professor of mathematics in the Georgia Military college, was stopped on the streets here by a tall, well-dressed man carrying a birch switch.

"I am John Lehman," said the stranger. "Forty years ago in the old school in Island Creek you decided that a good whipping was what I needed to set me right. You sent me out to get a switch and I never came back. I have never felt right about that and I am back now to take the switching."

Professor Cone agreed to let bygones be bygones and he and his one-time pupil shook hands and went off together.

The Tri-Townships were well represented at the meeting of the DeKalb County Better Farming Association held in the Assembly Room of the Court House, last Saturday afternoon, Mar. 10th. The meeting was for the purpose of investigating the more important phases of Agriculture pertinent to better farming in DeKalb County.

It was the unanimous opinion of the assembly that "Liming the Soils" was an immediate requisite to increase yields in the County. Mr. Henry, assistant state leader of County Agents, speaking on this topic said, "It is an established fact that the soils of DeKalb County are generally acid. It is important that the farmers have the opportunity to get correct and detailed information on this subject." There is probably nothing that will produce returns on the investment quicker than an intelligent use of lime. As a result of this meeting there will be several car loads of lime brought into the county this spring.

The eradication of Oat Smut by treating with formaldehyde is another means of greatly increasing the farm income. Scores of farmers will treat their oats this season. On the farm of Howard W. Mounts, Secy., of the Association, will be run an experiment on the use of phosphorus. One part of the field will be treated with raw rock phosphate, one part will be untreated and then another strip will be fertilized with acid phosphate. This will show whether raw rock is better than acid phosphate, and whether it pays to use either one.

The importance of testing seed corn was emphasized and experiments planned to show best methods of selecting seed. Breeding plots were arranged to be conducted in different parts of the county for the purpose of improving seed. A five-acre Corn Contest was considered for fifty dollars will be given away in prizes. Those entering will also be entitled to premiums of the Indiana Corn Growers Association, which are well worth while. A Corn Show at Auburn this fall was discussed and left to a committee for final action.

Boys and Girls Clubs will be promoted as opportunity affords and as communities desire them. If all is accomplished as planned DeKalb County agriculture will make a big forward step in the year 1917. We should remember that every citizen of DeKalb Co, who is interested in better farming is a member of this organization with no membership fee. As members we should do everything we can to help make these various lines of endeavor count. See the County Agent, Mr. Arehart, or phone him, and get the details of whatever phase of promotion you are particularly interested in. Let us make the slogan "DeKalb Leads, Others Follow" ring true.

30 members of the K. of P. lodge gathered at the Wm. Hamm home Thursday evening after church, to assist in celebrating the 41st. birthday of Mr. Hamm. It was a complete surprise. A fine lunch was served to the company and a most pleasant time was had, and one that will long be remembered.

The slogan of the Indiana Society for the Prevention of Tuberculosis "Every case of tuberculosis in Indiana under supervision," bids fair to be realized if the employment of public health and special tuberculosis nurses progresses at the rate it has progressed during the last six months. During that time eleven new nurses have been employed in Shelbyville, Logansport, Connersville, Muncie, Marion, Rushville, Lawrenceburg, Fort Wayne and two in Jeffersonville. The majority of these nurses have been employed by county anti-tuberculosis societies, some of them by public health nursing associations and two by industrial concerns—the Wayne Knitting Mill at Fort Wayne and the American Car Foundry at Jeffersonville. At the present time there are public health nursing positions open in Elkhart, Frankfort and Plymouth which cannot be filled on account of the scarcity of trained public health workers.

A. G. LUPTON

As a farmer and banker, representing the state bankers' association, the farmer organizations and the Hoosier State Automobile Association, of which he is president, A. G. Lupton, of Hartford City, is firm in the conviction that Indiana should have an excellent system of main market highways, that the way to get it is to create a State Highway department that will get the benefit of the federal aid. Mr. Lupton says it is not to the credit of Indiana that she stands with but two other states that have not created a highway department.

NEW JERSEY FOR GOOD ROADS

Voters Authorize Bond Issue of Seven Million Dollars for Improvement of Highways.

By a majority of about $1,000, voters of New Jersey on November 7 approved the issuance of $7,000,000 of State bonds under what is known as the Egan Act.

The principal and interest of the bonds are to be paid from the motor vehicle license fees, registration fees, fines and penalties. If these are not sufficient, the balance necessary to meet the payments on the bonds is to be taken from the general fund of the State.

The Egan bill also creates a highway commission to carry out the work, and defines thirteen routes traversing all of the counties of the State except Cape May and Hudson.

The commission is to consist of the governor, the president of the State senate, the speaker of the house, the State road commissioner, and the chairmen of the committees of highways of the senate and of the house.

The act provides that the paving on the highway system shall be of granite, asphalt or wood blocks, brick, concrete, bituminous concrete, asphalt, or other pavement having hard serface and of a durable character. The width of the pavement is to be at least 18 feet.

COLD AND HOT

Theory That Heat Uniformly Increases With Descent Into Interior of Earth Is Proved.

The question is often asked: "Are there cold and hot zones below the surface of the earth just as there are on the surface?" Recent developments would tend to prove that such is the case and that the long-accepted theory that heat uniformly increases with descent into the interior of the earth is incorrect.

It has been shown that heat generated by oxidization is often a deterring or determining factor in deep mining. In sundry localities it has been noted that the increase in temperature with depth is not regular, being subject to the amount of pyrites in the ground, or to the time that the hole in the ground is opened up. At Sandhurst, Victoria, New South Wales, Australia, a fall of five degrees Fahrenheit in temperature was noted after the ground had been opened up for one year, and after four years had passed there was a further fall and then an unchanged temperature.

In telling of an instance at Comstock, Nev., a government official says: "At a depth of 1,700 feet boiling water was found, and the statement was then made that a little farther down all matter was molten; yet on passing the 2,000-foot level the temperature decreased, the union shaft at a depth of 3,500 feet having a more comfortable temperature than could be found halfway to the surface."

In the Lake Superior region these irregular conditions are conspicuous. Here there appears to be a local cold zone, as is demonstrated in the Calumet and Hecla shaft, where at 4,700 feet the temperature was 79 degrees Fahrenheit, or only 20 degrees warmer than at a depth of 100 feet.

How December Got Its Name.

The first appearance of December in the calendar was in the role of the tenth month of the year of Romulus, its name being derived from "decem," meaning ten. In 713 B. C., Numa introduced January and February before March, and December was relegated to twelfth place. The name thus ceased to be etymologically correct, and several attempts were made to change it, but without success. For a decade in the second century of the Christian era, in the reign of Commodus, December was called Amazonius, in honor of one of the light lady loves of the prince, but soon after the death of Commodus—he was poisoned by his favorite mistress, Martia — Romans dropped the name of Amazonius and restored the old name of December.

In the original calendar of Romulus December had 30 days. When Numa reformed the calendar he reduced December to 29 days, but Julius Caesar gave it 31 days, and it has been that number ever since. By the ancient Saxons December was called Wintermonat, which was changed, after the introduction of Christianity, to Helighmonat, or Holy month.—Buffalo Times.

A Wrist Watch in the Desert.

One night a company of Arabs attached themselves to our party. This is customary in these wild lands. They saw that we were well armed and came with us for safety. One of them, a dignified young chief, was accompanying a woman across the desert. She was well dressed, this Arab girl, with a yellow turban and a silken robe. On her wrist she wore a Swiss gold watch, and, though bare-footed, she was as dignified as the queens of Lenox and Newport. One of my men apparently made an insulting remark to her, and she called him down just as an American girl would have done. According to the custom of the desert, we had to give him a thrashing, which Mahomet did lustily with a big stick. After that the Arab party always showed us white men the deepest respect.—Peter MacQueen in World Outlook.

Chinese Woman Students in Japan.

Chinese girl students in Tokyo are no longer the curiosity that they were in former years, there being scarcely any girls' school in the metropolis but has among its students young ladies from the only republic in the far East. Many of these girls are studying for teachers, while others are only anxious to acquire new knowledge and become worthy citizens of their country. There are 20 Chinese women, mostly married, studying at Mme. Yoshioka's Medical School for Women, Kawadacho, Ichigaya. These naturally wish to go into practice when they have completed their studies.

Cheated His Widow of a Pleasure.

The will in which a testator directed that his ashes, after cremation, should be buried at the foot of a pear tree in his garden was inspired by a dislike of the needless and largely insincere pomp of mourning. Perhaps the most eccentric choice on record was that of a testator more than a hundred years ago who directed that his coffin should be dropped into the sea a mile below the Needles. It is said that his wife had vowed she would dance on his grave, and he grimly resolved that if she did it should cost her her life.—London Globe.

Deadly Weapon of Submarine.

In most cases the submarine discharges its torpedo when submerged. The water enters the torpedo tube, but this does not interfere with the discharging of the torpedo, nor does this water enter the body of the submarine. This is secured by a set of valves. Most torpedoes have an effective range up to 2,000 yards.

Movers are Plenteous.

This is the time of year when many changes of residences are made in the rural districts of DeKalb county. When farms are rented they are usually leased with the understanding that possession will be given on or about the first day of March.

This year seems to be no exception to the rule, for wagon load after wagon load of household goods, farming implements and the like, are seen on the move daily. These moving caravans have been going in all directions, showing that [illegible] a large number of changes in [illegible] are being made by farm owners in this county this spring.

It often happens that farmers are dissatisfied with their tenants after trying them for a year or two, or that tenants do not feel that their landlords are giving them a square deal. The result is, that after the summer and fall work is over, tenants who are notified to vacate or who desire to better their conditions, begin to look for another farm to lease. This matter is attended to during the winter and then all they have to do is to wait for moving time on or about March 1st.

GRAY HAIR BECOMES DARK AND BEAUTIFUL

Try Grandmother's Old Favorite Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome. Nowadays we simply ask at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You will get a large bottle of this old time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients for about [illegible] cents. Everybody uses this preparation now, because no one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy and you look years younger. Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

COULD NOT EXPECT MORE

Two Years Illness Cured by Glando The Great Gland Tonic.

Mrs. Susan B. Taylor, 848 S. Williams St., Paulding, Ohio, said: "Two years ago I had a general break-down. I was nervous, languid, and hardly able to drag around. My liver and kidneys were sluggish and my complexion sallow. I felt sleepy and drowsy most all day, yet I did not sleep well at night. My heart fluttered terribly at times. I was in this miserable condition two yahrs. A friend persuaded me to try Glando Tonic. The first treatment helped me. I am taking the sixth treatment and am feeling so well that I gladly recommend Glando Tonic to any one who suffers as I did."

Nearly every case of poor health is due to inactivity of the liver, kidneys and other glands. There is enough poison produced in the body every day to cause poor health if it is not eliminated. This poison can be removed only by keeping the glands in a good working condition. Some of the most common symptoms of inactive ganlds are headache, dizziness, indigestion, constipation, backache, pain or ache under the shoulder blade, biliousness, tonsilitis and quinsy. These conditions can be most quickly relieved by using Glando the Great Gland Tonic. It restores the glands to action, removes the impurities and builds up the entire system. Sold only in 50-cent treatments and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Manufactured by the Gland Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

QUIT MEAT IF YOUR KIDNEYS ACT BADLY

Take tablespoonful of Salts if Back hurts or Bladder bothers—Drink lots of water.

We are a nation of meat eaters and our blood is filled with uric acid, says a well-known authority, who warns us to be constantly on guard against kidney trouble.

The kidneys do their utmost to free the blood of this irritating acid, but become weak from the overwork; they get sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and thus the waste is retained in the blood to poison the entire system.

When your kidneys ache and feel like lumps of lead, and you have stinging pains in the back or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or the bladder is irritable, obliging you to seek relief during the night; when you have severe headaches, nervous and dizzy spells, sleeplessness, acid stomach or rheumatism in bad weather, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids in urine so it is no longer a source of irritation, thus ending urinary and bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, and nobody can make a mistake by taking a little occasionally to keep the kidneys clean and active.

IMPORTANT LAWS PASSED BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF INDIANA

Summary of the Work of the Legislature, Including the Acts Providing for State-Wide Prohibition, the Holding of a Constitutional Convention and the Extension of Suffrage to Women.

By ELLIS SEARLES.

History of the state of Indiana will say that the seventieth session of the general assembly, held in 1917, placed more vitally important legislation on the statute books than any previous session held in the Hoosier state. Not that the number of new laws was the greatest, but that the scope of the laws enacted was the broadest and most far-reaching. For the general assembly enacted three measures which, if there had been no others, would have characterized the 1917 session as being of the utmost importance. The three are the call for a constitutional convention to draft a new constitution for the state; state-wide prohibition, and woman suffrage.

All three of these great reform laws came as the result of many years of activity, agitation and work on the part of those citizens of Indiana who believed that they were right and that they should be enacted at the earliest possible moment. To lay the groundwork for a new constitution which will become the basic law of the state would be enough to justify the general assembly in pointing with pardonable pride to its work, even if it had done nothing else. But when state-wide prohibition and woman suffrage are added, it makes a trinity of reforms that gives the session a distinction not easily matched.

It was a progressive session, and the volume of acts of the general assembly will prove it. Not only did the legislature enact the three laws mentioned, but it did many other important things. For instance, it instituted a policy of preparedness by providing for military training in the high schools of the state, and also doubled the appropriation for the support of the Indiana National Guard. The appropriation bill carried $200,000, instead of $100,000, as formerly, for this purpose for each of the next two years.

Provision was made in the appropriation bill, also, for an item of $300,000 as a contingent fund which the governor may use for the betterment and improvement of state institutions by the purchase of additional land and the erection of any needed new buildings. Another item of $350,000 was placed in the hands of the governor as a contingent fund to meet any deficits that may occur in the maintenance of state institutions, due to the steadily increasing cost of living. And, going further, the legislature placed $250,000 in the hands of the governor for use in acquiring a tract of land somewhere in the central part of the state for a new hospital for insane that will, in time, relieve the pressure of crowded conditions at the Central Hospital for Insane at Indianapolis.

A total of $3,693,000 annually was appropriated for the maintenance of state institutions, offices, boards, commissions and departments of the state for the next two years. This is about the same as the amount appropriated by the 1915 session. The specific appropriations, including the items mentioned above, which will be available in the two years, amount to a total of $1,249,000. This makes a grand total of $8,635,000 of appropriations for the next two years.

State-Wide Prohibition.

The most spectacular fight of the session centered around the state-wide prohibition bill, which was finally passed by the general assembly and signed by the governor. The same question has been before other sessions for years past, but it failed to meet with success until this year. When the prohibition law becomes fully effective Indiana will be "bone-dry."

The bill was introduced in the house of representatives by Representative Frank E. Wright of Lynn, Randolph county. It was written by Carl R. Minton, attorney for the Indiana Anti-Saloon league.

The rigidity of the law is shown in the sweeping provision contained in section 4, which says: "That after the second day of April, 1918, it shall be unlawful for any person to manufacture, sell, barter, exchange, give away or otherwise dispose of any intoxicating liquor, or to keep any intoxicating liquor, with intent to sell, barter, exchange, give away, furnish or otherwise dispose of the same, except as in this act provided."

However, any liquor that is under government bond in a bonded warehouse at the time the act takes effect may be disposed of in accordance with the federal law, but it may not be disposed of in Indiana.

The act does not prohibit any person from manufacturing, for his own domestic consumption, wine or cider. Any person may manufacture vinegar and nonintoxicating drinks; or manufacture and sell pure grain alcohol for medicinal, scientific or mechanical purposes, or wine for sacramental purposes under the law; or manufacture or sell denatured alcohol. Wholesale druggists may sell pure grain alcohol to registered pharmacists in quantities not less than one gallon at a time, provided the pharmacist holds a permit under the law; or the wholesale druggist may sell pure grain alcohol to any officer of a public or charitable hospital, or to any medical or other college, for medical, mechanical or scientific purposes, upon the written and signed application of such officer.

Any person may give intoxicating liquor to a guest in his own house, provided it is not a resort. But no person shall be permitted to have on hand in his own house more than one gallon of intoxicating liquor or twelve quarts of beer at the time the law takes effect.

A licensed pharmacist may sell pure grain alcohol only upon the written prescription of a licensed physician or wine for sacramental purposes upon the written order of a clergyman or alcohol for mechanical or scientific purposes under strict conditions.

A licensed pharmacist who wishes to sell liquor shall obtain a permit from the county clerk, and the conditions of the permit are ironclad. The permit runs for two years. Such pharmacist may sell pure grain alcohol to a licensed dentist or licensed veterinarian under strict conditions. The pharmacist is required to keep an accurate record of all such sales and to make a detailed report to the county clerk within five days after the first of January and the first of July each year. All prescriptions and applications shall be kept on file for two years and be open to public inspection.

If any licensed physician wrongfully issues a prescription for liquor he shall be fined and his license shall be revoked.

Liquor is barred from all social or other clubs and clubhouses.

Any room, building or place in which liquor is sold, manufactured, given away or otherwise disposed of or where persons are permitted to resort for drinking purposes in violation of the law is designated in the law as a public nuisance, and it may be abated under the nuisance law. The attorney general, prosecuting attorney or any citizen may maintain such action, and if successful the place shall be closed and the property lie idle for one year.

Any public official whose duty it is to enforce the prohibition law and who fails or neglects to do so may be impeached from office by the circuit court. Any citizen may institute such impeachment proceedings.

It will be unlawful to advertise liquor in the state in any manner whatever, either in newspapers, magazines, or other publications, on billboards, bulletin boards, signs, or otherwise, and any person in charge of such newspaper, publication or other advertising method violating the law shall be punished. Even newspapers, magazines and other publications published outside the state cannot be sold in Indiana if they contain liquor advertising.

The law provides for the issuing of search warrants on the application of any citizen for the search of any place suspected of law violation, and all liquor taken in such raids shall be destroyed and the violator punished. Informers will be immune from punishment. Any wife, child or dependent of any person injured because of the sale of liquor shall have a right of action against the law violator.

An organization or citizen shall have the right to employ an attorney to assist in a prosecution, and no prosecution may be dismissed without the consent of the assistant counsel.

Within ten days after the act takes effect all druggists and other dealers except licensed saloonkeepers shall remove all liquor from their places of business, except such as are allowed by the law.

"Intoxicating liquors" are defined as follows: "All malt, vinous or spirituous liquors containing so much as one-half of one per cent of alcohol, or any drink, beverage or other preparation or mixture, whether patented or not, containing as much as one-half of one per cent of alcohol by volume."

Penalties under the law are fines ranging from $250 to $500 and from thirty days to one year in jail.

A supplemental bill was passed which provides that beginning with April 2, 1917, retail liquor licenses for the remaining fractional part of the year up to April 2, 1918, may be issued, and the license fee shall be in proportion to the time for which the license is to run. All such licenses will expire on April 2, 1918, the day the prohibition law takes effect. It is provided, however, that no such new license shall be issued to any person except those now holding licenses.

Constitutional Convention.

The one act of the general assembly which is, probably, of greatest importance to the state, when considered fundamentally, is the act which calls for the holding of a constitutional convention. The act is the result of long and continuous agitation on the part of a large element of the citizenship of Indiana in favor of a revision of the Indiana state constitution. The present constitution was regarded as being out-of-date and not adapted to present conditions and needs. It was adopted in 1851, and although a few amendments have been made since then, the process of amendment is so difficult that those who favored important changes believed the only way to get the changes was through a constitutional convention which would frame and write an entire new constitution and submit it to the people for ratification.

Under this act, the constitutional convention will open on the second Tuesday in January, 1918, and it will be held in the chamber of the house of representatives in the capitol at Indianapolis. The convention will consist of 115 delegates. Fifteen will be elected by the voters of the state at large, and 100 will be elected from the state representative districts, the same as members of the house of representatives are elected. The election of delegates to the convention will be held throughout the state on the third Tuesday in September, 1917, and it will be held under all of the election laws that govern a general election.

The election board in each precinct in the state will consist of one inspector and two clerks, all to be appointed by the judge of the circuit court of the county, and they will receive the same pay and have the same authority as election officials at general elections.

The election will be non-political and non-partisan. Candidates for delegates will be nominated by nominating petition only. Any qualified voter may run for delegate by filing with the secretary of state not more than 60 nor less than 30 days before the election a petition signed by not less than 200 qualified voters of his district. Candidates for delegate at large are required to file petitions signed by not less than 50 voters in each congressional district of the state. Each candidate shall give his full name and address, and state that he will qualify as delegate if elected. If objection is made to a candidate the secretary of state shall hear and determine the case and his decision will be final.

The ballots shall be printed so as to place the name of each candidate in a district at the top of the list on an equal number of ballots, thus preventing any discrimination. There shall be no emblem or distinctive design on the ballot.

Any vacancy occurring among the district delegates shall be filled by special election, and any vacancy among the delegates at large shall be filled by the remaining delegates at large. The convention shall be the judge of the election and qualification of its members, and the rules that will govern the convention will be the same as those that govern the house of representatives. The convention will elect a president and other officers and appoint committees. Delegates shall receive the same pay and mileage that is allowed to members of the house of representatives, and shall fix the pay of its employees. The bill appropriates whatever sum is required to pay the expense of the convention. A majority of the delegates will constitute a quorum to transact business.

All public officials are required to furnish all information that is desired by the convention, and failure to do so will be punishable by a fine of $300.

Provision is made for the publication and distribution of 20,000 copies of the present state constitution and 20,000 copies of the constitutional convention act as passed by the general assembly.

The bureau of legislative and administrative information is required to prepare and supply to the convention all available data on the constitutions of other states and an annotated digest of the present Indiana constitution, and $3,000 is appropriated for this work.

No time limit is placed on the convention. It may take as much time as it may require for its work, and it is believed that the work cannot be completed in less than three months.

When the convention has drafted its proposed constitution, it shall set a date for a special election, at which the question of adoption or rejection of the proposed new constitution shall be submitted to a vote of the people of the state. The selection of the date for the election is left entirely with the convention.

Woman Suffrage.

Under the provisions of the Masten-McKinley part suffrage measure, which was passed, Indiana women get their first chance to vote. It is said they have the right to vote for more different offices than the women of any other suffrage state. Women possessing the qualifications fixed by the law for men voters have the right to vote for the following offices:

Presidential electors, attorney general, state statistician, state geologist, reporter of the supreme court, judges of the appellate, superior, criminal, probate and juvenile courts, members of the county council, county assessor, township trustee, township advisory board, township assessor, all elective officers of cities and towns, all school officials elected by the people, and for all other elective offices not provided for by the present state constitution and which may be created by the legislature.

Since the present constitution bars women from voting for constitutional offices, the bill provides that separate ballot boxes and ballots shall be supplied, the ballots to contain only the names of candidates who are to be voted for by women. These ballots are to be canvassed separately and then added to those cast for the same offices by men voters. Women are required to register as voters, the same as men.

State and county offices provided for in the constitution, and for which women may not vote, include governor, lieutenant governor, secretary of state, auditor of state, treasurer of state, judges of the supreme court, circuit judge, county sheriff, county auditor, county treasurer and county commissioners.

Outside of offices, the women will have the right to vote on all questions that may be submitted to the people, except amendments to the present constitution. They may vote for delegates to the coming constitutional convention and vote for or against ratification of the new constitution.

Women will have the right to vote for the first time at a regular election at the city elections throughout the state next November.

Women voters are subject to the same penalties for violations of the election laws as men. Women's organizations are starting already on a state-wide campaign of education of women in politics and on how to vote at elections.

Banks and Trust Companies.

The board of directors of loan, trust and safe deposit companies are made to consist of not less than six members, under senate bill 4. Where the capital stock does not exceed $50,000 each director must own at least five shares of stock. Where the capital stock is above $50,000 any stockholder owning at least five shares may be elected an officer.

Business.

The registration of trade marks and trade slogans and licenses for the use of the same is authorized in one bill.

The attorney general is authorized to make an investigation to ascertain whether outside oil distributors are discriminating against Indiana oil producers.

Under a new law circuses, theaters, picture shows, peddlers and ferries will be required to pay a license fee to the county. Theaters and picture shows pay $5 annually. Circuses pay from $5 to $25 a day, according to the number of cars used. Wagon shows pay $1 a day. Carnivals pay $5 a day for each attraction in the carnival. Every concert of any kind for pay shall pay $1. This, it is believed, covers church concerts as well as others. Peddlers and traveling merchants pay from $5 to $20 for a license in each county in which they operate.

Most food products are now to be sold by avoirdupois weight or numerical count, under a new bill.

Churches.

Members of the Old Amish church are exempted from making oath or affirmation to obtain marriage license, but the bishop of the church may swear to a statement of facts instead.

Cities and Towns.

Common councils of cities and boards of trustees of towns are authorized to recognize liability under the workmen's compensation law for injury to or the death of a policeman or fireman in performance of his duty.

The terms of town trustees are fixed at four years and the terms of town clerks and treasurers at two years, and all voters in the town may vote for all of the trustees.

A bill was passed to legalize Sunday motion picture shows. It creates a state motion picture commission, which will have general supervision of the business. The commission will consist of three members, appointed by the governor, with salaries of $1,000 a year each. The commission will have power to investigate complaints in regard to immoral or indecent pictures being shown, and it may revoke the license of a picture house on that ground. Picture houses in cities of the various classes will pay annual license fees as follows: In cities of the first class, $25; cities of the second class, $20; cities of the third class, $15; cities of the fourth class, $10; cities of the fifth class, $5. All license fees collected go into the state treasury to be used to pay the salaries and expenses of the commission. Picture shows are prohibited from operating before 2 o'clock p. m. on Sundays.

Provision is made that in cities of the fourth and fifth classes the offices of clerk and treasurer may be held by the same person, if the city council so decides.

Cities of the first and second classes are authorized to hold special elections to decide whether they shall create park districts to be composed of the entire city and adjacent territory to the extent of one mile in each direction.

Cities of the third and fourth classes are required to maintain police pension funds.

Cities of the fifth class are empowered to join with churches, lodges or other organizations in the building of hospitals.

Courts.

After a fight lasting through several sessions, Gary finally got a court. A bill was passed moving Lake county superior court, room 3, from Hammond and Crown Point to Gary, where it will sit hereafter.

Under the provisions of house bill 133, the judge of a city court may direct that warrants or other processes issued by that court may be served by a policeman, constable or any person specially deputized for that purpose. City judges say they have had much trouble in getting members of the police force to serve warrants and to attend court as witnesses after serving the warrants.

The time for holding the terms of the Henry county circuit court was fixed in house bill 6.

Judges of trial courts are given authority to extend the time limit beyond 60 days in which to perfect appeals to the supreme and appellate courts in case it is found to have been impossible to complete the appeal in time.

Under the former law if any beneficiary under a will sought to break the will by contest he forfeited his share in the estate. This law was repealed.

Juvenile courts are required to destroy records of cases in court against minors who have given a good account of themselves for two years after being in court.

Cases appealed from the state industrial board are now entitled to advancement by courts.

The governor vetoed a bill to make a separate circuit of Warrick county and another circuit of Spencer and Perry counties.

Crimes.

Fortune telling and the practice of clairvoyancy is made a crime by house bill 155. It provides a fine of from $10 to $100 and imprisonment from five to sixty days for violations. It applies to every person who, for pay, pretends to foretell the future by cards, tokens, trances, palmistry, mind-reading or astrology. It applies to anyone who pretends to recover lost or stolen articles, give business advice or love advice. It prohibits advertising of any such business in any manner. The bill exempts ministers and religious bodies.

"Peeping Toms" are made liable to a fine of not more than $50 and a jail sentence of not more than six months by house bill 58.

It is now a crime for any person to make a false statement in any advertisement of any kind for the purpose of inducing people to purchase goods, securities or anything of that character. This is a blow at wildcat securities. The bill was supported by the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World.

Drainage.

House bill 108, which became a law without the signature of the governor, provides that state swamp lands, across which drains are to be constructed, shall be offered for sale by the auditor of state and the proceeds used for the cost of the drains, under supervision of the circuit court having jurisdiction of the drainage proceedings.

Education.

The trustees of any town that does not exceed 2,000 population are authorized by house bill 125 to assume the indebtedness of the school town, to the extent of $5,000, for the purpose of effecting a transfer of the school property to the school township in which the town is situated, the township then to erect a township high school.

House bill 192 gives patrons in one or more school districts adjoining townships the right to successfully petition for consolidated district schools.

Towns with a population of less than 2,000 are empowered, by house bill 76, if they have indebtedness, to contract with townships for the joint use of the town schools.

One bill provides for the consolidation of township and town schools, if a majority of the voters favor such consolidation. This bill became a law without the signature of the governor.

A bill was passed authorizing the holding of teachers' institutes on either one or two Saturdays in each school month and the payment of teachers for attending the institutes.

Regular monthly fire drills in all public schools of the state are required under a new law.

In order to enable state educational institutions to accept gifts and bequests of land or property, a bill was passed authorizing such acceptance. Such institution may agree to return an annuity to the donor. No such institution has authority to pledge itself to adopt any course of study, as a condition for the gift, other than such as the institution has heretofore engaged in.

Drivers of school hacks in the country are now required to stop their hacks and look up and down the track before crossing any railroad, and a heavy penalty is provided against any driver failing to obey this law.

A bill was passed legalizing the incorporation of Oakland City college.

Fish and Game.

Provision is made for the organization of associations for fish propagation and for the legalizing of fish hatcheries in the waters of the state.

Protection of certain kinds of fish in the waters of Lake Michigan, prohibiting the taking of fish of small sizes, and regulating the size of nets used is provided in a new act.

It is made a crime to kill wild squirrels between November 1 and August 1.

Highways.

The governor allowed senate bill 5 to become a law without his signature, because he thought it was unconstitutional. It provides for the construction and maintenance of a road from a county seat to the nearest railroad station, where the county seat is not on a railroad.

Insurance.

Under house bill 28, farmers' mutual insurance companies are permitted to do business in three contiguous counties.

Libraries.

Where a town and a township are joint owners of a library the judge of the circuit court shall have authority to appoint citizens of townships as members of the library board. This bill became a law without the signature of the governor.

One bill provides that county libraries may be established and that certain library privileges to entire counties may be granted by city libraries. The governor permitted this bill to become a law without his signature.

Military.

Pay, inspection, subsistence and medical officers of the Indiana National Guard are required by house bill 199, to be appointed from officers of the guard, and they must have had previous military experience. Retirement at the age of sixty-four years is provided for.

Under one act passed, townships are directed to bury the bodies of deceased soldiers or sailors, their wives or widows in other cemeteries than pauper cemeteries, at township expense.

Military training in the high schools of the state is provided for in a bill that was passed. It does not make the training mandatory or compulsory, but says that the school board of any city or town may adopt military training for its high school. The board must pay for the instructors, but the arms and equipment will be furnished by the federal government. This is the real preparedness act of the session. Military instructors are required to pass an examination by a board of three military officers, one of whom shall be an officer of the United States army.

A bill was passed making the salary of the quartermaster general of the Indiana National Guard $2,000 a year. The United States government will pay a part of the salary, and the state will pay enough to make up the full $2,000.

Heretofore when a veteran soldier was admitted to the State Soldiers' home at Lafayette he was required to sign an agreement that a portion of his pension should go to the state. This law was repealed.

The sum of $1,500 was appropriated toward defraying the expenses of the G. A. R. state encampment and toward the maintenance of the department itself.

Newspapers.

A bill was passed providing that legal notices heretofore required by law to be published in weekly newspapers may now be published in daily or weekly papers.

Public Health.

The bill prepared by Mrs. Albion Fellows Bacon of Evansville, the originator of good housekeeping regulations in Indiana, as a supplement to her former measures, was allowed by the governor to become a law without his signature. It empowers health commissioners to order the vacation of insanitary dwellings in localities not governed by the present housing laws.

The sum of $7,000 was appropriated, to be spent by the state board of health and the health officer of Gibson county in the care of David Byers, a leper of Fort Branch. A cottage will be erected to house Byer and his wife and daughter, and they will be maintained there with this fund.

Public Officials.

A bill which seeks to wipe out a bad practice in official life was the one introduced by Senator Thornton, and passed, which makes it a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine, for a county attorney to represent private clients and practice before boards of county commissioners.

Public Officers.

The office of legal clerk and counsel to the public service commission was abolished by an act of the legislature. This position carried a salary of $6,000 a year, and the legal clerk to the commission also served as legal clerk to the governor.

Public Parks.

Under senate bill 39, any fifth-class city may have a park board, created by action of the common council. Members of the board shall serve without pay.

Railroads.

A bill was passed providing that the fiscal year of railroads in Indiana shall close on December 1, the same as is required by the interstate commerce commission, and that annual reports shall be filed with the public service commission as of that date.

Railroads are prohibited from establishing any freight or receiving yards within 500 feet of any church or school.

Real Estate.

Senate bill 65 provides that the lien of any mortgage on real estate shall expire 20 years from the date of the last payment.

State Institutions.

An unlimited amount of money is appropriated by senate bill 132 for repairs and remodeling of the statehouse so as to provide more room for offices and better ventilation. The statehouse has been in a crowded condition for years, but it contains much waste space that can be utilized for office rooms.

Provision is made in house bill 107 for the governor to publish a state year book containing all statistics, reports and other information which will be of interest to the public. This year book will take the place of all of the separate reports which heretofore have been published by the various departments and institutions of the state, and it is expected that it will mean a large saving in printing bills.

Provision is made in a new law for transporting insane and feeble-minded persons whose homes are in other states back to their places of residence.

Vetoed.

The governor vetoed the bill to create an additional superior court at Terre Haute. He said in his veto message that the constitutional convention will undoubtedly provide for a complete court system for the state, and that he did not feel justified in signing a bill to create a new court under such circumstances. It is known, also, that he was opposed to the additional expense of a new court.

The governor vetoed a bill which proposed a plan for release of mechanics' liens, because, he said, it failed to provide for protection in certain cases.

One bill vetoed by the governor provided that changes in township boundary lines could be made only upon petition of a majority of the voters. The governor said he did not think the power to change township boundary lines should thus be taken away from the county commissioners.

GOOD ROADS FOR HOOSIER STATE

Highway Commission Bill Signed by Governor After Considerable Delay.

PROVISIONS OF THE NEW LAW

Commission Will Be Composed of Four Members by the Governor—They In Turn Will Select Their Assistants.

Indianapolis.—By setting the clocks of the legislature back several hours the lawmakers were able to whip the new draft of the highway commission bill into shape and get it through both branches of the assembly. For this reason it was one of the last bills to reach the governor's desk which was already piled high with a mass of the eleventh-hour bills passed by the lawmakers. This meant delay for the measure, and while it was thought the governor would sign the measure its disposition was not a certainty until he attached his signature to the bill some 48 hours later.

This was one of the very important bills before the legislature and by its becoming law Indiana takes her place among the states of the Union that propose to develop and improve its public highways to the last degree. One of the purposes of the new law is to eliminate the possibilities for graft that have existed for so many years in the state and to provide a plan by which the people of the Hoosier state should get a dollar's worth of road improvement for every dollar spent for the purpose.

Will Save State Big Sums of Money.

It has been estimated that hundreds of thousands of dollars was squandered each year in Indiana on road improvement for which the public got but a small percent of benefit in return. But the new law will remedy that situation and give the state the kind of roads for which it has been paying.

Composed of Four Members.

The state highway commission will be composed of four members, to be appointed by the governor, and they will receive $600 a year each. In the beginning, one will serve for one year, one for two years, one for three years and one for four years. Thereafter, all will serve for four years. The commission will select the state highway engineer and fix his salary. He will employ and select his assistants.

Contracts for main market highways, which will be designated by the state highway commission are to be let by county commissioners of the county in which the road will be built, their action, however, to be subject to the approval of the state highway engineer appointed by the state highway commission.

Money for Good Roads.

State money for the highway commission's work will include $100,000 from the state's general fund this year and $500,000 in 1918. To this will be added the inheritance tax collected annually by the state, approximately $400,000.

In addition to the money available from the state, the United States government will add an equal amount up to and including the year 1920. The sums that the state of Indiana will get from the government in case its source of revenue supply an equal amount are: July 1, 1917, $407,242; July 1, 1918, $407,242; July 1, 1919, $642,990; July 1, 1920, $678,938; a total of $2,036,212.

All of the cost of improvement of main market highways to be improved under this law will not be borne by the state as a whole and the federal government. Half of the cost, under the terms of the new law, will be paid by the county in which the road is constructed. The latter also may, in case a certain class of construction is desired or some special feature is desired, pay more than one-half of the cost.

Main Market Roads.

Plans for all main market highways to be built or repaired will be prepared by the state highway engineer.

Main market highways to be constructed under the law cannot exceed 2,000 miles by 1920. Roads other than those may be constructed under the direction of the state highway engineer, or his assistants.

The state highway commission shall cause to be prepared a complete road map of the entire state. In designating main market highways for improvement the commission shall seek to connect them up into a continuous highway. Allotments of state aid to the counties for such highway improvement will be made as nearly as practical in the order in which the requests from the counties are received.

House Bills Passed.

The house passed the following bills:

Giving voluntary associations in certain cases the power to condemn and purchase lands for park purposes.

Conferring the right of eminent domain to park commissioners.

Limiting apportionment of justice of the peace to one to a township in townships containing cities of the second class and giving such justices the power to appoint constables.

Regulating the organization, management and discipline of the Indiana National Guard.

Governor Gets Protests.

Governor Goodrich has already received many appeals from every part of the state asking him to refuse to sign the McCray Sunday movie bill, one of the last acts of the legislature. The bill would allow movies to open Sunday after 2 p. m. and create a state board of censorship. Many church people wrote letters to the governor. The governor signed the Dilworth prison labor bill which will affect every county and township in the state. The state penal institutions are allowed to manufacture products for county, township and state use and they must be accepted. The surplus may be sold in the open market. The law will make way for the abolition of the contract labor system in 1919. Dr. A. F. Nelson, state veterinarian, offered to resign and Governor Goodrich indicated he would accept the resignation in a few weeks. Nelson recently was declared not entitled to $12,000 in fees held in a bank here, and the legislature, against the governor's wishes, inserted a $5,000 appropriation for Doctor Nelson.

Grand Jury Probes Report.

The Marion county grand jury, sitting in special session, began an investigation of the publication of a report that 500 negroes had been imported from Lake county, Indiana, to aid in the nomination of Charles W. Jewett, opponent to Lew Shank, as candidate for the Republican nomination for mayor in the primary election. Forthwith subpoenas were issued for the editor and city editor of the paper in which the report was published, and for Paul Hennessey, known as Three Star Hennessey, who has been one of Shank's managers.

The report published was apparently based on a statement by Three Star, who formerly operated the La Belle hotel, Senate avenue and Ohio street, that he knew 500 colored men had been brought to the city by the Jewett forces to be voted illegally in the primary. Alvah J. Rucker, prosecuting attorney, who is in charge of the investigation, said its purpose was to determine whether the report was true and if it was to indict the persons guilty and if not true to determine whether or not criminal libel had been committed by the parties circulating the report.

Double Money for National Guard.

The senate also doubled the appropriation for the Indiana National Guard, from $100,000 a year to $200,000 a year, because of the threatening international situation.

Although the bill to appropriate $350,000 to build a new building for the Indiana University School of Medicine was passed by both houses it is still a question whether the governor will sign it, because of lack of state funds.

Signs Military Training Bill.

One of the important bills signed by the governor on the last day was the McNagny bill to provide for military training in high schools of the state. The bill does not make it mandatory, but school boards may adopt the training.

One of the eleventh-hour bills passed by both branches was one introduced at the final session by Senator Beardsley to provide for the registration of woman voters. The bill was passed under suspension of the rules.

Refuses to Sign Corydon Bill.

Governor Goodrich refused to sign the Corydon statehouse bill, a bill which provides for an appropriation of $50,000 to buy the state's first capitol. He also let it be known that he would refuse to sign nearly every extraordinary appropriation bill because of the failure of the corporation excise tax bill, which would have added $2,000,000 to the state's revenues.

The necessity for economy became more urgent when the legislature passed the bill reducing the state tax levy 5 cents.

Governor Goodrich signed the bill permitting the issuance of "part-year" saloon licenses until the prohibition law becomes effective April 2, 1918.

The Retherford bill to compel Saturday paydays was killed in the senate. The Samber bill to allow lake cities to build seawalls under the public improvement act will become a law with the governor's signature, passing the senate in the afternoon. A bill to return to counties the amount of auto tax paid from those counties was killed.

Total Appropriations $4,971,786.

The total appropriations of the legislature, as contained in the general and specific appropriation bills, amount to $4,971,786 as compared to $4,019,179 by the 1915 legislature.

The Bartel bill to allow cities to adopt the commission form of government failed in the senate, 20 to 22.

Many bills in which individual members of the legislature were interested failed to see daylight in the final rush of business and they died with the end of the session.

Diamond Ring to Speaker Eschbach.

The presentation of a diamond ring to Speaker Eschbach of the house marked the closing of that body. The senate closed with "Silver Tongue" Mike Thornton delivering a speech amid cheers and laughter and songs from the members.

The following bills failed to pass the senate:

To establish a department of insurance, separated from the office of auditor of state, and at the head of which shall be a commissioner of insurance, to be appointed by the governor, and to receive a salary of $5,000, which is $1,500 increase over the salary paid the present clerk of the insurance department.

Providing inspectors of state pure food and drug department shall inspect drugs used by physicians and for inspection of sanitary condition of their offices.

FALLING HAIR MEANS DANDRUFF IS ACTIVE

Save Your Hair! Get a 25 Cent Bottle of Danderine Right Now—Also Stops Itching Scalp.

Thin, brittle, colorless and scraggy hair is mute evidence of a neglected scalp; of dandruff—that awful scurf.

There is nothing so destructive to the hair as dandruff. It robs the hair of its luster, its strength and its very life; eventually producing a feverishness and itching of the scalp, which if not remedied causes the hair roots to shrink, loosen and die—then the hair falls out fast. A little Danderine tonight—now—any time—will surely save your hair.

Get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any store, and after the first application your hair will take on that life, luster and luxuriance which is so beautiful. It will become wavy and fluffy and have the appearance of abundance; an incomparable gloss and softness, but what will please you most will be after just a few weeks' use, when you will actually see a lot of fine, downy hair—new hair—growing all over the scalp. Sure Test of Diamond.

The fact that real diamonds are phosphorescent after being treated in the following manner is said to make the following test a sure one: First of all, expose the stone for a few minutes to the light of an electric lamp. Then rub briskly on wood or metal. Now take it into a dark place, when the diamond will glow brightly. This does not occur in the case of a false gem.

CANADA'S BONUS TO FARM LABORERS

Offering 160 Acres to Farm Hands.

Canada today, with the great demand that is made upon it for foodstuffs, finds itself almost in the throes of a labor famine. A novel means of solving the problem has been evolved by the Canadian Government at Ottawa on Wednesday last, when it was decided to practically bonus every farmhand going to Canada, by giving him 160 acres free as a homestead, and to allow the time he would be working out for, the good wages offered, to count as residence duties on the homestead. Western Canada has been a big producer of grain and it is estimated that there is a shortage of over thirty thousand men, necessary to produce an average crop in 1917. This shortage has been caused by so many young men having left the farms to go to war, and it is essential to make an unprecedented offer of this kind, to fill their places on the land at once.

It has been required in the past to do three years' duties on homesteads to get title, but an additional inducement has been offered by practically reducing this term to two years. As explained by an official of the Canadian Government, Canada's need for farm laborers is intense, and exceptional inducements are being offered to get the needed farm workers at once. A farmhand will make his entry for one of the 160-acre farms, satisfy the Government that he is working for a farmer and that time will apply as residence on the land filed for, just the same as if he was actually living on it.—Advertisement.

New Art Disguises Uniforms.

One of the latest conceptions for rendering military uniforms less visible on the field of battle is to use material in pronounced irregular alternating patches of contrasting light and dark colors with navy outlines.

Some of the darker patches are outlined in a still darker color, and smaller spots of contrasting color break up the color effect of some of the patches, so that the effect of uncertain light and shade is produced, to cause the garment to lose its identity by mingling with the background.

With the Fingers! Says Corns Lift Out Without Any Pain

Sore corns, hard corns, soft corns or any kind of a corn can shortly be lifted right out with the fingers if you will apply on the corn a few drops of freezone, says a Cincinnati authority.

At little cost one can get a small bottle of freezone at any drug store, which will positively rid one's feet of every corn or callus without pain or soreness or the danger of infection.

This new drug is an ether compound, and dries the moment it is applied and does not inflame or even irritate the surrounding skin. Just think! You can lift off your corns and calluses now without a bit of pain or soreness. If your druggist hasn't freezone he can easily get a small bottle for you from his wholesale drug house.—adv.

WHY HAIR CHANGES

Turns White Because of Air in the "Cortex."

Expert Gives Some Information About the Human Head Covering—Quality of Hair Remains Same Through Life.

There are very few people whose hair begins to turn gray before they are twenty-two years old, but there is scarcely anyone whose hair does not show some trace of gray by the time he has reached fifty.

Generally the first signs of grayness appear about the temples and then gradually spread through the whole hair. Gray hair comes from the eternal change of things and is merely indicative of age and the passing of time. You may say this cannot be so, because you have had gray hair. That is all well and true, but the passing of time and the changes which come with age begin the moment a person is born. The losing of your baby teeth is nothing more than the sign of age, remarks a writer in the Brooklyn Eagle.

From generation to generation patches of white have appeared in the hair of different members of a family. This is due to heredity, but further than that no one knows.

Severe head wounds, long sicknesses, chronic dyspepsia, malaria, fevers, anemia, violent headaches and almost any debilitating disease will be apt to bring on gray hairs.

One theory advanced by a large hairdressing establishment in Chicago is that gray hair comes from an impoverished condition of the blood.

Another theory is that the change is based on the quantity of blood. It is true that a person's hair has instantly turned white from being suddenly immersed in ice-cold water. The reason given for this is the basis of the "quality" theory.

A third and new theory is based on the fact that the color of the hair is influenced by the amount of air which is in the cortex, the outer covering of the hair. It has been found that by placing one of the hairs which has turned white into ether or turpentine, which expels the air, the hair resumed its natural color. Why air in cortex should make this change no one knows. It is on the same principle that the egg turns snow white when air is beaten into it.

The air theory is that which is held by the best dermatologists. Hair grows in little scales closely fitted one upon the other. Once these scales get separated, the air comes in and forms either rounded separated globules or groups by themselves. When the air bubbles get between the hair cells and the cortex the pigment is obscured and the hair straightway loses its color and appears white.

This theory by all odds seems the most acceptable. The reason other theories about the quantity and quality of blood supply to the hair cells do not hold as much weight is because white hair is generally as healthy and of the same texture as the hair before, and, in fact, is practically the same hair, differing only in color. If the blood had much effect it would not only interfere with the coloring matter, but would also change or weaken the hair itself.

Then, too, these theories do not explain what has happened to make the color change. The air theory explains this, and also gives you a logical reason why the quality of the hair remains apparently unaffected.

Our Deadly Self-Consciousness.

I would rather have the gift of tremendous outpouring affection—love of God and love of humanity—than any other gift in all the world. I desire it more than anything else. And yet, even at those heaven-sent periods when my heart is full of love, how hard it is to express it. Of course, this is partly shyness—that curious, hampering mantle of reserve in which we are forever hastening to wrap our spirits. How timid and anxious our little self is! Our spirit-self is forever shocking it. The stiff conventional self is constantly trying to cover up the spirit self—like a proper middle-aged nurse pursuing a happy care-free baby who has adventured forth with too few clothes on.—Atlantic.

Use for Skins of Sharks.

The skin of sharks is very tough and durable, and some of them have a beautiful surface pattern, which remains after tanning.

Arrangements have already been made for securing from Florida fishermen a large supply of large sharkskins, and further specimens are expected from other sources. These skins will be sent by the bureau of fisheries to tanners. It is hoped that eventually all fishermen along our coasts may find a regular market for the skins of sharks caught by them.

Puzzled Youngster.

Marie hit upon a problem the other day more perplexing than George II's apple dumpling. She peered between the uncut leaves of a magazine and said: "Mother, how did they ever get the printing in there?"

To Remove Stains.

To remove stains from white goods, soak the article in equal quantities of Javelle water and hot water until the stain disappears; then rinse thoroughly in several waters, and finally in diluted ammonia water. Javelle removes the most obdurate stains.

AS THE MINISTER SEES IT

Finds Compensation for His Efforts in Community Where Talents Seem to Be Buried.

"Why, man, you're burying your talent in a place like this!" the minister's friend said earnestly, almost indignantly. "Out in the thick of things, with your abilities, you could accomplish almost anything. If you stay on here, the world will soon forget there is such a fellow as Ralph Denniston."

Denniston smiled his familiar quizzical smile. "I don't believe God is forgetting McQuiston. When I came out to this little frontier town, fifteen years ago, I was confident that I was being sent. If I hadn't been, I think I should have gone somewhere else. After I had taught six months in the stuffy, overcrowded, little school building on the hill yonder, I was surer of it than ever. I knew the place needed me, or a better man, and I didn't see any likelihood that the better man would come. The pupils 'took to me,' as the parents say, and I knew I had an influence with them. I could point out a good many cases now where I've 'got results.'

"The salary is small, and I've had a dozen 'better' offers. They've come mostly through old college classmates, and for that reason it's pained me to turn them down; but—well, I've never heard the order to leave from the one in command. That may sound like mysticism to a hard-headed, practical man of affairs like you, McQuiston, but it's very real to me, and yes, I might as well say it, very precious and satisfying. I doubt whether a salary of ten thousand a year would give me the peace of mind it does to know that I'm where God wants me to be.

"I won't say I don't have my longings for what you call 'the thick of things.' That's unavoidable, after a fellow has once known the thrill of big undertakings and the zest of neck-and-neck competition. But I think of it like this: When the workday is over, I'd want to feel that I could face God with a clear conscience about this thing. I'd hate to confess that I'd obeyed the heavenly vision at the start, and later on quibbled, and pretended I couldn't see it any longer."

"I don't know but you're more than half right," the other admitted soberly. His eyes narrowed upon the white school building on the hilltop, and there was a long silence. "To feel sure God knows where to find you, because he sent you there and never gave you orders to leave—that's a great thought, Denniston."

Using the Refuse.

What becomes of the old sardine tins, tomato cans, meat tins, fruit tins and tins of all kinds? In France where nothing is allowed to go to waste they gather them up and use them—to cut into tin soldiers.

In France, too, old boots and shoes are collected and every part is used over again. The work is mostly done by convicts in prisons. They take the boots and shoes to pieces and soak them; then the uppers are cut up into children's shoes or if they are too far gone for that a peculiar kind of pressed leather is made by some chemical action. The nails are saved and sold and the scraps go to the farmers to fertilize the soil.

Who would have thought it possible to make anything out of old saws? Yet it is said that many of the finest surgical instruments and some of those used by engineers are manufactured from the steel that first saw duty in saws. The steel of saws is of the very best quality and finest temper, and since it is good in the first place it is always good.—New York Morning Telegraph.

Plenty of Excitement.

"Poor laddie," said the lady to the hotel elevator boy, "don't you find this work rather trying and monotonous?"

"No fear, ma'am. I like it. It's full of excitement. First of all, there's always the funny people coming in and out. Then there's other things.

"Only yesterday a man tried to get out before the elevator was down and cracked his skull. Then last week the machine broke, and the thing came straight down from the sixth floor to the bottom, and everybody was hurt 'cept me. This 'ere rope, too, looks a bit weak, but it'll probably last till we get up, though I don't know what we'll do if it don't, cos the engine man is away ill today, and 'is mate's just married, and I'm in charge of everything and I don't know nothing about it. So it ain't really what you could call a dull life, is it?"—New York Globe.

Uses of Troubles.

We shrink instinctively from troubles, as we shrink from hard and painful tasks; we cannot escape the suffering they bring; but we decide whether they shall weaken or strengthen us. It lies with us to receive them as enemies or as friends. They offer us fortitude, patience, courage, strength, growth or cowardice, bitterness, despair; we cannot prevent them from coming to us, but we can decide whether they shall help or hinder us in our life purposes.—Exchange.

New Moral Codes.

Andrew Lang, the Scotch poet, critic and satirist, reserved his most deadly shafts for the founders of new religions and apostles of new moral codes.

Newfangled religions and newfangled moralities he knew must be false, for any apparently novel truth which they contained turned out upon closer examination to be as old as human society itself.

Sure! High Heels Cause Corns But Who Cares Now

Because style decrees that women crowd and buckle up their tender toes in high heel footwear they suffer from corns, then they cut and trim at these painful pests which merely makes the corn grow hard. This suicidal habit may cause lockjaw and women are warned to stop it.

A few drops of a drug called freezone applied directly upon a sore corn gives quick relief and soon the entire corn, root and all, lifts out without pain. Ask the drug store man for a quarter of an ounce of freezone, which costs very little but is sufficient to remove every hard or soft corn or callus from one's feet.

This drug is an ether compound and dries in a moment and simply shrivels up the corn without inflaming or even irritating the surrounding tissue or skin. Clip this out and pin on your wife's dresser.

Clear, Peachy Skin Awaits Anyone Who Drinks Hot Water

Says an inside bath, before breakfast helps us look and feel clean, sweet, fresh.

Sparkling and vivacious—merry, bright, alert—a good, clear skin and a natural, rosy, healthy complexion are assured only by pure blood. If only every man and woman could be induced to adopt the morning inside bath, what a gratifying change would take place. Instead of the thousands of sickly, anaemic-looking men, women and girls, with pasty or muddy complexions; instead of the multitudes of "nerve wrecks," "rundowns," "brain fags" and pessimists we should see a virile, optimistic throng of rosy-cheeked people everywhere.

An inside bath is had by drinking each morning, before breakfast, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash from the stomach, liver, kidneys and ten yards of bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour fermentations and poisons, thus cleansing, sweetening and freshening the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach.

Those subject to sick headache, biliousness, nasty breath, rheumatism, colds; and particulary those who have a pallid, sallow complexion and who are constipated very often, are urged to obtain a quarter pound of limestone phosphate at the drug store which will cost but a trifle, but is sufficient to demonstrate the quick and remarkable change in both health and appearance, awaiting those who practice internal sanitation. We must remember that inside cleanliness is more important than outside, because the skin does not absorb impurities to contaminate the blood while the pores in the thirty feet of bowels do.

Two Fires This Week

What might have proved a bad fire, but for the presence of mind and prompt action, the home of Wm. Smith was saved Monday evening about 7 o'clock. Mr. and Mrs. Smith are having some work done in the lower rooms of the residence and decided to sleep upstairs Monday night, so they lighted an oil heater to warm up the sleeping room. While they were talking with a neighbor smoke was detected and an investigation proved that the oil stove was on fire, the flames reaching almost to the ceiling. Mr. Smith kicked out one of the large windows upstairs, took a piece of carpet and wrapped around the stove and threw it out of doors. He was burned about the hands and arms some. The entire second story was black with smoke but they are very thankful that the house was not burned. The fire department responded quickly but did not make the run completely.

Tuesday noon another call was made and in just a few minutes the fire was extinguished. The call was made from the Grover Curie home on Main street. The kitchen roof caught on fire from a spark and Geo. Milliman was soon on the job with water and when the department arrived but little fire was left. A hole in the roof was made but no fire was found. The damage amounted to $15.00. The fire engine was not used.

Martha Shearer's Life

Given in detail. Came to Indiana in 1867 and located in DeKalb County—Has lived in St. Joe for Twenty-Seven Years—Funeral Held Last Tuesday.

Martha M. Krepps, oldest child of William and Sapphira Krepps was born in Fayette City, Pennsylvania, December 8, 1833. Died in St. Joe, Indiana, March 13, 1917. She grew to womanhood in her native state, and was married to Charles Wilson, June 8, 1853. To this union was born one son, Wm. F. Wilson, of Fayette City, Penn. Her first husband died during the second year of their married life.

She was again married, December 25, 1866, to Israel Shearer, and on the 13th. day of the following January, she came with her husband to Indiana, settling on a farm in Jackson Twp., DeKalb County, where she resided till twenty-seven years ago this March when she came to St. Joe and has since made this her home. To her second marriage two children were born, Ada S. Berry, of Spencerville, and Mary Betz, of St. Joe. Her second husband died Sept. 9, 1881.

Besides her son and two daughters, above named, she leaves two step-sons, Solomon Shearer, of Auburn, Indiana; Daniel Shearer, of Guthrie Center, Iowa; one step-daughter, Margaret Widney, of Dallas, Texas; two sisters, Sapphira C. Davis, of Allegheny, Pa., and Anna Watt, of Pittsburgh, Pa.; 25 grandchildren; 59 great-grandchildren; 5 great-great-grandchildren and other relatives and many friends.

In early life Mrs. Shearer united with the Ev. Lutheran Church and on coming to Indiana she transferred to the church of this Faith at Spencerville, but later united with the Rehobeth Methodist Protestant Church, and on April 5, 1891 she transferred her membership to St. Joe where it remained till she was called from duty to reward.

She was a woman of strang intellect and warm piety and loved her church with more than ordinary fidelity and devotion. Although for the last few years affliction had robbed her of the privilege of church attendance which had been her joy before and suffering had somewhat dimmed her intellectual faculty, but through it all she maintained a strong faith in God and manifested a deep interest in spiritual things and often enquired after the welfare and progress of the church. As a golden and ripened sheaf is gathered by a reaper at harvest, so she, after the many years of ripening experience in Christian service and devotion, fell asleep in Jesus at the age of 83 years, 3 months and 5 days. Funeral services were held from the M. P. Church, Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Rev. J. C. Coons, officiating. Burial in Riverside Cemetery.

Those who attended the funeral from a distant were:—William Wilson, of Fayette City, Pa.; son Fred, of Cleveland, Ohio; Dan Shearer and Steve Keeran, of Guthrie Center, Iowa; Maggie Widney, of Dallas, Texas; Sol Shearer, Charley Rainier and son Arthur, of Auburn; Mrs. Ora Bievley and children, of Ft. Wayne.

The School Activities

About $50 was cleared from the entertainment given Thursday night, and the Auction, Saturday afternoon, of articles made by the Manual Training Class. But very few people really stop to consider the kind of work that is being done in the schools, and when they have an opportunity like this, they can hardly believe. The furniture was fine and showed careful workmanship and finishing. Large crowds were in attendance. The Quaker and Gypsy costumes for the girls, and tambourines cost $15. These will be kept for future entertainments as they expect to make this an annual affair. Miss Shorden's Domestic Science Class cleared about $12 from the sale of ice cream cones, home-made candy, etc.

Heltzel Has Sold Out

A card from D. P. Heltzel, former pastor of the Lutheran Church at St. Joe and Spencerville, of Collinsville, Ohio, stating that he had sold his farm near Green Fork, Ind., and had moved to the above town. He stated that he had been confined to his bed with lagrippe. Regards to all their friends.

For the Drinking Fountain

The play that will be staged April 6, by the citizens of St. Joe with a number of the ladies assisting, is under way in fine shape. The receipts of their efforts will be used in installing a drinking fountain in condection with the town pump, making a perfectly sanitary condition, and besides complying with the regulations of the State Board. The move is a good one and will receive the support of everyone. The bills will be circulated in a few days giving full information of the play. 20 cents will be charged.

CZAR ABDICATES AFTER BIG REVOLT; MONARCHY ENDS

Nicholas Gives Up Throne Both for Himself and the Czarevitch.

RUSSIA IS NOW A REPUBLIC

Simultaneous Uprisings in Petrograd and Moscow—Empress Placed Under Guard — Emperor Heeds Demand to Quit—Soldiers Join Revolutionists and Two Statesmen Are Slain.

Petrograd, March 19.—Czar Nicholas II has abdicated the throne of Russia, both for himself and the twelve-year-old czarevitch. Grand Duke Michael Alexandrovitch, his brother, who had been decided upon originally to be regent, also has abdicated.

This ends the dynasty of the Romanoffs.

Russia now is virtually a republic.

Monarchy Is Abolished.

The executive committee of the duma issued a manifesto stating that the government of Russia will be handled for three months by a committee of twelve. For the time being, it is stated, the monarchy has been abolished. Councils of nobility in fifteen provinces have indorsed the revolutionary government.

Corrupt Ministry Ousted.

The Russian ministry, charged with corruption and incompetence, has been swept out of office.

One minister, Alexander Protopopoff, head of the interior department, is reported to have been killed, and the other ministers, as well as the president of the imperial council, are under arrest.

A new national cabinet is announced, with Prince Lvoff as president of the council and premier, and the other offices held by the men who are close to the Russian people.

No Peace Movement.

The duma joined hands in the revolt which aimed at the reactionary conduct of the war and the ineffective distribution of food. Its success means a more aggressive part in the war and is said to put an end to German hopes for a separate peace with Russia.

The British and French ambassadors here already have established official business relations with the new cabinet and with the executive committee named by the duma. It was this committee that forced the czar's abdication.

Czar on Way From Front.

London, March 19.—A Reuter dispatch from Petrograd says that the emperor is expected to arrive at the Tsarskoe-Selo palace and that several regiments with artillery are hastening to the same place.

The Grand Duke Nicholas is reported to have reached the Russian capital. The dispatch says that he will probably take command of the troops.

According to information received here the Russian people have been most distrustful during recent events of the personal influence of Empress Alexandra. She was supposed to exercise the greatest influence over Emperor Nicholas.

The Empress Alexandra, before her marriage to the emperor of Russia in 1894, was the German Princess Alix of Hesse-Darmstadt.

A popular revolution has been successful and the government of Russia rests temporarily with a self-appointed committee of the duma.

After three days of battle, in which the majority of the 30,000 troops in Petrograd mutinied and supported the revolutionists, calm has returned.

The czar's abdication was in compliance with the urgent demand of the committee of the duma, which notified him that upon his assent depended the fate of the dynasty.

Troops Back the Duma.

Telegraphing from Petrograd Wednesday, Reuter's correspondent says Kronstadt, the fortress and great naval station at the head of the Gulf of Finland, 20 miles west of Petrograd, has joined the revolutionary movement. Two deputies, Pepelauff and Taskine, on instructions from the duma committee, proceeded to Kronstadt, where the troops placed themselves at the disposal of the duma.

The Copenhagen Ekstrabladet reports that the Russian consul in Haparanda, Sweden, says that former Premier Sturmer and Minister of the Interior Protopopoff were killed in Petrograd. Both were charged with pro-German sympathies.

New Cabinet Announced.

A new national cabinet is announced, with Prince Lvoff as president of the council and premier, and the other offices held by the men who are close to the Russian people.

The members of the new national cabinet are announced as follows:

Premier, President of the Council and Minister of the Interior—Prince Georges E. Lvoff.

Foreign Minister—Prof. Paul N. Milioukoff.

Minister of Public Instruction—Professor Manuiloff of Moscow university.

Minister of War and Navy, ad interim—A. J. Guchkoff, formerly president of the duma.

Minister of Agriculture—M. Ichingareff, deputy from Petrograd.

Minister of Finance—M. Tereschtenko, deputy from Kiev.

Minister of Justice—Deputy Kerenski of Saratoff.

Minister of Communications—N. V. Nekrasoff, vice president of the duma.

Controller of State—M. Godneff, deputy from Kazan.

Control Is Complete.

That control by the new government is complete is undoubted. Telegrams from generals commanding at the various fronts have displayed an astonishing unanimity of support of the new order.

Sunday it broke forth in flame. Panic-stricken, the government ordered the mounted patrols to fire on the people. The patrols refused, and a battle between the police and the troops followed, regiment after regiment joining the revolutionists, seizing and throwing the heads of the secret police into prison.

For three days open battle raged in the streets of Petrograd. Strikes in factories and on street cars were called in sympathy with the revolution.

Wednesday the week's nightmare of revolution ended more suddenly than it had begun. Planks were pulled from windows, doors were unbarred, factories, stores and banks reopened.

500 Slain in Revolt.

The only evidence that a revolution had been fought and won was the smoldering ruins of a few public buildings. The cost in life is unknown. It is believed, however, that it did not exceed 500.

Magical and sudden as was the transition from the old to the new, it is believed here that its results will be almost immediately visible in the institution by the new Russia of a more vigorous and efficient prosecution of the war against Germany.

The duma telegraphed the principal generals at the front to use their influence with Emperor Nicholas in support of the duma's appeal for a popular government, says Reuter's Petrograd correspondent.

General Brussiloff, commander in chief of the armies on the southwestern front, replied:

"Your telegram received. I have fulfilled my duty to my emperor and my country."

Gen. Nicholas V. Ruzsky, member of the supreme military council, replied:

"I have carried out your request."

M. Rodzianko, president of the duma, sent the following telegram to Emperor Nicholas:

"The situation is becoming worse. Measures must be taken immediately, for tomorrow it may be too late. The hour has arrived when the fate of the country and of the dynasty is being decided."

M. Chtchegiovitoff, president of the council of empire, was arrested in his home and temporarily held in the ministerial room of the duma.

The revolution, which evidently was carefully prepared, broke out simultaneously in Petrograd and Moscow. The garrisons, which obeyed the instructions of the revolutionaries, immediately took possession of these cities after comparatively little fighting and equally small amount of destruction of property.

Petrograd Bridge Blown Up.

In Petrograd one bridge was blown up. Strict military rule prevails and the army has the situation so well in hand that it is not expected adherents of the late government will be able to offer any serious resistance, even in remote provinces.

After receiving word of the revolution, it is reported, Emperor Nicholas returned to the palace, where he arrived on Wednesday.

The following details of the revolution have been given to the press from a source usually well informed on Russian affairs:

"The soldiers refused to act against the crowd which started trouble when it heard of the ukase issued by Emperor Nicholas proroguing the duma. On Sunday the committee which had met to discuss the food situation was partly transformed into a provisional government under the presidency of President Rodzianko of the duma and included representatives of the duma council of the empire and of the municipality. The garrison agreed to support the provisional government."

The proclamation by the military governor in Petrograd forbidding any street assemblages and declaring that any disorders would be ruthlessly suppressed made it apparent that affairs were graver than the dispatches allowed by the Russian censorship would indicate.

EAGER TO PROSECUTE WAR

English Correspondent Asserts That All Classes of Russians Favor Continuation of Hostilities.

London, March 19.—Reuter's Petrograd correspondent sent the following dispatch concerning the Russian revolution under date of March 14:

"Your correspondent has been in the streets both night and day for the last three days. He has seen long lines of hungry men, women and children, and has seen the wanton firing of rifles and machine guns, and civil war in the main thoroughfares, but has not heard a single word against war.

"A shortage of food, the lack of organization and the neglect of the most elementary precautions are popularly ascribed to German influences. This is a word of provocation on every lip.

"The killing of Rasputin was the match that set fire to the vast heap of patriotic determination that Russia would deserve well of her allies if she would give herself the chance.

GOVERNOR SPEAKS FOR CONSTITUTION

Tells Why Radical Changes in Constitution of State Should Be Made.

POINTS OUT PRESENT ABUSES

Begins Campaign of Education to Arouse People of State to Opportunities of Convention in September.

Indianapolis.—In a speech at Fort Wayne on the coming constitutional convention, Governor Goodrich began his campaign of education in behalf of the convention in September. He pointed out the need of a budget system, and called attention to certain abuses which appear in the new appropriation measure because his advice was not followed and which he could not correct, for the present law does not allow him to veto certain items.

He told of the senate committee restoring an item of $5,000 for a former official when the house had cut it out, and related that at the suggestion of a clerk in one of the state offices, unknown to the holders of the office, one new office at $3,000 a year had been created and three salaries raised without reason. He said he had to veto the whole bill, making an extra session necessary, or approve the bill, and so the wrong to the people is now in the law. He urged that authority be given the governor to veto items and be held responsible.

Centralization of Power.

"The inevitable tendency of our own time is away from this diffusion of power, the distribution of responsibility and toward the centralization of power in the hands of an executive, responsible directly to the people who selected him.

"We are realizing more and more that while a democracy is of enormous value, because it excites a lively interest among the people in their government and to that extent increases the general intelligence, yet in the past it has been notoriously inefficient because of the fact that under our constitution the executive charged with the administration of affairs has had but little power over the manner of the expenditure of public money or the direction of ordinary business affairs of the state."

Changes in Taxing Methods.

Governor Goodrich, at a meeting with members of the state board of tax commissioners, made suggestions which resulted in drastic changes in methods of procedure of county boards of review throughout the state with regard to the gathering of information on which the valuation for taxation purposes of the corporations of the state is based.

When the governor proposed the enactment of an excise tax law to the recent legislature he used as an argument for the passage of the bill the statement that the corporations of the state of Indiana are not bearing their just proportion of the taxes and he cited numerous instances, publicly and privately, of the "tax-dodging" of corporations of all classes throughout the state.

Revision of Forms.

His suggestions to the state board resulted in orders going out from that board at once for a sweeping revision of the blank forms on which corporations make their tax returns to the county boards of review. New blanks are to be printed at once, according to members of the board, and these are to be sent to the county boards of review for distribution to the corporations of the state, so that the returns for taxes this year may come on the revised forms.

The governor's suggestions all went to the point of compelling the corporations to swear to answers to questions concerning the values in their properties by which the taxing officials will be able to determine much more nearly the actual values of the properties concerned. To facilitate this some of the questions formerly appearing in the blanks have been ordered stricken out and additional questions will be asked.

Must Swear to Answers.

On the new blanks the corporation managers must swear to answers to such questions as those involving the following:

(a) The total amount of common stock issued by the company.

(b) The total amount of preferred stock issued.

(c) The total amount of dividends paid during the year ending March 1, 1917.

(d) The total amount of surplus on hand March 1, 1917.

The new forms will be sent to every corporation which is valued for taxation purposes by the county boards of review.

State Fair Plan Fails.

Legislation proposing to convert the state board of agriculture from a semi-private institution into a state institution came to naught when Governor Goodrich refused to receive a bill. It was proposed to have the members of the state board appointed by the governor upon the recommendation of the State Fair association; to have the board turn over the state fair grounds, valued at $1,000,000, to the state and to have the state assume the present indebtedness of about one hundred and seventy thousand dollars.

City Controller Holds Bonds.

The right of the city controller to the custody of all guaranteed bonds and funds deposited with the board of public works by contractors was upheld by Judge Clifford, superior court. The opinion was handed down in deciding the merits of a suit filed some time ago by Edward G. Sourbier, treasurer of Marion county, against Mayor Bell, Reginald H. Sullivan, city controller; members of the board of public works, and the Marion County Construction company.

The complaint was based on the contention that Sourbier as ex-officio city treasurer was entitled to possession of street improvement bonds aggregating $410,000 and cash amounting to $95,000; that the defendants would in the future receive similar deposits from time to time, all of which they would hold and continue to hold, although without right, as against the demand of the plaintiff, in his capacity of ex-officio city treasurer.

Opinion of Court.

The court's opinion, in part follows:

"A study of the allegations of the complaint discloses:

"First, that there is no clear and specific legal right existing in the plaintiff to the funds in question.

"Second, that there is no duty resting upon the city officials, defendants, to surrender the bonds and moneys in question to the plaintiff, specifically enjoined by law, or which results from their office or trust.

"Third, that the plaintiff has no direct interest in the action which he seeks to have enforced, nor would any benefit accrue to him from its performance.

"It is doubtful if there is any legal right in the plaintiff to the moneys and bonds in question. But, if there is such legal right, it arises out of the contractural relation existing between those performing public contracts and the board of public works as representative and agent of the city of Indianapolis. The specifications set out in the complaint are not statutory. They are simply the terms upon which bids are accepted and have their binding force by virtue of the contract for the improvement subsequently entered into.

Not as Public Funds.

"These moneys and bonds, if turned over to the plaintiff, would not be turned over as public funds and he could not deposit them as such in any bank, trust company or public depository without being in danger of violating the spirit, if not the letter, of the decision rendered by Judge Anderson in the United States court in the case of the Barber Asphalt Paving company vs. Robinson, treasurer, in 1908, in which Robinson, as treasurer of the city of Indianapolis, and his successor or successors in office were perpetually enjoined from depositing in any public depository moneys or funds received on account of special assessments made by the city of Indianapolis.

"The specifications set out in the complaint show clearly that this fund, by their express terms, is to remain in the hands of the controller for a specific purpose provided by the contract."

Indiana Artists' Exhibit.

The tenth annual exhibition of works of art by Indiana artists at the Herron Art Institute shows an advance over previous exhibits, both as to quality and manner of hanging pictures and placing sculptural work.

The jury is elected by ballot by the artists themselves. This year the list is Otto Stark, chairman; Wayman Adams, Simon Baus, William Forsythe, T. C. Steele, C. A. Wheeler and Rena T. Kohlmann.

Generous Prizes Offered.

The Holcomb prize will be awarded this year for the third time. This prize, offered by J. I. Holcomb, consists of $100, and is given to a work of special excellence. The only restriction for this prize is that the recipient must have legal residence in Indiana. The jury of award consists of Harold H. Brown, Caroline Marmon and John F. Stacey. There is another prize of $100, known as the Art Association's prize, to be given to an Indiana artist not now represented in the permanent collection. The jury committee recommends the three best paintings from those eligible for this prize. The final decision is made by the fine arts committee, and upon payment of the amount of the prize the painting becomes the property of the Art association. Honorable mention is awarded to each of the other two. The jury committee recommends this year J. E. Bundy's "Wane of Winter;" C. A. Wheeler's "Lone Survivor," and S. P. Baus' "Still Life."

Find Place for Collicott.

The Indianapolis public school controversy, resulting from an announcement of the city school commissioners that they would not re-employ J. G. Collicott superintendent when his term expires April 8, was cleared considerably with an announcement from Horace Ellis, the new state superintendent of public instruction, that he has appointed Mr. Collicott to become a deputy state superintendent in charge of the vocational education department.

Breaks Record as Superintendent.

Breaking all records in length of service in the office of state superintendent of public instruction, Charles A. Greathouse has retired from that office at the end of his third two-year term. He was appointed by Thomas R. Marshall, then governor, to fill out the unexpired term of Robert J. Aley, who retired in 1910, to become head of the University of Maine and has, therefore, had six years on his own elections and five months of Aley's term. Only two others have enjoyed six-year term.

PAYS FOR 160 ACRES OF LAND

From the Crop of Wheat on 53 Acres in Western Canada.

This story of paying for your land out of one year's crop is fully authenticated by a great many farmers in Western Canada.

And now, all that the farmer makes is velvet and you find him going more extensively into stock raising, for all authorities agree that in a short time there will be a demand for live stock, such as even will tax the vast resources of Western Canada. They will go into stock raising because of the adaptability of the country to provide food and fodder without feeding grain if necessary. They will go into stock and improve their places. They will install steam and heating plants—in fact, many are now doing it. They will have automobiles, in fact in many districts there is not a farmer but has one. They will beautify their homes and erect fine barns until the whole country will be as attractive as many of the counties in the best states in the Union. But we started out to tell you of the farmer who paid for 160 acres of land from the crop of wheat off of 53 acres. The Holden district on the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific does not appear to the ordinary observer to be any better than many other districts along that line, and probably isn't. It was in this district that John Larcome, a settler, purchased in 1915 160 acres of raw prairie land. He broke and seeded 53 acres. His crop turned out well, and he sold the greater portion of it for $2,970. His land cost him $16.50 per acre, or $2,640. So that the crop from the 53 acres paid for the land and left a balance of over $300, which with part of the crop left over would just pay for the cost of operation. This is not really an unusual case, hundreds of other farmers in Alberta and Saskatchewan having been able to do the same.

Sales of land are being reported from many districts in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta at good prices. And values are yet low, but with the flow of any value that will take place after the war, no doubt they will be considerably increased. The homesteads in the Park sections which are to be had actually free are having the attention of a good class of settlers, who want to go into mixed farming.—Advertisement.

Very Considerate.

"Have you ever traveled sixty miles an hour in your automobile?"

"No," replied the cautious motorist. "In our part of the country passenger trains seldom go faster than forty miles an hour and I don't want to bring our railroads into disrepute."

KAZAN

By
James Oliver Curwood

Copyright by the Bobbs-Merrill Company.

BECAUSE OF KAZAN'S DEVOTION TO HIS NEW MISTRESS, HE IS GIVEN A FRIGHTFUL AND UNJUST BEATING.

Kazan is a huge and vicious Alaskan sledge dog, one-quarter gray wolf. He saves his master's life and is taken along when the master goes to civilization to meet his bride and return with her to the frozen country. Even the master is afraid to touch the dog, but Isobel, Kazan's new mistress, wins his instant devotion. On the way northward McCready, a dog-team driver, joins the party and immediately Kazan tries to attack him. Even Isobel finds it hard to quiet the dog.

Kazan paid no attention to him. Another form had approached out of the night, and stood now in the circle of illumination made by the lanterns. It was McCready, who was to accompany Thorpe and his young wife back to the Red River camp, where Thorpe was in charge of the building of the new Transcontinental. The man was straight, powerfully built and clean-shaven. His jaw was so square that it was brutal, and there was a glow in his eyes that was almost like the passion in Kazan's as he looked at Isobel. McCready shifted his gaze, and instantly her hand fell on Kazan's head. For the first time the dog did not seem to feel her touch. He still snarled at McCready, the rumbling menace in his throat growing deeper. Thorpe's wife tugged at the chain.

"Down, Kazan—down!" she commanded.

At the sound of her voice he relaxed.

"Down!' she repeated, and her free hand fell on his head again. He slunk to her feet. But his lips were still drawn back. Thorpe was watching him. He wondered at the deadly venom that shot from the wolfish eyes, and looked at McCready. The big guide had uncoiled his long dog-whip. A strange look had come into his face. He was staring hard at Kazan. Suddenly he leaned forward, with both hands on his knees, and for a tense moment or two he seemed to forget that Isobel Thorpe's wonderful blue eyes were looking at him.

"Hoo-koosh, Pedro—charge!"

That one word—charge—was taught only to the dogs in the service of the Northwest Mounted police. Kazan did not move. McCready straightened, and, quick as a shot, sent the long lash of his whip curling out into the night with a crack like a pistol report.

"Charge, Pedro—charge!"

The rumble in Kazan's throat deepened to a snarling growl, but not a muscle of his body moved. McCready turned to Thorpe.

"I could have sworn that I knew that dog," he said. "If it's Pedro, he's bad!"

Thorpe was taking the chain. Only the girl saw the look that came for an instant into McCready's face. It made her shiver. A few minutes before, when the train first stopped at Les Pas, she had offered her hand to this man, and she had seen the same thing then. But even as she shuddered she recalled the many things her husband had told her of the forest people. She had grown to love them, to admire their big, rough manhood and loyal hearts, before he had brought her among them; and suddenly she smiled at McCready, struggling to overcome that thrill of fear and dislike.

"He doesn't like you," she laughed at him softly. "Won't you make friends with him?"

She drew Kazan toward him, with Thorpe holding the end of the chain. McCready came to her side as she bent over the dog. His back was to Thorpe as he hunched down. Isobel's bowed head was within a foot of his face. He could see the glow in her cheek and the pouting curve of her mouth as she quieted the low rumbling in Kazan's throat. Thorpe stood ready to pull back on the chain, but for a moment McCready was between him and his wife, and he could not see McCready's face. The man's eyes were not on Kazan. He was staring at the girl.

"You're brave," he said. "I don't dare do that. He would take off my hand!"

He took the lantern from Thorpe and led the way to a narrow snow-path branching off from the track. Hidden back in the thick spruce was the camp that Thorpe had left a fortnight before. There were two tents there now in place of the one that he and his guide had used. A big fire was burning in front of them. Close to the fire was a long sledge, and fastened to trees just within the outer circle of firelight Kazan saw the shadowy forms and gleaming eyes of his teammates. He stood stiff and motionless while Thorpe fastened him to a sledge. Once more he was back in his forests—and in command. His mistress was laughing and clapping her hands delightedly in the excitement of the strange and wonderful life of which she had now become a part. Thorpe had thrown back the flap of their tent, and she was entering ahead of him. She did not look back. She spoke no word to him. He whined, and turned his red eyes on McCready.

In the tent Thorpe was saying:

"I'm sorry old Jackpine wouldn't go back with us, Issy. He drove me down, but for love or money I couldn't get him to return. He's a Mission Indian, and I'd give a month's salary to have you see him handle the dogs. I'm not sure about this man McCready. He's a queer chap, the company's agent here tells me, and knows the woods like a book. But dogs don't like a stranger. Kazan isn't going to take to him worth a cent!"

Kazan heard the girl's voice, and stood rigid and motionless listening to it. He did not hear or see McCready when he came up stealthily behind him. The man's voice came as suddenly as a shot at his heels.

"Pedro!"

In an instant Kazan cringed as if touched by a lash.

"Got you that time—didn't I, you old devil!" whispered McCready, his face strangely pale in the firelight. "Changed your name, eh? But I got you—didn't I?"

CHAPTER III.

McCready Pays The Debt.

For a long time after he had uttered those words McCready sat in silence beside the fire. Only for a moment or two at a time did his eyes leave Kazan. After a little, when he was sure that Thorpe and Isobel had retired for the night, he went into his own tent and returned with a flask of whisky. During the next half-hour he drank frequently. Then he went over and sat on the edge of the sledge, just beyond the reach of Kazan's chain.

"Got you, didn't I?" he repeated, the effect of the liquor beginning to show in the glitter of his eyes. "Wonder who changed your name, Pedro. And how did he come by you? Ho, ho, if you could only talk—"

They heard Thorpe's voice inside the tent. It was followed by a low, girlish peal of laughter, and McCready jerked himself erect. His face blazed suddenly red, and he rose to his feet, dropping the flask in his coat pocket. Walking around the fire, he tiptoed cautiously to the shadow of a tree close to the tent and stood there for many minutes listening. His eyes burned with a fiery madness when he returned to the sledge and Kazan. It was midnight before he went into his own tent.

In the warmth of the fire Kazan's eyes slowly closed. He slumbered uneasily, and his brain was filled with troubled pictures. At times he was fighting, and his jaws snapped. At others he was straining at the end of his chain, with McCready or his mistress just out of reach. And then the picture changed. He was running at the head of a splendid team—six dogs of the Royal Northwest Mounted police—and his master was calling him Pedro! The scene shifted. They were in camp. His master was young and smooth-faced, and he helped from the sledge another man whose hands were fastened in front of him by curious black rings. Again it was later—and he was lying before a great fire. His master was sitting opposite him, with his back to a tent, and as he looked, there came out of the tent the man with the black rings—only now the rings were gone and his hands were free, and in one of them he carried a heavy club. He heard the terrible blow of the club as it fell on his master's head—and the sound of it aroused him from his restless sleep.

He sprang to his feet, his spine stiffening and a snarl in his throat. The fire had died down, and the camp was in the darker gloom that precedes dawn. Through that gloom Kazan saw McCready. Again he was standing close to the tent of his mistress, and he knew now that this was the man who had worn the black iron rings, and that it was he who had beaten him with whip and club for many long days after he had killed his master. McCready heard the menace in his throat and came back quickly to the fire. He began to whistle and draw the half-burned logs together, and as the fire blazed up afresh he shouted to awaken Thorpe and Isobel. In a few minutes Thorpe appeared at the tent-flap and his wife followed him out. Her loose hair rippled in billows of gold about her shoulders, and she sat down on the sledge, close to Kazan, and began brushing it. McCready came up behind her and fumbled among the packages on the sledge. As if by accident, one of his hands buried itself for an instant in the rich tresses that flowed down her back. She did not at first feel the caressing touch of his fingers, and Thorpe's back was toward them.

Only Kazan saw the stealthy movement of the hand, the fondling clutch of the fingers in her hair, and the mad passion burning in the eyes of the man. Quicker than a lynx, the dog had leaped the length of his chain across the sledge. McCready sprang back just in time, and as Kazan reached the end of his chain he was jerked back so that his body struck sidewise against the girl. Thorpe had turned in time to see the end of the leap. He believed that Kazan had sprung at Isobel, and in his horror no word or cry escaped his lips as he dragged her from where she had half fallen over the sledge. He saw that she was not hurt, and he reached for his revolver. It was in his holster in the tent. At his feet was McCready's whip, and in the passion of the moment he seized it and sprang upon Kazan. The dog crouched in the snow. He made no move to escape or to attack. Only once in his life could he remember having received a beating like that which Thorpe inflicted upon him now. But not a whimper or a growl escaped him.

And then, suddenly, his mistress ran forward and caught the whip poised above Thorpe's head.

"Not another blow!" she cried, and something in her voice held him from striking. McCready did not hear what she said then, but a strange look came into Thorpe's eyes, and without a word he followed his wife into their tent.

"Kazan did not leap at me," she whispered, and she was trembling with a sudden excitement. Her face was deathly white. "That man was behind me," she went on, clutching her husband by the arm. "I felt him touch me—and then Kazan sprang. He wouldn't bite me. It's the man! There's something—wrong—"

She was almost sobbing, and Thorpe drew her close in his arms.

"I hadn't thought before—but it's strange," he said. "Didn't McCready say something about knowing the dog? It's possible. Perhaps he's had Kazan before and abused him in a way that the dog has not forgotten. Tomorrow I'll find out. But until I know—will you promise to keep away from Kazan?"

Isobel gave the promise. When they came out from the tent Kazan lifted his great head. The stinging lash had closed one of his eyes and his mouth was dripping blood. Isobel gave a low sob, but did not go near him. Half blinded, he knew that his mistress had stopped his punishment, and he whined softly, and wagged his thick tail in the snow.

Never had he felt so miserable as through the long hard hours of the day that followed, when he broke the trail for his team-mates into the North. One of his eyes was closed and filled with stinging fire, and his body was sore from the blows of the caribou lash. But it was not physical pain that gave the sullen droop to his head and robbed his body of that keen quick alertness of the lead-dog—the commander of his mates. It was his spirit. For the first time in his life, it was broken. McCready had beaten him—long ago; his master had beaten him; and during all this day their voices were fierce and vengeful in his ears. But it was his mistress who hurt him most. She held aloof from him, always beyond the reach of his leash; and when they stopped to rest, and again in camp, she looked at him with strange and wondering eyes, and did not speak. She, too, was ready to beat him. He believed that, and that night he lurked in one of the deepest shadows about the campfire and grieved alone. None knew that it was grief—unless it was the girl. She did not move toward him. She did not speak to him. But she watched him closely—and studied him hardest when he was looking at McCready.

The devil in McCready gets the upper hand once too often and McCready pays the penalty. Big developments come in the next installment.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Fastidious Fox.

Waldemar Eltingon of New York recently presented a live silver fox to the Zoological society of St. Louis. The animal is valued at $550. The gift was hurriedly accepted with profuse expressions of thanks which are now in a fair way to be reconsidered and revised. The fox refuses to eat ordinary food and rejects practically everything offered it except fresh eggs. And fresh eggs are 60 cents a dozen in St. Louis, scarce and apparently looking up.

Wanted Joy Distributed.

Marion was given a beautiful ring Christmas eve. She was overjoyed, but changed it from one finger to the other all evening. No one noticed it that evening, but she kept it up the next morning. Her mother, fearing Marion would lose the ring, said: "Why don't you put your ring on one finger and keep it there, Marion?" "Well, I don't like to be mean. When I keep it on one finger I pity the others."

Varying Lengths of Life.

While crabs are known to have lived for half a century, the average life of the oyster is but four years. Frogs die sooner than toads, as the latter may live for 36 years.

TO CONDUCT NOTABLE WORK

Dr. Donald B. Armstrong, who has been selected by the National Tuberculosis association to conduct the "Framingham experiment," is a Pennsylvanian from Easton, with the degrees, Ph. B., M. D., M. A., and M. S., the last named conferred on him by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1913 for special studies in biology and public health. He is a member of the half dozen national health and medical associations, and has been particularly prominent in New York city in public health work, largely in connection with the Association for the Improvement of the Condition of the Poor.

He has been member or chairman of at least a dozen municipal committees touching food or health matters and lecturer in three of the great colleges of the metropolis. He has worked in co-operation with the United States public health service, the New York state health department and associations in Connecticut and Rhode Island, and has published more than 30 health articles in medical and sanitation magazines.

NESBIT AND HIS POEM

Has Wilbur D. Nesbit written a new national anthem in his poem, "Your Flag and My Flag?" The simple, stirring verses are now sweeping the country, and one enthusiastic admirer pronounces them the best expression of American sentiment since Drake wrote his famous poem beginning "When Freedom from her mountain height." Still others declare the song to be more American in its expression and more in tune with national thought of today than "The Star-Spangled Banner," or even "America." In some respects the words of the former might be considered out of date. Nesbit's poem is for all time.

Without entering into a discussion of its merits as compared with other national songs and poems, it is interesting to note that no poem published in recent years has so thoroughly taken hold of the American people. The first stanza may be quoted:

> "Your flag and my flag—
> And how it flies today
> In your land and my land
> And half a world away!
> Rose-red and blood-red
> The stripes forever gleam;
> Snow-white and soul-white—
> The good forefathers' dream.
> Sky-blue and true-blue, with stars to gleam aright—
> The gloried guidon of the day, a shelter through the night."

Mr. Nesbit for years was known as one of America's foremost magazine and newspaper writers.

HE COMES FROM MEXICO

© International Film Service

The new Mexican ambassador to the United States, Ygnacio Bonillas, seems likely to fill a vacancy in Washington's diplomatic blue book left by the recall of Count von Bernstorff.

Both men have American wives, both speak perfect English and both are broad men of the world. But here the parallel is broken.

Count von Bernstorff was an aristocrat to his finger tips. Senior Bonillas is a democrat with the smallest "d," willing to go the limit in taking from the landed Mexican classes to help the peon.

Count von Bernstorff liked the newspaper men, and was the most popular diplomat in Washington among them. Senor Bonillas, according to newspaper men who have encountered him, regards both the newspaper and the newspaper man as fifth wheels.

All who know the Mexican ambassador agree that he is a charming, genial man, thoroughly educated along practical lines—he was a surveyor before he entered Carranza's cabinet—and yet enough of a dreamer and theorist to be one of the closest men in Carranza's councils

IF BACK HURTS USE SALTS FOR KIDNEYS

Eat less meat if Kidneys feel like lead or Bladder bothers you—Meat forms uric acid.

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean, and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity. It also neutralizes the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is harmless; inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious complications.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

LISTEN TO THIS! SAYS CORNS LIFT RIGHT OUT NOW

You reckless men and women who are pestered with corns and who have at least once a week invited an awful death from lockjaw or blood poison are now told by a Cincinnati authority to use a drug called freezone, which the moment a few drops are applied to any corn, the soreness is relieved and soon the entire corn, root and all, lifts out with the fingers.

It is a sticky ether compound which dries the moment it is applied and simply shrivels the corn without inflaming or even irritating the surrounding tissue or skin. It is claimed that a quarter of an ounce of freezone will cost very little at any of the drug stores, but is sufficient to rid one's feet of every hard or soft corn or callus.

You are further warned that cutting at a corn is a suicidal habit.

DARKEN GRAY HAIR, LOOK YOUNG, PRETTY

Sage Tea and Sulphur Darkens So Naturally that Nobody can tell.

Hair that loses its color and lustre, or when it fades, turns gray, dull and lifeless, is caused by a lack of sulphur in the hair. Our grandmother made up a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to keep her locks dark and beautiful, and thousands of women and men who value that even color, that beautiful dark shade of hair which is so attractive, use only this old-time recipe.

Nowadays we get this famous mixture improved by the addition of other ingredients by asking at any drug store for a 50-cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," which darkens the hair so naturally, so evenly, that nobody can possibly tell it has been applied. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also brings back the gloss and lustre and gives it an appearance of abundance.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite to impart color and a youthful appearance to the hair. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

Look and Feel Clean, Sweet and Fresh Every Day

Drink a glass of real hot water before breakfast to wash out poisons.

Life is not merely to live, but to live well, eat well, digest well, work well, sleep well, look well. What a glorious condition to attain, and yet how very easy it is if one will only adopt the morning inside bath.

Folks who are accustomed to feel dull and heavy when they arise, splitting headache, stuffy from a cold, foul tongue, nasty breath, acid stomach, can, instead, feel as fresh as a daisy by opening the sluices of the system each morning and flushing out the whole of the internal poisonous stagnant matter.

Everyone, whether ailing, sick or well, should, each morning, before breakfast, drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour bile and poisonous toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach. The action of hot water and limestone phosphate on an empty stomach is wonderfully invigorating. It cleans out all the sour fermentations, gases, waste and acidity and gives one a splendid appetite for breakfast. While you are enjoying your breakfast the water and phosphate is quietly extracting a large volume of water from the blood and getting ready for a thorough flushing of all the inside organs.

The millions of people who are bothered with constipation, bilious spells, stomach trouble, rheumatism; others who have sallow skins, blood disorders and sickly complexions are urged to get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from the drug store which will cost very little, but is sufficient to make anyone a pronounced crank on the subject of internal sanitation.

COULD NOT EXPECT MORE

Two Years Illness Cured by Glando The Great Gland Tonic.

Mrs. Susan B. Taylor, 348 S. Williams St., Paulding, Ohio, said: "Two years ago I had a general break-down. I was nervous, languid, and hardly able to drag around. My liver and kidneys were sluggish and my complexion sallow. I felt sleepy and drowsy most all day, yet I did not sleep well at night. My heart fluttered terribly at times. I was in this miserable condition two years. A friend persuaded me to try Glando Tonic. The first treatment helped me. I am taking the sixth treatment and am feeling so well that I gladly recommend Glando Tonic to any one who suffers as I did."

Nearly every case of poor health is due to inactivity of the liver, kidneys and other glands. There is enough poison produced in the body every day to cause poor health if it is not eliminated. This poison can be removed only by keeping the glands in a good working condition. Some of the most common symptoms of inactive ganlds are headache, dizziness, indigestion, constipation, backache, pain or ache under the shoulder blade, biliousness, tonsilitis and quinsy. These conditions can be most quickly relieved by using Glando the Great Gland Tonic. It restores the glands to action, removes the impurities and builds up the entire system. Sold only in 50-cent treatments and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Manufactured by the Gland Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Remarkable Success of Talented Physician in the Treatment of Chronic Diseases

Offer Services Free of Charge

The United Doctors Specialist, licensed by the State of Indiana, for the treatment of all diseases, including deformities, nervous and chronic diseases of men, women and children, offer to all who call on this trip, consultation, examination, advice free, making no charge whatever, except the actual cost of treatment. All that is asked in return for these valuable services is that every person treated will state the result obtained to their friends and thus prove to the sick and afflicted in every city and locality, that at last treatments have been discovered that are reasonably sure and certain in their effect.

The United Doctors are experts in the treatment of chronic diseases and so great and wonderful have been their results that in many cases it is hard to find the dividing line between skill and miracle.

Diseases of the stomach, intestines, liver, blood, skin, nerves, heart, spleen, rheumatism, sciatica, tapeworm, leg ulcers, weak lungs and those afflicted with long-standing, deep seated, chronic diseases, that have baffled the skill of the family physician, should not fail to call. Deafness often has been cured in sixty days.

According to their system no more operation for appendicitis, gall stones, tumors, goiter, piles, etc., as all cases accepted will be treated without operation or hypodermic injection, as they were among the first in America to earn the name of "Bloodless Surgeons," by doing away with the knife with blood and with all pain in the successful treatment of these dangerous diseases.

No matter what your ailment may be, no matter what others may have told you, no matter what experience you may have had with other physicians, it will be to your advantage to see them at once. Have it forever settled in your mind. If your case is incurable they will give you such advice as may relieve and stay the disease. Do not put off this duty you owe yourself or friends or relatives who are suffering because of your sickness, as a visit at this time may help you.

Worn-out and run-down men or women, no matter what your ailment may be, call, it costs you nothing.

Remember, this free offer is for this visit only.

Married ladies come with their husbands and minors with their parents.

Died of Premature Old Age!

(BY V. M. PIERCE, M. D.)

How many times we hear of comparatively young persons passing away when they should have lived to be 70 or 80 years of age. This fatal work is usually attributed to the kidneys, as, when the kidneys degenerate, it causes auto-intoxication. The more injurious the poisons passing thru the kidneys, the quicker will those noble organs be degenerated, and the sooner they decay.

To prevent premature old age and promote long life, lighten the work of the kidneys by drinking plenty of pure water all day long, and occasionally taking Anuric (double strength) before meals. This can be obtained at drug stores. Anuric will overcome such conditions as rheumatism, dropsical swellings, cold extremities, scalding and burning urine and sleeplessness due to constant arising.

BEAUTY FROM PURER BLOOD

Fort Wayne, Ind.—"When I was a girl I became all run-down, weak and nervous and my stomach was in very bad shape—a gastric condition. My blood was very bad, and I broke out in sores. This was in the spring of the year. I tried medicines with no results at all. A friend told me of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery so I began its use at once and it soon cured me of my stomach trouble, cleared up my blood and left me in a strong, healthy condition. I have also used the 'All-Healing Salve,' and found it excellent for healing open sores of every sort."—MRS. A. T. COGGESHALL, 1531 Calhoun St.

FRECKLES

Now Is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots.

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as the prescription othine — double strength — is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of othine—double strength—from your druggist, and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than one ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength othine, as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.—Adv.

ANY CORN LIFTS OUT, DOESN'T HURT A BIT!

No foolishness! Lift your corns and calluses off with fingers—it's like magic!

Sore corns, hard corns, soft corns or any kind of a corn, can harmlessly be lifted right out with the fingers if you apply upon the corn a few drops of freezone, says a Cincinnati authority.

For little cost one can get a small bottle of freezone at any drug store, which will positively rid one's feet of every corn or callus without pain.

This simple drug dries the moment it is applied and does not even irritate the surrounding skin while applying it or afterwards.

This announcement will interest many of our readers. If your druggist hasn't any freezone tell him to surely get a small bottle for you from his wholesale drug house.—adv.

Canada Offers 160 Acres Free to Farm Hands

Bonus of Western Canada Land to Men Assisting in Maintaining Needed Grain Production

The demand for farm labor in Canada is great. As an inducement to secure the necessary help at once, Canada will give and allow the time of the farm laborer, who has filed on the land, to apply as residence duties, the same as if he actually had lived on it. Another special concession is the reduction of one year in the time to complete duties. Two years instead of three as heretofore, but only to men working on the farms for at least six months in 1917. This appeal for farm help is in no way connected with enlistment for military service but solely to increase agricultural output. A wonderful opportunity to secure a farm and draw good wages at the same time. Canadian Government will pay all fare over one cent per mile from St. Paul or Duluth to Canadian destination. By WILLIAM A. RADFORD.

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only enclose two-cent stamp for reply.

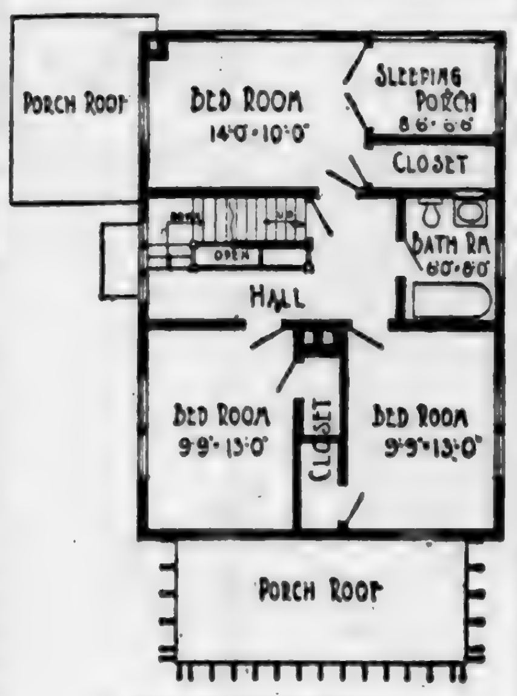
The study of architectural history is interesting especially in its application to modern buildings. Aside from the entertaining development of styles and orders of architecture which are recounted and associated in the pages of this history, it of course has a practical value to the architect. The larger buildings, especially memorial structures and public buildings, are nearly always designed to follow some definite type of architecture which originated, perhaps, a great many years ago. Even homes show the evidence of influence of the old masters in this art. Country estates are quite often arranged according to the plan of some of the ancient estates referred to in the histories of the earlier days of civilization.

The American house architecture is probably influenced by more different architectural types than that of any other structure. Not only do the old classic orders find partial expression, but the American home is also influenced by modern styles of foreign countries. Inside and out, modern American homes show the marks of many ages. This does not imply that each home is loaded with a mass of decorative detail. The really beautiful home is never overloaded with decorative features of an elaborate nature. It is in the simple features that the good things in all architecture are combined in the American homes.

The matter of simplicity has a special bearing upon the subject. As the strength of Lincoln's wisdom was founded in the force of simple expression, so, with quite the same application to human understanding, the strength of architecture type is quite often based upon its simplicity. On the other hand, the dancer who is graceful in the simple, slow steps is, indeed a really accomplished artist. So it is with the designer of homes—the much-desired quality of simple effectiveness is hard to attain.

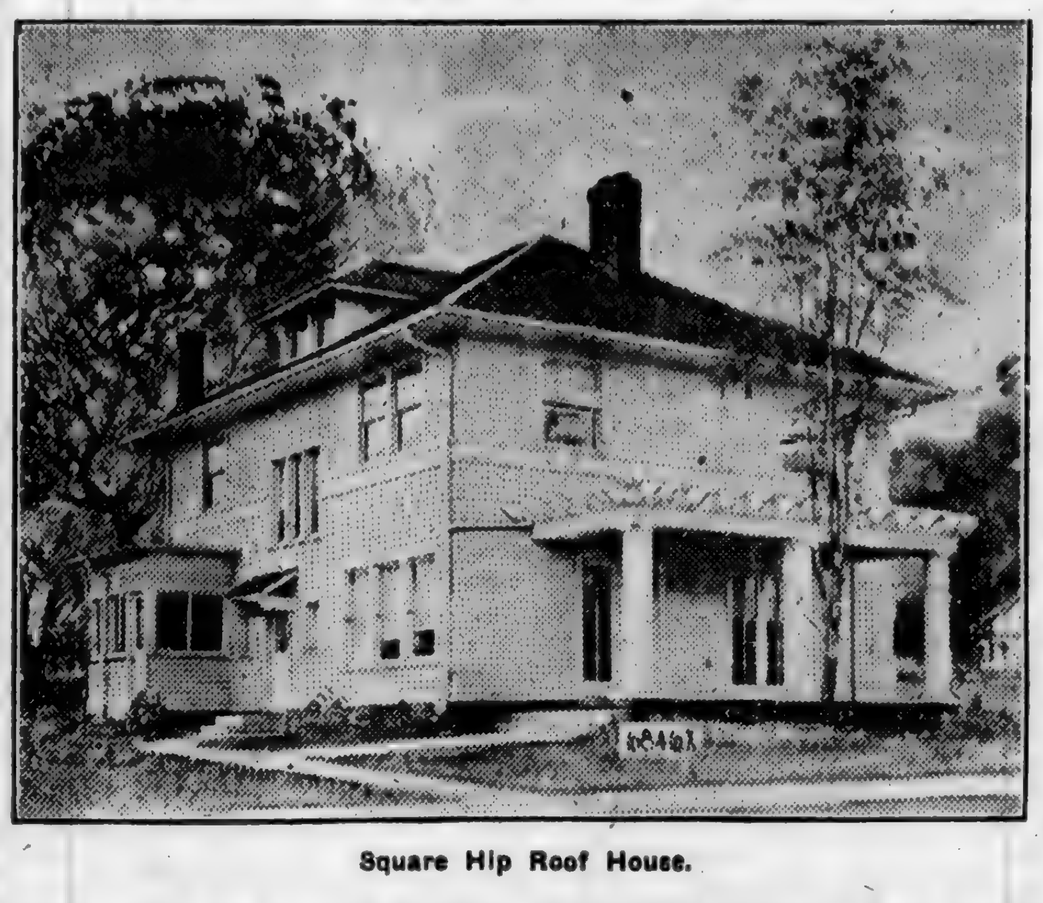
How is simplicity expressed in home design? In the first place, the general shape of the house may be made irregular, with wall surfaces broken up into jogs which will endanger the builder's nervous system in framing the roof and require a foundation outline of undescribable shape, or it may be made rectangular in the main which will require only good, simple construction. The rectangular house is much more satisfactory in the arrangement of rooms, the shape of rooms is better, and there is less space wasted. In case it is desirable to include special features, such as small bays, it is often possible by careful designing, especially as regards their position, to give room for window seats, etc., without taking anything from the good qualities of this type of house. The simplicity of interiors consists in the use of straight lines in trim. Fancy spindles, balusters, moldings, door cases, window cases, columns and other fittings are replaced with trim which will carry out the idea of simplicity both in itself and in its relation to the room.

There is seldom any loss in real value by such a change. The decorative scheme is often even more effective in its simplicity than what might be obtained with elaborate treatment of details, and an air of dignity is also found in the simple treatment. Then again, the fitting of odd-shaped trim runs the expense of labor up—the saving of which, in the simple treatment, may be spent in obtaining a higher grade of material or a more thorough final finish which will bring out all of the qualities of the wood. Handled in this manner, it is comparatively simple to add the little personal features which are so absolutely necessary in transforming the house into the home.



Second-Floor Plan.

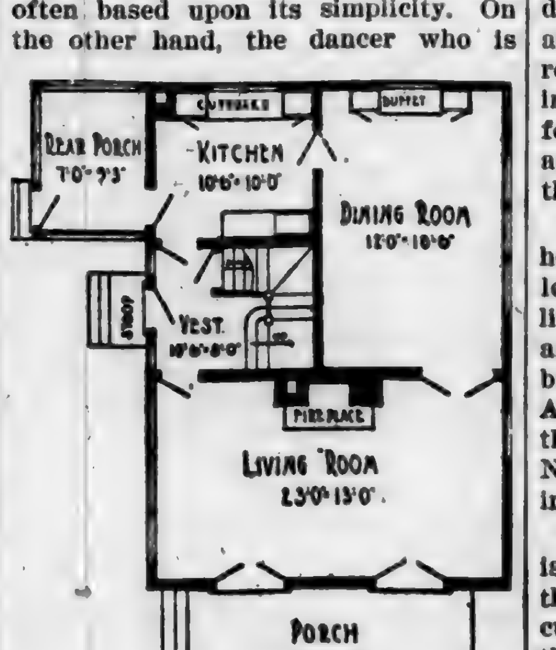
A pleasant feature of the house shown in the accompanying illustrations is the exceptionally large number of windows provided. Each room is sure to be bright and cheerful. The house is rather simple in exterior design, being in the main rectangular and having a very simple hip roof without decoration other than the small dormer. The walls are finished with beveled siding laid in the usual manner with the exception of the broad belt which encircles the house just below the sills of the second floor windows. The porch roof is practically the only portion of the exterior decorated.



Square Hip Roof House.

The porch has no rail and the floor is of vitrified brick. Two sets of French doors open from the wide living room upon the porch. The fireplace in the living room is built into the wall opposite these doors. In addition to the light which is admitted through the doors, there are four windows which add to the general cheerfulness of the room. French doors lead to the dining room which is a large room having four windows. The buffet is built against the wall under a window at the far end of the room.

There is also an entrance into the house by means of a stoop and door leading into a vestibule between the living room and the kitchen. There are two little windows in the vestibule, one on each side of the door. An attractive staircase is built against the back wall in the little vestibule. Near the kitchen there is a door leading to the basement.



First-Floor Plan.

The kitchen is practically square and is fitted to save steps for those who do the work in this part of the house. The cupboard is arranged in such a manner that its central portion is built below the two windows, making a handy work table where the most light is available. The sink is handily located in the corner of the room opposite the cupboard. The rear porch is essentially another room since it is built as a closed-up porch which may have either screens or glass panel sash fitted into the openings in its walls. This porch will prove to be a very handy addition to the kitchen.

On the second floor there are three bedrooms, a sleeping porch and a bath. A stair hall is centrally located on this floor from which the attic is reached. In case only two bedrooms are needed for sleeping quarters, this plan offers a pleasant possibility in that the large rear bedroom and sleeping porch may easily be transformed into a second-floor living room with attached sun parlor. There are French doors between the two and plenty of windows to make the combined rooms pleasant.

Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

INTEMPERANCE IN EUROPE.

One of the prize publicity methods of the brewery and wine interests is to contrast the amount of drunkenness in one of our prohibition states, usually Maine, with the amount of drunkenness in the wine-drinking countries of France and Italy in an attempt to show the superiority of the latter in the matter of sobriety. So far from being correct, the statesmen of France and Italy have long recognized intemperance as one of the most serious evils with which they have to contend. In 1912 the Italian premier, Hon. Lugi Luzzatti, introduced a bill into the Italian parliament providing measures for the reduction of intemperance, and presented a great mass of evidence showing that deaths from alcoholism in Italy are rapidly increasing, while the general death rate is falling. Prof. Cesare Lombroso, the world-renowned alienist, recently deceased, published in the Archive di Psichiatria of which he was the editor, a stirring appeal from Doctor Antonini, superintendent of one of the largest insane asylums in Italy, in which he said: "The Hospitals and insane asylums are filled with alcoholic patients; consumption promoted by alcoholic degeneracy rages; pellagra joins itself with alcoholic poisoning; crime is becoming more frequent among the young; the suicides are legion; the people are growing steadily weaker and more morally degenerate." To this appeal, Lombroso added his indorsement, with a demand for stringent legislation. At the Milan International Congress on Alcoholism, 1913, prominent Italian delegates spoke strongly of the growing evils caused by alcohol. Hon. H. E. Falcioni, Italian secretary of state, reported that deaths from alcoholism have nearly trebled since 1880. Against official declarations like these the arguments of brewers and winemen and their supporters have no weight.

MUNSTERBURG ON SALOON.

The late Prof. Hugo Munsterburg of Harvard, recognised authority in America on German ideals, gave to the public in 1907 this opinion of the saloon:

"There is nothing more degrading and no more atrocious insult to civilized life than the American saloon. It has poisoned the social atmosphere for the masses; in it the workingman squanders his savings, and the healthy man devastates his energies and becomes a wreck. Political corruption irradiates from the saloon into the whole public life and a thousand ways lead from the saloon to the penitentiary. It is a blessed movement which now turns with overwhelming energy against the horrors of this evil and source of infection. There may be disagreements as to the best ways and means, disagreement whether strict prohibition or education towards temperance is the more reliable method; but there is no disagreement as to the fact that the saloon has to be wiped out, and the day seems near indeed when—thanks to women—the fight against the saloon will be taken up in almost every state."

SECOND EMANCIPATION.

In high moments Abraham Lincoln dreamed of the coming of the hour when in all the land there should be found no slave, and he lived to see the dream come true, and with his own good hand he unlocked the bar that held a race captive. But that was not all his dream. He dreamed of the coming of a day when in all the land, the land he loved, and for which he gave his life, there should be found no drunkard made by government sanction. He died and did not see that half of his great dream realized, but his countrymen do not forget, nor shall they until in the high empire of a mighty power they commission another man from the selfsame room in the capitol at Washington to write the emancipation of the land from the liquor traffic.—Ex. Gov. J. Frank Hanly of Indiana.

MARKSMANSHIP.

In Sweden three corporals and three privates were used in a test to determine the effect of alcohol upon precision. During the days of the first test the men were entirely abstaining, while during the second series of tests they were allowed two-thirds of a wineglass of brandy a short time before the firing and an equal amount of alcohol in punch on the evening before. In the quick-firing tests, on the alcohol days, they hit the target on the average only three times out of 30 shots, but on the abstinent days the average was 23 and 26 hits. The men were found to be similarly affected by alcohol during tests for endurance of sustained firing.

NO DRINKERS NEED APPLY.

The Winton Motor Car company employs about 1,200 men in Cleveland, O., and almost as many in other cities. A rule barring drinking employees has been in force ever since the factory opened.

"We do not allow any man to enter our plant with liquor on his breath or to drink at any time, if we know it," says Mr. Winton, founder and president of the company.

"No well regulated plant can afford to employ men who drink. Men who use liquor cannot be at their best."

In Boston.

"Now," said a Boston schoolteacher to her class in English, "can anyone give me a word ending in 'ous,' meaning full of, as 'dangerous,' full of danger, and 'hazardous,' full of hazard?"

For a moment there was a dead silence. Then a small boy raised his hand.

"Well," queried the teacher, "what is your word?"

Then came the reply: "'Pious,' full of pie!"—Tit-Bits.

"Can't Cut Off My Leg," Says Railroad Engineer

"I am a railroad engineer; about 20 years ago my leg was seriously injured in an accident out West. Upon my refusing to allow the doctor to amputate it I was told it would be impossible to heal the wound. I have tried all kinds of salves and had many doctors in the past 20 years, but to no avail. Finally I resolved to use PETERSON'S OINTMENT on my leg. You cannot imagine my astonishment when I found it was doing what over 100 things had failed to do. My leg is now completely cured."—Gus Hauff, 739 Myrtle Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"It makes me feel proud to be able to produce an ointment like that," says Peterson. "Not only do I guarantee Peterson's Ointment for old sores and wounds, but for Eczema, Salt Rheum, Ulcers, Itching Skin and Blind, Bleeding or Itching Piles, and I put up a big box for 25 cents, a price all can afford to pay and money back from your druggist if not satisfied." Airship Losses in Europe.

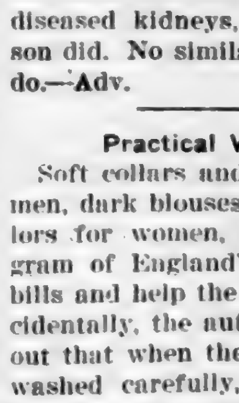
An official recapitulation in Berlin of the statistics of airship losses during the year 1916 indicates that the Germans lost 221 machines and their opponents sacrificed 784. The bulk of the losses on both sides was in the West, where the Germans lost 181 airships and the English and French 739, it is declared.

THE 3 D'S IN DODD'S

Mr. Robert W. Ferguson, Hingham, Mass., writes: I suffered from kidney disorder for years. Had incessant backache and trouble. Nearly died from it at one time while in Vancouver, but overcame it by a persistent use of Dodd's Kidney Pills. Finally I was completely cured. I occasionally use the remedy now in order to keep the kidneys regulated. I have the highest praise for Dodd's. Be sure to get "DODD'S," the name with the three D's for deranged, disordered, diseased kidneys, just as Mr. Ferguson did. No similar named article will do.—Adv.



Practical War Economy.

Soft collars and "office overalls" for men, dark blouses and curtainless parlors for women, are all on the program of England's "save the laundry bills and help the war" campaign. Incidentally, the authorities are pointing out that when the hands and face are washed carefully, the towels do not have to be laundered so often.

GREEN'S AUGUST FLOWER

Few persons can be sick who use Green's August Flower. It has been used for all ailments that are caused by a disordered stomach and inactive liver, such as sick headache, constipation, sour stomach, nervous indigestion, fermentation of food, palpitation of the heart from gases created in the stomach, pains in the stomach, and many other organic disturbances. August Flower is a gentle laxative, regulates digestion, both in the stomach and intestines, cleans and sweetens the stomach and whole alimentary canal, and stimulates the liver to secrete the bile and impurities from the blood. Try it. Two doses will relieve you. Used for fifty years in every town and hamlet in the United States and in all civilized countries.—Adv.

What Came From Reading a Pinkham Advertisement.

Paterson, N. J. — "I thank you for the Lydia E. Pinkham remedies as they have made me well and healthy. Sometime ago I felt so run down, had pains in my back and side, was very irregular, tired, nervous, had such bad dreams, did not feel like eating and had short breath. I read your advertisement in the newspapers and decided to try a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It worked from the first bottle, so I took a second and a third, also a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Blood Purifier, and now I am just as well as any other woman. I advise every woman, single or married, who is troubled with any of the aforesaid ailments, to try your wonderful Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier and I am sure they will help her to get rid of her troubles as they did me." — Mrs. ELSIE J. South Neglects Indigo.

Some time, about 75 years ago, the money crop of Alabama, Mississippi and Georgia was indigo, one of the most highly prized commodities of the present day. That was before the invention of the cotton gin, and nobody is alive now in this country who knows how to grow indigo. But a hundred acres planted to indigo, by a man who knows how to grow it, would at this time bring him in more money than alfalfa, cotton, corn and peanuts combined. Indigo is the main ingredient of some of the high-priced dyestuffs, the scarcity of which is felt all over the world, and which will continue to advance in price long after the war is over. The same soil is here on which it used to grow, only our forefathers found it more profitable to grow cotton, and indigo was left for other countries to grow and thrive upon.—Demopolis (Ala.) Times.

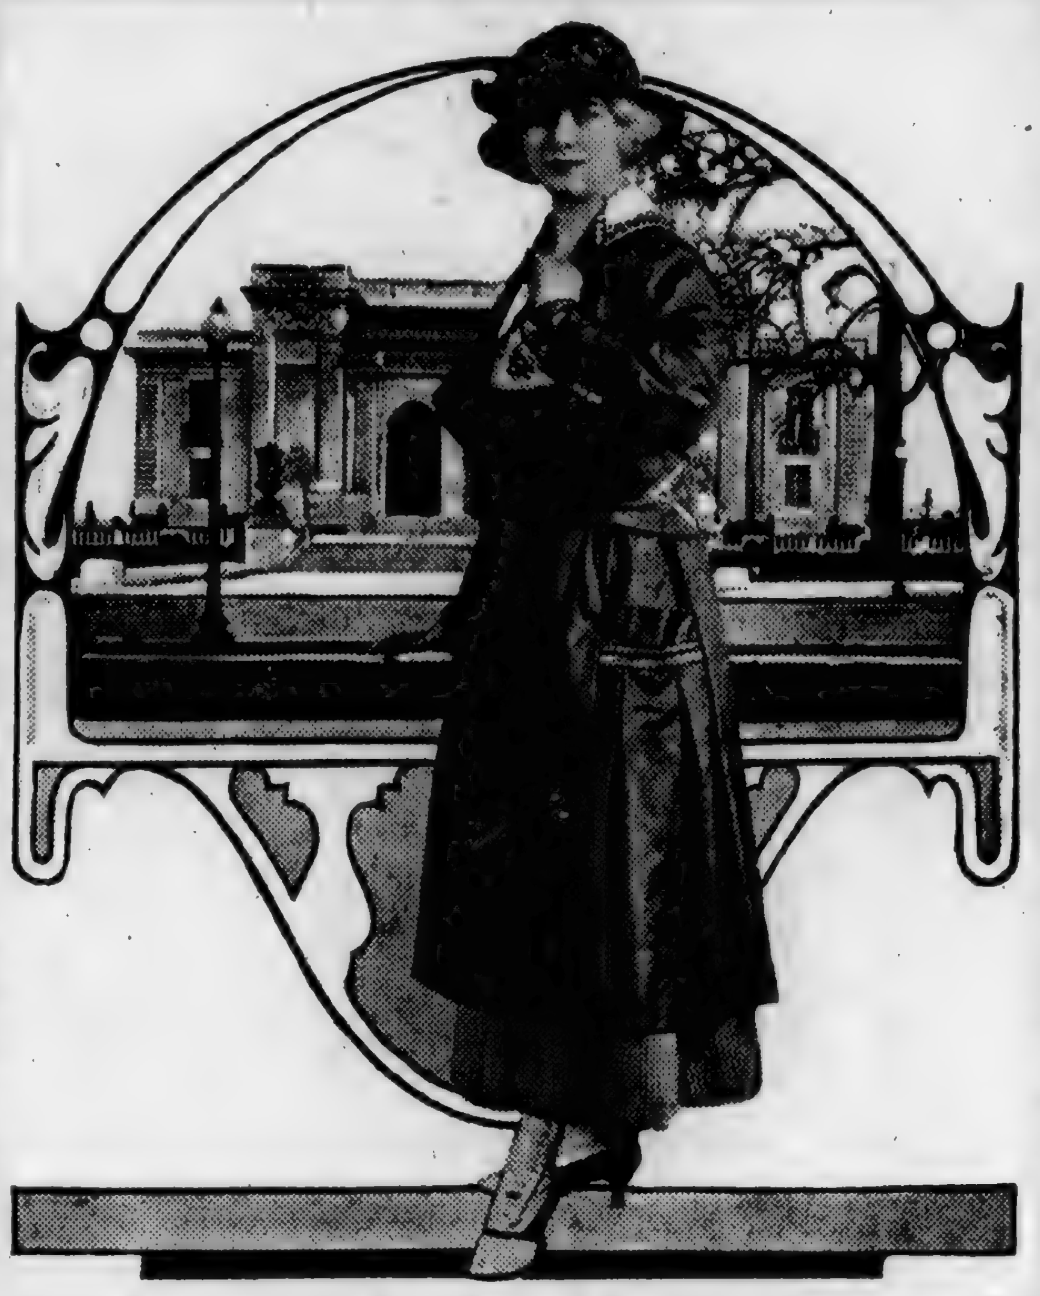
Taffeta in Spring Coat Fashions



Taffeta dresses and coats reappear each season, sure of a good following. This season, countenanced by Paris—if that makes any difference—it promises to be more used for afternoon and evening dresses and for separate skirts than any other silk. It leads for the last mentioned by a long way. These separate silk skirts are in plaids, checks and occasional stripes, and in combinations of many colors, some of them rather startling. It is a fancy to wear long coats of plain silk over them, made in the fashion of a suit coat or a long coat of black taffeta will serve this purpose and many others.

The coat of black taffeta shown in the picture is touched up with white braid and buttons and a white collar. Contrasting collars of chiffon broadcloth are a feature of these coats as well as of blouses and suits. There is a wide, soft girdle with hanging ends tied loosely about the waist.

Pockets are conspicuous by their absence on this coat, but they are suggested and the inevitable widened hip effect attained by plaited panels let in at the sides. They are set in in box plaits, stitched down with a braided strap that leaves a standing plaiting over two inches wide.

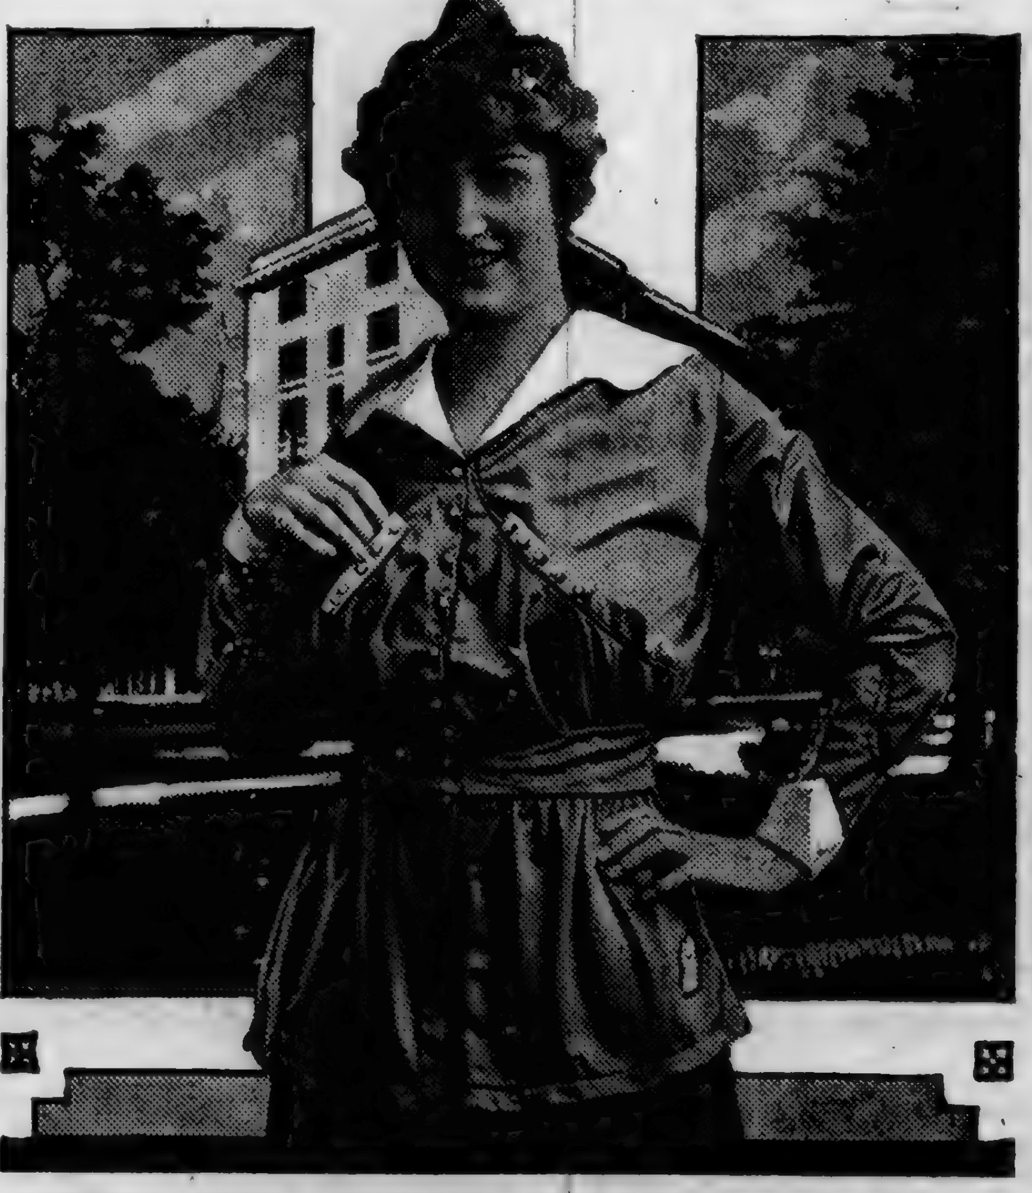
One of the best of the new taffeta coats is made with a plain, tight-fitting body, decorated with pin tucks running in parallel rows from the center of the back to the underarm seams. The front is similarly trimmed. The sleeves are plain and flare at the wrists, revealing their lining of soft, white satin.

The skirt of the coat is very full and slopes from the front to the middle of the back, where it is pointed. It is lined with satin also. It is heavier by the weight of its lining than coats of the sort shown in the picture.

Keeps White.

To keep crepe de chine articles white, be careful to use luke warm water, not hot; use white soap, rinse at least three times, then wrap in a towel for two or three days (keeping damp if inclined to dry out), and then iron on the wrong side with a warm (not hot) iron. If these directions are followed carefully your things will keep like new. It is the standing wrapped in the damp towel that is the most important part.

Blouse of Silk Jersey



Somewhere between a sweater coat and a dressy blouse stands this novel model made of bright green jersey silk trimmed with white satin. It is fashioned with a rather long peplum, provided with a belt made of the jersey and has the easy adjustment to the figure of a sweater. But its wide collar, turned back cuffs and fancy sleeves place it in the class of dressy blouses. This compromise between two purposes makes it a useful garment for the woman who likes to spend the day in a garment that will not be out of place, whatever its environment.

Novel management of the body of the blouse and of the sleeves, in cutting, makes this an interesting garment and it looks as if it would be a good selection for the woman with a stout figure. At each side pockets are simulated by narrow bands of satin set onto the front. The small buttons are black and white, making a very sparkling combination with the vivid green of the material.

Silk in various weaves from the thinnest crepe georgette to rather heavy jersey, like that in the blouse pictured, appears to have displaced cotton and linen materials to a considerable extent. But nothing can ever be more elegant than these same sheer cottons and linens that emerge from the laundry as good as new. Midsummer brings back our wandering allegiance always to the refinement and beauty of white in washable blouses. It is just as well to get them ready now; they are to be our main dependence in hot weather.

Julia Bottomley

Old Gold Blouses.

Since the short outside blouse was put up as a rival to the wash waist tucked into the skirt there has been strong rivalry in the way of new designs. Colors have been accepted without question, and, so far, women have gone in heavily for blue and dull burgundy red; but now there is a new blouse of old gold satin, which is lined with crepe and has a belt of Japanese embroidery. This is offered for any kind of skirt and can be worn in the home or under a top coat.

The blouse that is worn with the tail under the skirt is no longer smart. The peplum blouse is the fashion.

LESSON FOR MARCH 25

JESUS THE WAY, TRUTH AND LIFE.

(Review.)

SCRIPTURE LESSON—Read John 14: 1-14.

GOLDEN TEXT—Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, the truth, and the life, no man cometh unto the father, but by me. —John 14:6.

The purpose of John's gospel is revealed in John 20:31. It was to prove that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and to prove it in such a way that men might believe it in their hearts, and thus obtain, through that belief, eternal life in his name. Therefore the best method of review for the lessons of the past quarter would be to go over the lessons one by one, and find out how it is that this great truth, which brings life to men, is illustrated in each of the several lessons. The object of such a review should be to make Jesus as real to us as if we were with him and his disciples, and could realize that the Word is now dwelling among us, full of grace and truth, giving daily of his fulness and "grace for grace." (Ch. 1:14-16). Jesus is "the way," the way to heaven, the way to all that is highest and best on earth, the way of life, the way to the Father, the goal of all human aspirations, the way out of all human darkness and sin, the way to holiness and to God. Jesus is also the truth, the revealed truth about God. He revealed the forgiveness of God for the sins of men, the right way of living. Jesus is the life, the source of life, the life itself, the true life here on earth, and the eternal life which is to abide forever. Thus our entire review centers about Jesus Christ. It would be good to have a map chiefly of the vicinity of the Sea of Galilee to use in this review.

Lesson I. Jesus, the Life and Light of Men. This is the central truth of the gospel. Note the pre-existence of Jesus Christ as the eternal Word, "In the beginning with God." Then again we see it as plainly showing forth or declaring him to be God. We see him also as the Creator of all things.

Lesson II. John the Baptist. This is a lesson of John's testimony to Jesus as the Son of God; also that Jesus was the Lamb of God, eternal, pre-existent, the One who was baptized by the Holy Ghost, showing us the real nature of Jesus as the Word of God. Describe who and what he was and did that made him the perfect Savior.

Lesson III. The First Disciples of Jesus. Andrew and Philip discovered the Messiah of whom Moses and the prophets did write, and revealed him unto Nathaniel, who discovered in Jesus the Son of God and the King of Israel. Relate how Jesus found these disciples, their names and their characteristics, and why each one was especially fitted for his particular work.

Lesson IV. His Father's House. Jesus, manifesting himself as the Son of God, the Father, was the Ruler of God's house, and drove from it those who defiled it by making that house a house of merchandise.

Lesson V. The Savior of the World. Jesus, as the only begotten Son of God, can give eternal life to those who believe on him. Describe the character of Nicodemus, what it means to be born again, and what is meant by being born of water and of the spirit.

Lesson VI. The Woman of Samaria. Jesus declared himself to this woman as the Christ, and also as the giver of eternal life; therefore he was God. Referring to the last lesson, emphasize what Jesus meant by his reference to Moses and the brazen serpent, and bring out the fact that the water of which he speaks is the gift of everlasting life.

Lesson VII. The Nobleman's Son. Jesus made his glory to be seen a second time in Cana of Galilee by healing sickness although not present at the bedside of the sick one. Healing and faith are co-partners.

Lesson VIII. The Pool of Bethesda. Again Jesus manifests his power by healing by his bare word the man who had been infirm thirty and eight years, and who was utterly helpless and hopeless. Bring out how the man showed his faith. Explain why Jesus should say to him: "Sin no more lest a worse thing befall thee."

Lesson IX. Five Thousand Fed. Divine power multiplying the loaves and fishes, and divine prudence in assembling the fragments reveals the unquestionable, creative act of the power of Jesus Christ as perhaps none other of his miracles. Emphasize the part which the boy played in co-operating with Christ.

Lesson X. The Bread of Life. Jesus is the Bread of Life as well as the giver of everlasting life. He is the Bread of Life which cometh down from heaven, and the one going to whom we shall never hunger nor thirst.

Lesson XI. Jesus Saves From Sin. Jesus, the Light of the World, has power to set men free from sin, and "whom the Son shall make free is free indeed." In this lesson we have the slavery of sin and the freedom of believers.

True faith is built upon facts, and those who accept and believe on these facts have "everlasting life."

Paints King by Proxy.

King Alfonso of Spain, absorbed by his occupation, has been unable to give the necessary number of sittings to Carlo Vasquez, who is engaged in painting the monarch's portrait; Senor Vasquez, however, has solved the difficulty. No matter at what time one visits his studio the king can be seen there sitting in a familiar pose in the uniform of a colonel of infantry.

If one examines the sovereign attentively it can be seen that he retains his immovability—it is a wax figure which represents him. The figure and attitude of Alfonso have been exactly copied and he will have to pose only for the face and hands.

No sick headache, biliousness, bad taste or constipation by morning.

Get a 10-cent box.

Are you keeping your bowels, liver, and stomach clean, pure and fresh with Cascarets, or merely forcing a passageway every few days with Salts, Cathartic Pills, Castor Oil or Purgative Waters?

Stop having a bowel wash-day. Let Cascarets thoroughly cleanse and regulate the stomach, remove the sour and fermenting food and foul gases, take the excess bile from the liver and carry out of the system all the constipated waste matter and poisons in the bowels.

A Cascaret to-night will make you feel great by morning. They work while you sleep—never gripe, sicken or cause any inconvenience, and cost only 10 cents a box from your store. Millions of men and women take a Cascaret now and then and never have Headache, Biliousness, Coated Tongue, Indigestion, Sour Stomach or Constipation. Adv.

What Shakespeare Did.

In Stratford, during one of the Shakespeare jubilees, an American tourist approached an aged villager in a smock, and said:

"Who is this chap Shakespeare, anyway?"

"He were a writer, sir."

"Oh, but there are lots of writers. Why do you make such an infernal fuss over this one? Wherever I turn I see Shakespeare hotels, Shakespeare cakes, Shakespeare chocolates, Shakespeare shoes. What the deuce did he write—magazine stories, attacks on the government, shady novels?"

"No, sir; oh, no, sir," said the aged villager. "I understand he writ for the Bible, sir."

Found Out.

"Yes, oh yes; tell it to me."

Care of the Setting Hen

The sitting hen, which is used most generally for incubation purposes on the farm should receive a certain amount of care and attention during the process of hatching eggs. To a great extent the care given a sitting hen plays an important part on the number and condition of the chicks when hatched. With this end in view, the poultry specialists of the U. S. Department of Agriculture make the following suggestions:

If several hens are sitting in the same room, see that they are kept on the nests, allowing them to come off only once a day to receive feed and water, the feed to consist of corn, wheat, or both. If there are any that do not desire to come off themselves, they should be taken off. Hens usually return to their nests before there is any danger of the eggs chilling, but if they do not go back in half an hour in ordinary weather, they should be put on the nest. Where a large number of sitters are kept in one room it is advisable to let them off in groups of from 4 to 6 at a time. The eggs and nests should be examined and cleaned, removing all broken eggs and washing those that are soiled; in the latter case the soiled nesting material should be removed and clean straw added. Nests containing broken eggs that the hen is allowed to sit on soon become infested with mites and lice, which cause the hens to become uneasy and leave the nest, often causing the loss of valuable sittings of eggs. In mite-infested nests, the hen, if fastened in, will often be found standing over rather than sitting on the eggs. Many eggs that are laid in the late winter and early spring are infertile. For this reason it is advisable to set several hens at the same time. After the eggs have been under the hens from 5 to 7 days, the time depending somewhat on the color and thickness of the shells—white-shelled eggs being easier to test than those having brown shells—they should be tested, the infertile eggs and dead germs removed, and the fertile eggs put back under the hen. In this way it is often possible to put all the eggs that several hens originally started to sit on under fewer hens and reset the others. For example, 30 eggs are set under 3 hens at the same time, 10 under each. At the end of 7 days we find on testing the eggs from all the hens that 10 are infertile, which leaves us 20 eggs to reset, which we do by putting them under 2 hens, and have the remaining hen sit over again after she has sat only 7 days. In this way considerable time can be saved in one's hatching operations.

We Ask the Attention of Every Reader of This Paper Today

By J. R. HAMILTON

Former Advertising Manager of Wanamaker's, Philadelphia

Ninety-six per cent of all the people in the United States earn less than $2,000 a year.

Therefore it behooves every one of you to learn to read this paper day by day with two purposes. One, that you may post yourself upon the general news. The other, that you may post yourself upon the advertising news.

The day is past when anyone can afford to overlook this second feature. It is the road to economy in every home. There isn't a day passes when money cannot be saved or when better goods cannot be bought for the same money simply by following carefully the advertising news that is published here.

The reason for this is very simple: advertising is the cheapest, quickest and best method of salesmanship that has yet been found.

Therefore the most progressive merchants advertise.

And naturally, when you want the cheapest or the best article of any kind, it is fair to assume that the most progressive men will have it for sale.

Every shrewd merchant advertises in this paper because there are thousands of you readers eager to see his advertising when it appears.

He knows that you are looking for whatever good merchandise news he has to offer. And if any merchant so far discounts your value to him as not to advertise in the paper you read, you can equally well afford to discount his value to you.

If any merchant is so careless as to overlook the great combined purchasing value of thousands of you readers every day, the chances are he is overlooking many a good merchandise value when it comes his turn to go into the markets and buy.

So learn, not only to read the advertising news in this paper every day, but learn also to rely upon it for everything you need.

There isn't one family that cannot reduce its cost of living at any time simply by carefully reading and buying entirely through the advertising pages of this paper day by day.

Clean-up Day.

Now, that spring approaches it is time to begin thinking about cleaning up those back yards, alleys and streets. We have a pretty little town and a great many people pass through here in autos—why not keep it clean. What we are after is to have a GENERAL CLEAN-UP DAY in which every person considers himself or herself a committee of the whole to see that every back yard; alley and our streets are cleaned up. Get rid of the rubbish and the ashes and the accumulation of the winter—in other words, give the town an annual bath. Then each one see that it is kept clean. This will add to the general appearance of the town.

Now this Clean-up Day is to be announced later, so prepare yourselves now—get the hoe and rake in condition to do business. This procedure is carried out in a good many towns and cities and we do not want to fall behind the times. Watch THE NEWS for the date.

TESTING EGGS FOR FERTILITY

An egg, whether impregnated or not, has a small grayish spot on the surface of the yolk known as the "germinal spot." As soon as a fertile egg is placed under a hen, or in an incubator, development begins. All eggs should be tested at least twice during the period of incubation, preferably on the seventh and fourteenth days, and the infertile eggs and dead germs removed. White eggs can be tested on the fourth or fifth day, while the development in eggs having brown shells often can not be seen by the use of an ordinary egg tester until the seventh day. Dead germs soon decay and give off a bad odor if allowed to remain under the hen Infertile eggs make good feed for young chickens, and are often used in the home for culinary purposes. Most incubator companies furnish testing chimneys with their machines which will fit ordinary lamps. Electric or gas lamps may be used in a box with a hole slightly smaller than an egg cut in the side of the box and at the same level as the light. They may also be tested by sunlight, or daylight, using a shutter or curtain with a small hole in it for the light to shine through.

A good homemade egg tester, or candler, can be made with a large shoe box, or any box that is large enough to go over a lamp, by removing the end and cutting a hole a little larger than the size of a quarter in the bottom of the box, so that when it is set over a kerosene lamp the hole in the bottom will be opposite the blaze. A hole the size of a silver dollar should be cut in the top of the box to allow the heat to escape.

The eggs are tested with the large end up, so that the size of the air cell may be seen as well as the condition of the embryo. The testing should take place in a dark room. The infertile egg when held before the small hole with the lamp lighted inside the box will look perfectly clear, the same as a fresh one, while a fertile egg will show a small dark spot, known as the embryo, with a mass of little blood veins extending in all directions, if the embryo is living; if dead, and the egg has been incubated for at least 46 hours, the blood settles away from the embryo toward the edges of the yolk, forming in some cases an irregular circle of blood, known as a blood ring. Eggs vary in this respect, some showing only a streak of blood. All infertile eggs should be removed at the first test. The eggs containing strong, living embryos are dark and well filled up on the fourteenth day, and show a clear, sharp, distinct line of demarcation between the air cell and the growing embryo, while dead germs show only partial development, and lack this clear, distinct outline.

American enterprise has moved 500,000 tons of rock from points 70 miles inland and piled them in Tampico harbor in two long breakwaters behind which whole fleets of merchant vessels can ride at anchor.

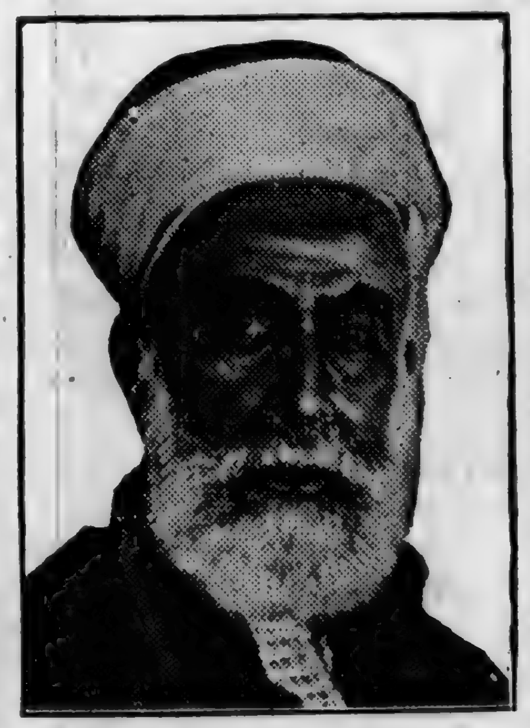
PROMINENT PEOPLE

HUSSEIN, KING OF THE HEJAZ



Out of the maelstrom of the great war a queer new kingdom has arisen.

A portion of the ancient kingdom of Arabia has asserted its independence of the Turks. A descendant of the prophet Mohammed has mounted the throne of his ancestors. He aspires to revive the former glories of Islam, the religio-political empire that was founded at Mecca and Medina and at the summit of its greatness had its capital at Bagdad, where the Caliph Harun-al-Raschid ruled and where many of "The Arabian Nights" romances were staged.

The new ruler is Hussein Ben Ali, until recently known as Grand Shereef of Mecca. He has taken the title of king of the Hejaz because he is in possession of the sacred cities of Mecca and Medina, which originally formed the nucleus of the great Mohammedan empire. Hussein Ben Ali has received at least temporary recognition from the United States, which has ascertained that there is no other effective authority in his territory. He has received full recognition from the governments of England, France, Italy, Russia and Japan.

King Hussein Ben Ali is the chief living descendant of the prophet Mohammed through his favorite daughter Fatima. Consequently he possesses higher claims than the sultan of Turkey, in the opinion of many Mohammedans, to be caliph of Bagdad, which was the chief temporal position of ancient Islam.

INSPECTOR GENERAL OF ARMY

Brig. Gen. John L. Chamberlain, recently promoted, has assumed the duties of inspector general of the army, vice Brig. Gen. Ernest A. Garlington, retired for age. The new head of inspector general's department is from New York and was educated at the Geneseo State Normal school of New York and the United States Military academy, from which institution he was graduated in the class of 1880.

He served in the artillery corps for 19 years, and in November, 1900, was appointed a major in the inspector general's department. During the Spanish war he was chief ordnance officer of volunteers. From 1884 to 1888 he was instructor at the United States Military academy, and in 1890 he was graduated from the Artillery school. He took part in the campaign against the Sioux Indians in 1890 and 1891. Subsequently he served as chief ordnance officer of the department of Missouri, as instructor of military science and tactics at the Peekskill Military academy, as military attache of the United States embassy at Vienna, Austria, with the United States siege train and the Seventh army corps in the campaign against the Moros in the Philippines, as inspector general of the Pacific division, and as inspector general of the Eastern department at New York.

CENSOR OF NAVY NEWS

In the navy department at Washington, Lieut. Charles Belknap is holding down the censor's desk, holding it down with 190 pounds of brawn and muscle, some of which, by the way, he is likely to lose if the expected happens and the 24-hour censorship is put in operation.

The new navy censor will be able to take care of himself in any scrap with the press his censorship may bring forth. He was on the navy football team for three years and was captain of the team in 1912, his last year. Then he rowed in the navy crew.

Ten of the fourteen years since he left Annapolis, Lieutenant Belknap has spent at sea. He served successively on the Kearsarge, Hopkins, MacDonough, Laurence, Maryland, and New Hampshire, and then in 1909 he had his first shore detail, two years at the torpedo station at Newport. He was back to sea again in 1911, first to the Guantanamo naval station, and then to the command of the destroyer Ammen under Capt. W. S. Sims as flotilla commander.

In 1915 Lieutenant Belknap was detached to enter the War college at Newport, graduating with the class of 1916, and later coming to Washington duty in the office of Admiral Benson, chief of naval operations.

Like most big men of the husky, athletic type, Lieutenant Belknap is as docile as a lamb. Some of the newspaper men, popping bespectacled heads into the censor's den for the first time, took in his height and breadth appraisingly, but they all were immediately disarmed by a genial smile.

NEW DIRECTOR OF THE MINT

Ray Baker, the newly appointed director of the mint, gained thorough knowledge of metallurgy in the Nevada gold fields, where he was born. The son of a former chief counsel of the Union Pacific railroad, Ray, as he is known to everyone in Washington as well as in Russia, where he served as private secretary to a former ambassador at Petrograd, began his career as a prospector. Behind a train of five burros he went into Death valley and established a claim, which probably will one day put him in the millionaire class.

His mine is so far from civilization that he must await the development of the country before expecting to reap his harvest. A more conveniently located mine, however, supplies young Baker—he is in the thirties—with enough cash to support a high-priced automobile and an assortment of clothes that are the envy of well-dressed Washingtonians. Baker was one of the active young Wilson boosters who aided in turning Republican California into the Wilson column last November.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR APRIL 1

JESUS GIVES SIGHT TO BLIND.

LESSON TEXT—John 9:1-11, 35-38. (Read entire chapter.)

GOLDEN TEXT—I am the light of the world.—John 9:5.

This, another of the signs which Jesus performed, is recorded only by John. It probably occurred in October, six months before the crucifixion, while Jesus was attending the Feast of the Tabernacles. There are six other cases of blindness recorded as having been cured. Look them up.

I. The Case (vv. 1-4). It was absolutely hopeless. No human skill could touch it, but Jesus "passed by," and that changed everything. What men cannot do Jesus can. Jesus is passing today, and we may expect things quite as wonderful to happen (John 14:12). This blind man illustrates the unsaved sinner (I Cor. 2:14). He never had seen. He was beyond human help (v. 32). He had doubtless given up all hope of seeing. He was without sympathy, suspected and despised (vv. 2, 34). Poor—he was a beggar. He is also a type of the nation of Israel (Rev. 3:17). We must not attempt to explain all sickness (v. 3). God frequently uses it for the advancement of his kingdom (John 11:4). Jesus not only passed by but he "saw." The feeling of the crowd was that of curiosity and contempt. His feeling was that of compassion (vv. 2, 4 and 6). Sickness sometimes manifests God's sustaining grace (II Cor. 12:8-10). It is doubtless true that a large percentage of sickness is the direct result of sin (John 5:14; Mk. 2:5; Acts 12:23), some, of course, indirectly (Job 23:14-30).

II. The Cure (vv. 4-11). The word "must" in verse four is a strong one. The time for us to do our work is "now." This word "must" carries with it the idea of a divine imperative, and the reason for that imperativeness is the approaching "night." Night is coming fast, when no man can work. Notice the works we are to do are not our own, but "the works of him that sent me." Compare carefully verses two and four, and see that Jesus considered delivering the man from evil far more important than speculating about the origin of his complaint. Too much time is spent in investigation. Let us have more of action. The means used in this cure were clay and spittle. The miracle was performed in plain view of all who might see. The man did not ask Jesus to help him, but Jesus had gone where he was (v. 5). His words, "Go wash" were a test of the man's faith (II Kings 5:10-14), and his part in the transaction was a testimony that it was Christ who worked the cure. The use of the material means in this ceremony made the man more willing to go and wash. It gave him something to do, and doing is always an end to faith. Siloam means "sent," and was a type of Jesus himself (v. 4; John 10:36; Rom. 8:3; Gal. 4:4). If we wish to receive sight for our blind eyes, we should go to him and bathe (John 8:12).

III. The Controversy (v. 12 to end of chapter). This controversy gave opportunity for testimony, as we have already seen, first of all upon the part of the man whose testimony was progressive. At first he merely spoke of the fact. He was not acquainted with Jesus, for he calls him "The man called Jesus." Later on he is moved to call him a "prophet." He is a prophet (v. 17), and later still he recognizes him as "The Son of God" (vv. 35-38). This controversy established beyond question the fact of the cure. It brought out the deity of Christ (v. 33). The man was excommunicated, but for that matter he was already outside because of his physical infirmity, but, best of all, he became truly Christ's disciple.

IV. Comments. This lesson with its vivid contrasts of belief and unbelief gives us a wonderful opportunity to urge upon pupils a decision to live the Christian life. Has Christ opened the eyes of our scholars to the love of God, to the awfulness of sin, to the need of a Savior, our divine Leader and Brother? Urge them, in the class and out, to be as outspoken and courageous for Christ as was this man who had never before perhaps seen or heard of Jesus, and whose gratitude at once called forth this wonderful confession.

Being cast out by the rules of the synagogue brought this man into closer and deeper fellowship and communion with Jesus.

He had believed far enough to obey his bidding, and had thus been healed.

Now he is brought to a great saving, transforming faith, viz., that Jesus is the Son of God.

Do we take advantage of our privilege of confession?

Before Christ came there were no hospitals.

He is the inspiration of all charitable institutions, but healing of the body is of secondary importance; the healing of the soul is primary. "Whereas I was blind, now I see."

Start with what you know—your own experience—and he will reveal himself according to your developing and progressive needs.

IS CHILD CROSS, FEVERISH, SICK

Look, Mother! If tongue is coated, give "California Syrup of Figs."

Children love this "fruit laxative," and nothing else cleanses the tender stomach, liver and bowels so nicely.

A child simply will not stop playing to empty the bowels, and the result is they become tightly clogged with waste, liver gets sluggish, stomach sours, then your little one becomes cross, half-sick, feverish, don't eat, sleep or act naturally, breath is bad, system full of cold, has sore throat, stomach-ache or diarrhea. Listen, Mother! See if tongue is coated, then give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the constipated waste, sour bile and undigested food passes out of the system, and you have a well child again.

Millions of mothers give "California Syrup of Figs" because it is perfectly harmless; children love it, and it never fails to act on the stomach, liver and bowels.

Ask at the store for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly printed on the bottle. Adv.

Wolfe's Sash to a Museum.

A new and valued addition has just been made to the museum of the Chateau de Ramezay. It consists of a cabinet containing a portion of the garnet silk sash worn by Gen. James Wolfe on the day he became the "victor of Quebec" in 1759. In addition to the sash are the original letters that prove unmistakably the authenticity of the relic.—Montreal Star.

Resourceful.

Two women were having a confab on the troubles of life, that connected with husbands in particular, relates George Mejlinger of Sweeney's.

"I dinna wonder at some puir wives having to help themselves out of their husband's trousers," remarked one of them.

"I canna say that I like them underhand ways meself," said the other matron. "I usually jist turn ma man's breeches doon side up an' help myself off the carpet."

A Bit of "Old" Canada.

There exists at Unionville, Ontario, a pioneer house 124 years old. This is probably a unique record for a Canadian log house, and it is said to be the oldest log house of similar dimensions in the Dominion. Some of the logs are from 30 to 36 inches in diameter. It is still occupied, and it is interesting to note, as a testimony to the comfort of the house, that its occupants, numbering 13, took first prize in 1912 at a political picnic as the "heaviest family attending the event."

YES! MAGICALLY! CORNS LIFT OUT WITH FINGERS

You say to the drug store man, "Give me a small bottle of freezone." This will cost very little but will positively remove every hard or soft corn or callus from one's feet.

A few drops of this new ether compound applied directly upon a tender, aching corn relieves the soreness instantly, and soon the entire corn or callus, root and all, dries up and can be lifted off with the fingers.

This new way to rid one's feet of corns was introduced by a Cincinnati man, who says that freezone dries in a moment, and simply shrivels up the corn or callus without irritating the surrounding skin.

If your druggist hasn't any freezone tell him to order a small bottle from his wholesale drug house for you.—adv.

Healthy Skin Depends On Kidneys

The skin and the intentines, which work together with the kidneys to throw out the poisons of the body, do a part of the work, but a clean body and a healthy one depends on the kidneys. If the kidneys are clogged with toxic poisons you suffer from stiffness in the knees in the morning on arising, your joints seem "rusty," you may have rheumatic pains, pain in the back, stiff neck, headaches, sometimes swollen feet, or neuralgic pains—all due to the uric acid or toxic poisons in the blood. This is the time to go to the nearest drug store and simply obtain a 50c. package of Anuric (double or triple strength), the discovery of Dr. Pierce of Buffalo, N. Y. Then drink a cup of hot water before meals, with an Anuric Tablet, and notice the gratifying results. You will find Anuric more active than lithia.

Baseball in Sculpture.

One of the attendants at an art gallery is a baseball enthusiast, a fact he generally manages to conceal there, though it did come out once.

One afternoon a director came bustling into the room where this attendant was at the time and demanded.

"How is it that Shakespeare's statue is standing on the pedestal marked Scott?"

"Well, sir, answered the attendant, "he must have got his base on an error."

Of Course.

"How is a floating debt paid?"

"It is liquidated, I suppose."

Though you are bound to love your enemy, you are not bound to put your sword in his hand.

A Lucky Bullet.

Hussar declares that there is no mascot to compare with the bullet with which a man has been wounded. "At the Battle of the Marne," he says, "I was struck by a bullet which lodged in my right thigh without doing much damage. When it was extracted I drilled a hole through it, and supended it by a string from my neck. And, although I have been through dozens of fierce battles since then, including the hottest fights on the Somme, and have seen my comrades fall in hundreds, I have come through them all without a scratch, thanks, I firmly believe, to my bullet mascot."—Tit-Bits.

A Growl.

"Are your married daughter and her husband living with you?"

"No; they're living on me."

You Can Make Excellent Cake With Fewer Eggs

Just use an additional quantity of Royal Baking Powder, about a teaspoon, in place of each egg omitted.

This applies equally well to nearly all baked foods. Try the following recipe according to the new way:

CREAM LAYER CAKE

Old Way	New Way
1 cup sugar	1 cup sugar
½ cup milk	1 cup milk
2 cups flour	2 cups flour
2 teaspoons Royal Baking Powder	4 teaspoons Royal Baking Powder
3 eggs	1 egg
½ cup shortening	2 tablespoons shortening
1 teaspoon flavoring	1 teaspoon flavoring

Makes 1 Large 2-Layer Cake

DIRECTIONS—Cream the sugar and shortening together, then mix in the egg. After sifting the flour and Royal Baking Powder together, two or three times, add it all to the mixture. Gradually add the milk and beat with spoon until you have a smooth pour batter. Add the flavoring. Pour into greased layer cake tins and bake in a moderately hot oven for twenty minutes. This cake is best baked in two layers. Put together with cream filling and spread with white icing.

Canada Offers 160 Acres Free to Farm Hands

Bonus of Western Canada Land to Men Assisting in Maintaining Needed Grain Production

The demand for farm labor in Canada is great. As an inducement to secure the necessary help at once, Canada will give

ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY ACRES OF LAND FREE AS A HOMESTEAD

and allow the time of the farm laborer, who has filed on the land, to apply as residence duties, the same as if he actually had lived on it. Another special concession is the reduction of one year in the time to complete duties. Two years instead of three as heretofore, but only to men working on the farms for at least six months in 1917. This appeal for farm help is in no way connected with enlistment for military service but solely to increase agricultural output. A wonderful opportunity to secure a farm and draw good wages at the same time. Canadian Government will pay all fare over one cent per mile from St. Paul or Duluth to Canadian destination. Information as to low railway rates may be had on application to

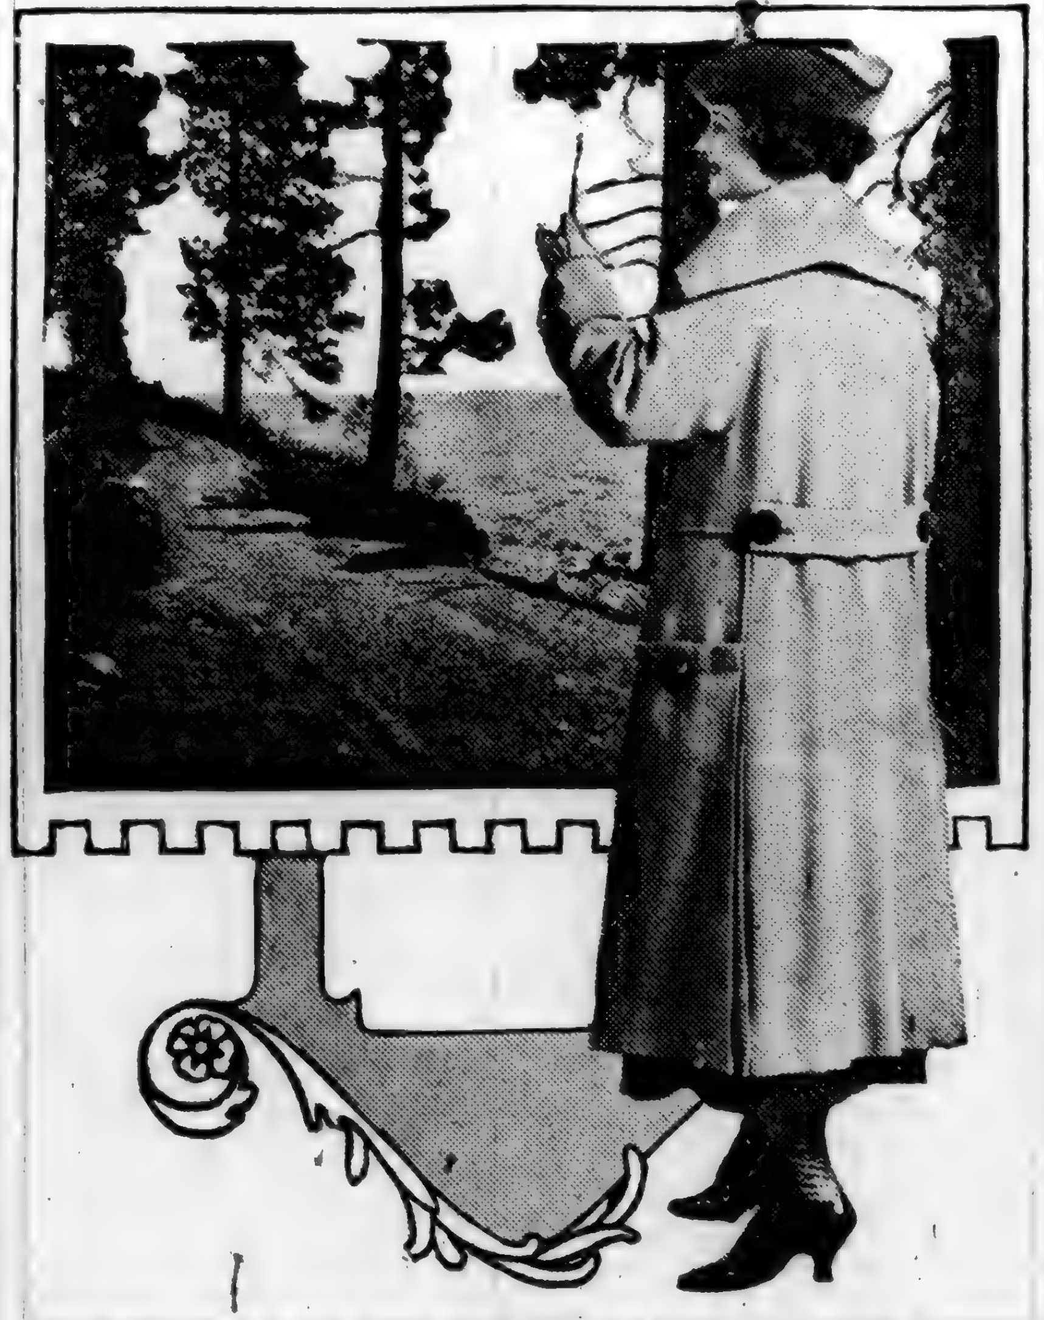
Authentic Styles in Spring Coats



The fabrics used in new spring coats are soft in texture with rich surfaces that give the new models a luxurious look. This is accented by the more than ample collars that are a style feature of the season and by the way in which coats are adjusted to the figure. Like dresses they are divided as to the silhouette; some of them hanging in straight lines from shoulder to hem and others showing some definition of the waistline. The latter often have gathered skirts.

Duvetyn, English velour, a light weight in Bolivia cloth, glove cloth, tricotine and wool jersey are especially appealing in the new models. They look cozy and soft without being too heavy for springtime wear. Belts, buttons and plaits are accented as decorative features and some models are handsomely braided. For younger women fancy pockets give a touch of youth and smart style.

A sensible and attractive coat for general service is shown in the picture. It is of wool velour with raglan sleeves and wide cape collar. It is belted across the back and front with a belt that does very little in the way of belting, but offers a good excuse for its negligence in this regard by making place for two very large buttons. There are big, inset pockets on the side panels, just where pockets are expected to be and two plaits at each side of the panel add their testimony to the good style of this model.

Collars to Complete Spring Costume

Collars and jabots must not be left out of the reckoning in completing the spring wardrobe, for costumes of any sort are not well finished without them. They are an essential part of the mode and sometimes the feature of greatest importance in the garment they finish. The best of the new models in lingerie blouses demonstrate the importance of collars for it is in this particular that they differ from blouses of past seasons.

Separate collars of organdie, swiss, batiste, georgette and crepe de chine are shown in a considerable variety of styles, with favor turning to those that are daintily finished rather than to much decoration. Tassels having attached themselves to everything else that women wear, find themselves particularly well placed on the new collars. A good example of this kind appears in the picture with a tassel depending from the point of a collar of batiste edged with narrow crochet lace. This is a long cape collar extended into points on the shoulders and shaped in the manner of a sailor collar at the front.

Some of these collars have a square cape across the back and remarkably dainty models are trimmed by rows of narrow ruffles with picot edges, running across the back. In georgette crepe the collars are usually hemstitched at the head of a moderately wide hem, but without other decoration.

Just now there is a great demand for high collars with jabots attached at the front made of net top laces. The jabots are long, falling nearly to the waistline, and they are full and frilly—just the prettiest things imaginable with new spring suits. But their prices are high, beginning at a dollar and a half for a fairly well made jabot of a net top lace and bravely advancing to five or seven dollars for fine embroidered net. There are cheaper grades but they are not well made. Among recent showings there are some jabots made of fine lace handkerchiefs, set on to a plain high collar of batiste or organdie.

A Medicine for Women

For Forty Years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has Relieved the Sufferings of Women.

It hardly seems possible that there is a woman in this country who continues to suffer without giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial after all the evidence that is continually being published, proving beyond contradiction that this grand old medicine has relieved more suffering among women than any other medicine in the world.

Mrs. Kieso Cured After Seven Month's Illness.

Aurora, Ill.—"For seven long months I suffered from a female trouble, with severe pains in my back and sides until I became so weak I could hardly walk from chair to chair, and got so nervous I would jump at the slightest noise. I was entirely unfit to do my house work, I was giving up hope of ever being well, when my sister asked me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I took six bottles and today I am a healthy woman able to do my own housework. I wish every suffering woman would try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and find out for herself how good it is."—Mrs. Karl A. Kieso, 596 North Ave., Aurora, Ill.

Could Hardly Get Off Her Bed.

Cincinnati, Ohio.—"I want you to know the good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I was in such bad health from female troubles that I could hardly get off my bed. I had been doctoring for a long time and my mother said, 'I want you to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.' So I did, and it has certainly made me a well woman. I am able to do my house work and am so happy as I never expected to go around the way I do again, and I want others to know what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me."—Mrs. Josie Copner, 1668 Harrison Ave., Fairmount, Cincinnati, Ohio.

"Chinese Knew the English."

An Englishman who was appointed to an important post in China married soon after. Among the recipients of the usual little cardboard boxes containing pieces of wedding cake was a Chinese merchant with whom the bridegroom had an outstanding account for goods supplied. After the honeymoon one of the first persons the newly-wedded husband met was his Celestial creditor.

"And how did you like the cake?" said the Englishman, laughingly, after the usual congratulations.

"Ah, ha," returned the Chinaman, with a cunning leer, "me no such big fool to eat him, sah, me put cakee in fire. Burn him up. Ha! he!"

"Oh, that's too bad," said the Englishman, very much hurt. "You might have tasted it at least, out of compliment to my wife and myself. Why didn't you?"

"Me too clute, sah," said the Celestial, with the same cunning smile. "You owe me monee, sah; sendee poison cakee; I eat him; I die; you no payee up. Houp-la! He! he! he! I know you Ingleesh!"

Getting Around a Difficulty.

Automobile manufacturers of the United States do not purpose allowing a serious matter, such as railway traffic congestion, to interfere with their business, if they can help it. When the big freight tieup first began to look formidable, automobile makers faced a prospective loss running into many millions of dollars, because, apparently, they could not secure deliveries. Not until then did it occur to them that, if an automobile was worth anything at all, it should be able to deliver itself. And now what is known to the trade as the "drive-away" has been inaugurated. The cars leave the factory and arrive at their destination under their own power. A drove of 62 cars was recently sent from Cleveland to Chicago in this way. It is expected that the "drive-away" will become a fashionable thing during the coming summer.—Christian Science Monitor.

Let folks step on your feet hereafter; wear shoes a size smaller if you like, for corns will never again send electric sparks of pain through you, according to this Cincinnati authority.

He says that a few drops of a drug called freezone, applied directly upon a tender, aching corn, instantly relieves soreness, and soon the entire corn, root and all, lifts right out.

This drug is a sticky ether compound, but dries at once and simply shrivels up the corn without inflaming or even irritating the surrounding tissue.

It is claimed that a quarter of an ounce of freezone obtained at any drug store will cost very little but is sufficient to remove every hard or soft corn or callus from one's feet. Cut this out, especially if you are a woman reader who wears high heels.

Parley Marks Insane.

On last Sunday evening considerable excitement was aroused out at the Fairview church north of town (being held in a small building on the Knight farm) just at the close of Christian Endeavor. Mr. Pearl (Parley) Marks who had been attending the meeting suddenly became deranged and very violent. He was noticed to be acting somewhat queer and Mr. Samuel Fellers spoke to him and Mr. Marks then tried to bite him and squeeze him, holding him up against the wall. Mr. Fellers called for help and several men then took hold of Mr. Marks and it required their combined strength to hold him. Both Sheriff Baltz and Doctor Farnham were sent for arriving about a half hour later. Dr. Farnham arrived first and gave Mr. Marks something to quiet him and soon after the sheriff arrived. The family did not want to sign an affidavit for the sheriff to take him to Auburn, so he went back to Auburn without him. Mr. Marks then went home and about seven or eight hours later after the effects of the sedative wore off he again became violent. Monday Mr. Fellers signed an affidavit at the request of Mrs. Marks and the sheriff came back and took Mr. Marks to Auburn and confined him in the county jail. Tuesday morning Mr. Farnham of St. Joe, and Dr. Hines and Carter of Auburn held an inquest and papers were made out adjudging him as suffering from acute mania.

Aid to High School Pupils.

The high school of Claremont, Cal., operates a lemon grove which for several years has yielded a revenue exceeding $500 annually after all expenses are paid. The work of cultivating the grove, pruning and caring for the trees, as well as picking and packing the fruit and conveying it to the commissioners, is all done by pupils of the high school under the direction of the instructor in agriculture. Each student is paid at the rate of $2 for each eight hours of work, and this enables a number of boys to be self-supporting while attending school.

LESS MEAT IF BACK AND KIDNEYS HURT

Take a glass of Salts to flush Kidneys if Bladder bothers you—Drink lots of water.

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well-known authority, because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish; clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region; rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease.

LADIES! LOOK YOUNG, DARKEN GRAY HAIR

Use the Old-time Sage Tea and Sulphur and Nobody will Know.

Gray hair, however handsome, denotes advancing age. We all know the advantages of a youthful appearance. Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When it fades, turns gray and looks streaked, just a few applications of Sage Tea and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundred-fold.

Don't stay gray! Look young! Either prepare the recipe at home or get from any drug store a 50-cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," which is merely the old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients. Thousands of folks recommend this ready-to-use preparation, because it darkens the hair beautifully, besides no one can possibly tell, as it darkens so naturally and evenly. You moisten a sponge or soft brush with it, drawing this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, its natural color is restored and it becomes thick, glossy and lustrous, and you appear years younger.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

Start Tomorrow and Keep It Up Every Morning

Get in the habit of drinking a glass of hot water before breakfast.

We're not here long, so let's make our stay agreeable. Let us live well, eat well, digest well, work well, sleep well, and look well. what a glorious condition to attain, and yet, how very easy it is if one will only adopt the morning inside bath.

Folks who are accustomed to feel dull and heavy when they arise, splitting headache, stuffy from a cold, foul tongue, nasty breath, acid stomach, can, instead, feel as fresh as a daisy by opening the sluices of the system each morning and flushing out the whole of the internal poisonous stagnant matter.

Everyone, whether ailing, sick or well, should, each morning, before breakfast, drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash from the stomach, liver and bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour bile and poisonous toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach. The action of hot water and limestone phosphate on an empty stomach is wonderfully invigorating. It cleans out all the sour fermentations, gases, waste and acidity and gives one a splendid appetite for breakfast. While you are enjoying your breakfast the water and phosphate is quietly extracting a large volume of water from the blood and getting ready for a thorough flushing of all the inside organs.

The millions of people who are bothered with constipation, bilious spells, stomach trouble; others who have sallow skins, blood disorders and sickly complexions are urged to get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from the drug store. This will cost very little, but is sufficient to make anyone a pronounced crank on the subject of inside-bathing before breakfast.

Two Years Illness Cured by Glando The Great Gland Tonic.

Mrs. Susan B. Taylor, 348 S. Williams St., Paulding, Ohio, said: "Two years ago I had a general break-down. I was nervous, languid, and hardly able to drag around. My liver and kidneys were sluggish and my complexion sallow. I felt sleepy and drowsy most all day, yet I did not sleep well at night. My heart fluttered terribly at times. I was in this miserable condition two years. A friend persuaded me to try Glando Tonic. The first treatment helped me. I am taking the sixth treatment and am feeling so well that I gladly recommend Glando Tonic to any one who suffers as I did."

Nearly every case of poor health is due to inactivity of the liver, kidneys and other glands. There is enough poison produced in the body every day to cause poor health if it is not eliminated. This poison can be removed only by keeping the glands in a good working condition. Some of the most common symptoms of inactive glands are headache, dizziness, indigestion, constipation, backache, pain or ache under the shoulder blade, biliousness, tonsilitis and quinsy. These conditions can be most quickly relieved by using Glando the Great Gland Tonic. It restores the glands to action, removes the impurities and builds up the entire system. Sold only in 50-cent treatments and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Manufactured by the Gland Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

PRAISES FEDERAL ROAD ACT

Secretary of Agriculture Houston Succinctly Points Out the Merits of Legislation.

Secretary of Agriculture Houston thus succinctly points out the merits of the Federal Aid road legislation approved July 11, 1916, under which Indiana will get Federal Aid of $2,109,000, after its own highway department is established:

"Of no less importance for agriculture and for the national development is the Federal Aid Road Act, approved July 11, 1916. This measure will conduce to the establishment of more effective highway machinery in each State, strongly influence the development of good road building along right lines, stimulate larger production and better marketing, promote a fuller and more attractive rural life, add greatly to the convenience and economic welfare of all the people, and strengthen the national foundations.

"This bill meets the requisites of sound legislation and practice. It provides for cooperation between the Federal and State government, and gives the people the advantage of the best thought of the experts of both jurisdictions. It contemplates the expenditure within five years from Federal and State sources of $160,000,000 in the country at large and of $10,000,000 additional out of the Federal treasury in the national forests. It will develop the requisite machinery for safe-guarding the expenditure of every dollar already provided by the people of the nation. It is estimated that at present the equivalent of $225,000,000 is being expended for roads and it is also stated that perhaps 50 per cent of this is uneconomically expended. It may be confidently predicted that, as a result of the act, vast improvements will be made in the expenditure of funds for roads and that the nation will have more ample guaranty that it will get its full value in this direction."

TORNADO SWEEPS SOUTHERN INDIANA; THIRTY-SEVEN DEAD AT NEW ALBANY

WILD SCENES FOLLOW DISASTER---WOMEN AND CHILDREN RUN THROUGH STREETS SEARCHING FOR MEMBERS OF FAMILIES WHILE MEN FIGHT FIRES.

STORM APPROACHES CITY WITHOUT WARNING

Damage to New Albany and Vicinity in Property Loss is Placed at $2,000,000--- Total Loss of Lives May Exceed Forty-two, While Injured List is Estimated at 150 People.

New Albany, Ind., March 26.—Forty-two persons are known dead, nearly 150 injured and property loss of $2,000,000 was the toll of the tornado which swept across southern Indiana late Friday evening and centered upon this city.

Thirty-seven persons are known to be dead here with an approximate list of 100 injured and $1,500,000 damage done to property.

Before the storm struck this city, as it came from the northwest, the following damage was done:

Holman—One dead, two injured, property loss of $10,000.

Jeffersonville—One dead, three injured, several homes razed.

Sullivan county—Two dead, fifteen hurt, twenty homes in ruins and $500,000 property loss.

Hendricks county—One injured, twenty homes destroyed and $50,000 damage.

District north of Decatur—Five injured, $25,000 damage to farm buildings.

Delaware county—One injured, $5,000 loss.

Howard county—Two injured, $1,000 property loss.

Corydon—Twenty injured and twenty homes damaged, loss of $10,000.

Flat Rock, Ill.—One killed, three injured and loss of $6,000.

The damage done on the Corydon pike, below New Albany, was very great, according to persons who were caught by the gale at this point. A. M. Floyd, manager of the Cumberland Telephone company, reported that hundreds of trees were uprooted from the soil and carried with great force through the air and littered over the ground in the wake of the storm as it moved in the direction of the city.

Many small homes along the pike were wrecked and scores of people injured.

The barn and all other outbuildings on the farm of Colonel Henry Bell, of Harrods Creek, was blown down and every tree in the yard was felled by the sixty-mile gale that swept Louisville and Jefferson county for a period of one minute.

Overturned trees completely blocked traffic on the pike and interurban lines between Louisville and Harrods Creek.

School House Destroyed.

In West Union, a suburb, a colored school building was destroyed. Twenty-five children were in the building.

By 7 o'clock the injured taken to St. Edward's hospital had filled all available rooms and wards and overflowed into the halls. St. Edward's is the only public hospital in the city and arrangements were made to transfer many of the injured to Louisville institutions, which had offered their facilities.

George Strack, councilman from the Fourth ward, was among the injured, he and his wife and six children were in ther handsome new $3,500 home when the tornado approviaced. All took refuge in the cellar. When the cyclone struck, the house was carried away bodily up the street. Mr. Strack suffered injured to his face and an ear was torn off. His brother, Henry, who was with him, suffered a broken shoulder.

Thirty-Seven Bodies Recovered.

New Albany, Ind., March 26.—Thirty-seven bodies had been recovered from the ruins of the tornado, which struck this city late Friday and the search was still under way. Three hundred homes were destroyed and 1,000 persons were without shelter. The devastated district, including about one-third of the city, is a half mile wide and two miles long. Martial law was in effect, two of the companies of the national guard ordered out by the governor having arrived. They had orders to shoot on sight in case of looting. One other company was on the way.

Although practically all of the homeless were taken care of during the night, many discomforts were suffered. Fires broke out frequently, one destroying three homes.

Loss $1,500,000

Estimates placed the loss at $1,500,000.

Hospitals were crowded to overflowing with the wounded, who were being taken care of by nurses and physicians from Louisville. Many of the injured were in a serious condition and physicians stated the death toll, from those now in hospitals would reach fifteen.

THE DEAD.

New Albany, Ind., March 26—The list of dead compiled from undertakers' certified lists includes:

Mrs. Martha E. Bunch, Albert Peyton, Miss Elsie Lopp, Miss Mary Botts, Mrs. Ella Ehringer, Mrs. Louise B. Didelot and three children, Agnes, Louise and Alberta; Edward Johns, jr., Gertrude Johns, Mary Spickert and infant, Mrs. Elizabeth Gudkez, Ruth Parish and infant, Charles McCaffrey, Mrs. Mary F. Lapp, Mrs. Jacob Fess, Mrs. Mary E. Lomax, Allen MacLean, Mrs. Caroline B. Canter, Rose Huff, 5 years old; Mrs. Victoria Zurschmiede, George Zuschmiede, Mrs. Louise C. Umbret, Edith Iona Gwirk, aged 5 years; John Wesley Davis, negro woman and two negro children.

Reliably reported dead from other sources:

Mrs. John Huff and two children, not including Rose Huff; Martha Ehringer, Clarence Moss, —— Mathews, girl 9 years old; Mrs. Elizabeth Metz, Charles Newkirk.

Many bodies were believed still buried in the debris, as no thorough search could be made of the district during the night. Estimates were that from ten to thirty bodies were still to be found.

On account of the limited hospital facilities, it was planned to transfer many of the injured to Louisville during the day.

Relief work was well under way. The Indianapolis Red Cross had taken over the details. J. J. O'Connor, director of the central division of the Red Cross arrived here early Saturday morning to make a survey of the situation and arrange to raise the needed funds.

Many Cities Offer Aid.

Many cities offered aid and relief funds were started. The tornado came down on the city from the northwest without warning. It followed an afternoon of light showers. The district of the city struck was where the workingmen of the city had their homes. Within a few seconds the entire district was in ruins.

Wild scenes followed the sweep of the storm. Women and children ran through the streets searching for lost members of the family, while men attempted to put out fires which broke out following the storm.

Mrs. Carolina Canter died at St. Edward's hospital with her six children at her bedside. Another child, Elizabeth, was in an adjoining room, suffering from severe wounds and probably will not recover.

Convicts Parol Streets.

Before the arrival of troops to patrol the tornado district, prisoners from Jeffersonville reformatory, a few miles away, were sworn in as deputies, and garbed in their prison raiment, the convicts patrolled the streets, watching for looters.

The Seymour company, of the Indiana national guard, was the first to arrive, reaching the city about 3 o'clock. Field hospital corps No. 1 arrived from Indianapolis an hour later.

The homeless were taken care of at the Calumet club, Y. M. C. A., Elks' home, in schools and other public buildings. Cots in halls or a few blankets thrown on the floor furnished a place of rest for many mothers and children. The men kept watch over what was left of their property, searched for missing members of the family and formed into little parties to search for the dead.

The Old DePauw Home Destroyed.

The fine old home of the late W. C. DePauw, recently converted into an apartment house by his widow, was struck by the cycyone and utterly demolished. Several of its inmates were seriously injured. This home was formerly one of the show places of the city, but in recent years the residence section had developed elsewhere.

Red Cross Aids.

Red Cross workers from Cincinnati under T. J. Edmonds aided in the relief work. The relief fund was started by citizens of New Albany with $3,000. Contributions poured in from all parts of Indiana and Louisville and Cincinnati.

INDIANA'S NEW LOAN SHARK LAW

Expected That It Will Protect Borrowers Against Exorbitant Charges for Small Loans.

IS EFFECTIVE BLOW AT USURY

Provisions of the Law in Full Force May 1—Lower Rates Already Adopted by Public Welfare Association of Indianapolis.

Indianapolis.—The effect of the new law to govern petty lending of money, and expected to be "loan shark proof," already is being felt.

Although the new law, which abolishes all preliminary charges for examination, does not go into effect until about May 1, the Indianapolis Public Welfare Loan association has put into effect the new rate—and also cut it.

The new law provides that loan companies may charge 3½ per cent a month—prohibiting all other charges which have been the source of violations of the old law.

New Rate in Effect.

The Indianapolis Public Welfare Loan association, which is the remedial organization effected by Indianapolis people to fight the loan shark evil, and whose offices are in the Occidental building, has started operation in conformity with the new enactment by making all small loans at the 3½ per cent rate, but on loans of $100 or more it put in a rate of only 3 per cent.

"We were responsible," said G. A. Efroymson, president of the association, "for the enactment of the law in 1913 which put a stop to rates ranging from 120 to 1,500 per cent, and we were able to get our own rates way below the legal rates and charges permitted by the old law. We expect, under the new 3½ per cent law, to lend money at still a lower rate. We shall have to feel our way to the new basis, and for a few months will charge the new legal rate on the smaller loans.

Expect Further Reduction.

"We expect, in a few months, to get the rate on the small loans down to 3 per cent also, and hope ultimately to get all below that figure. Under the new law, no other charges are permitted, and there can be no evasions such as have been practiced under the old law."

The directors of the Public Welfare association, whose function is, by legislation and competition, to eliminate usury, are: Charles W. Fairbanks, Judge J. A. Collins, Rev. Francis H. Gavisk, S. B. Kaufman, head of the Jewish charities; W. A. Mooney, G. A. Efroymson, Ralph Bamberger, Franklin Vonnegut and E. I. Lewis.

Cases Before Pardon Board.

A dozen or more celebrated Indiana murder cases will be brought before the state board of pardons at its session here. Some of them are appeals that have previously been heard by the board, in which clemency was refused.

One of the most notable cases will be that of the killing of Charles and John McQuade, October 7, 1912, at their farmhouse, eight miles southwest of Vernon. They were called to the door of their home at night and shot. Henry Romine was convicted and sentenced to prison for life. He asks a commutation of sentence to one of two to twenty-one years.

Two Colored Pleas.

The case of George Hill, a colored man, who killed his wife, Elizabeth, after being drunk for days and unable to obtain work, also will be heard. Hill shot himself after killing his wife. John S. Lairy of Logansport, trial judge, recommends clemency.

Arthur McPherson, a colored man, who killed Mike Hurt, after Hurt, in Indianapolis, had compelled McPherson to give him a "loan" of $5 and the two later engaged in an argument, also seeks a parole. Hurt, the papers show, had once served a term in a Kentucky prison for robbery.

James Nolan, while in a state of "alcoholic dementia," shot and killed his wife and then tried to shoot himself. The crime occurred in Allen county. Nolan did not realize what he had done for days after he was arrested. He now seeks clemency.

Another Allen county case is the appeal of William (Buster) Walker, who killed his wife and buried her and her clothes in his back yard at Fort Wayne. Neighbors found two graves in the back yard following the murder, and Walker later was convicted and sentenced for life. He has asked clemency before.

Some Other Cases.

Other notable cases which will come before the board again are those of Thomas Tucker, who killed a woman named Ada Bagwell, in a drunken carousal across the Ohio river from Louisville, Ky.

State Fair Plan Fails.

Legislation proposing to convert the state board of agriculture from a semi-private institution into a state institution came to naught when Governor Goodrich refused to receive a bill. It was proposed to have the members of the state board appointed by the governor upon the recommendation of the State Fair association; to have the board turn over the state fair grounds, valued at $1,000,000, to the state and to have the state assume the present indebtedness of about one hundred and seventy thousand dollars.

Admit They Sold Their Vote.

Fifty-three election workers of Evansville, Indianapolis, Gary and Frankfort admitted guilt in federal court when arraigned on charges of conspiracy to defraud the United States by corrupting elections in these four cities. The courtroom was packed with 153 defendants, who were indicted by a federal grand jury under the direction of Frank C. Dailey, special assistant to the United States attorney general.

One hundred and one defendants, including the most prominent politicians, refused to plead guilty. They either pleaded not guilty or attorneys attacked the indictment with demurrers.

Judge Anderson overruled all demurrers after hearing arguments. United States attorneys from Cincinnati and Columbus, O., were present to hear the arguments.

"The theory of the government," said Judge Anderson, "is that a conspiracy to debauch an election at which United States senators, representatives or presidential electors are voted for, is a conspiracy to defraud the United States."

Sets Dates for Trials.

He set dates for trials as follows: April 16, Evansville Republicans; May 1, Evansville Democrats; May 14, Indianapolis defendants; May 28, Frankfort defendants; June 4, Gary defendants.

In the first case called, that of Evansville negroes, almost threw the courtroom in an uproar.

"Are you not guilty?" asked Judge Anderson of Mose Clark, colored.

"I don't know, judge, I leave it to you," answered Mose. "George Ross gave me $2 for my vote. That's all I did."

"You're guilty," decided Judge Anderson.

A score of colored men of Evansville admitted they sold their votes and the usual price, they said, was $2.

Oil Inspectors Named.

Twenty-nine of sixty-one Republicans who will succeed the Democratic oil inspectors in the state have been appointed. Governor James P. Goodrich named Carl Mote of Indianapolis chief inspector at a salary of $3,500 a year. The average yearly income of an oil inspector derived from the retention of one-half the fees collected is about $1,250. Governor Goodrich expects the next legislature to abolish the jobs. Those appointed were: Portland, Mike Ackrom; Fort Wayne, Theo. Kischer; Terre Haute, Frank Sparks and Charles Lee; Garnett, O. H. Betts; Martinsville, Morton Breedlove; Delhi, W. A Broning; Lafayette, J. D. Bartlett; Laporte, T. O. Small; Alexandria, Calvin L. Zree; Huntington, J. J. Headley; Waldron, Frank Gleason; Greenfield, Arthur Thomas; Rushville, A. L. Riggs; Kokomo, Newman T. Miller; Lawrenceburg, Archibald Shaw; St. Paul, B. F. Mason; Vincennes, Bert Fuller; Bristol, H. Mechler; Loogootee, A. H. Perrod; Rochester, Albert Bitlers; Bluffton, George Arnold; Warren, Frank Fultz; Sharpsville, Frank Spaulding; Angola, Frank Rawley; New Albany, Walter Milligan; Mt Vernon, Abb Mackey; Bloomfield, Robert Thompson; Paoli, Samuel Braston.

Governor's Personal Friend.

Mr. Mote, who is the chief inspector, is well-known over the state because of his work as an Indianapolis newspaper man, has been a personal and political friend of Mr. Goodrich for several years. He was in Mr. Goodrich's headquarters during much of the campaign for the gubernatorial nomination. His home formerly was in Randolph county.

Mr. Mote's appointment comes as a surprise in political circles since the word has gone out that Henry A. Roberts, whose office as statistician was abolished by legislative act, probably would be appointed to the place. Mr. Roberts, it is said, is sure to receive an appointment in lieu of the elective job he is forced to surrender, but just what place he will finally land is now uncertain. Since the statistician's office will not be abolished until the close of the present fiscal year, which is next October, it is possible Mr. Roberts will become oil inspector when Mr. Mote steps aside. However, this is speculative.

Reorganization Determined.

In a statement issued Governor Goodrich says:

"I want no misunderstanding with regard to the future of this department. The present status of the department is only temporary. At the earliest possible opportunity I intend to renew my recommendation for the complete reorganization of the department in accordance with my recommendation to the Seventieth general assembly. In the meantime, the people of this state interested in economical and efficient government will have an opportunity to choose successors to some of the gentlemen in the last general assembly who persisted in a policy of opposing meritorious measures.

"I have no doubt with regard to what the people of this state want, but I hope they will take the precaution of insisting on knowing where candidates for the legislature next year stand on the various propositions that were before the Seventieth general assembly."

Breaks Record as Superintendent.

Breaking all records in length of service in the office of state superintendent of public instruction, Charles A. Greathouse has retired from that office at the end of his third two-year term. He was appointed by Thomas R. Marshall, then governor, to fill out the unexpired term of Robert J. Aley, who retired in 1910, to become head of the University of Maine and has, therefore, had six years on his own elections and five months of Aley's term. Only two others have enjoyed six-year term.

TO PUT AMERICA ON WAR FOOTING

EXECUTIVE ORDER TO RECRUIT NAVY TO FULL STRENGTH.

TO PROTECT OUR INDUSTRIES

President Exercises Limit of His Power As Commander-in-Chief of Nation's Fighting Departments—Navy Will Be Increased to 87,000 Men.

Washington, March 26.—President Wilson has taken steps to place the nation on a war footing. By executive order he directed that the navy be recruited without delay to full authorized war strength of 87,000 enlisted men. Taken in connection with emergency naval construction already ordered, this means that the president had exercised the full limit of his legal powers as commander in chief to prepare the navy for war.

For the army, the president directed that two new militory departments be created in the Atlantic coast region. The order means that the task of organizing whatever army congress may authorize will be divided among six department commanders instead of four in interests of speed and efficiency in mobilization.

The third step was to assume as a national duty the task of protecting American industries from domestic disorders in the event of hostilities. For this purpose eleven full infantry regiments, two separate battalions and one separate company of national guard were called back into the fedral service to act as national police in important districts. Supplemeting these troops a regiment of Pennsylvanal guard and two companies of Georgia infantry, en route home from the border for muster out, were ordered retained in the federal service.

The president's orders were made known in terse official statements issued by both the departments. No explanations accompanied them except the statement that reorganization of the military department effevtive May 11, was designed to facilitate decentralization of command.

Following is the executive order bringing the navy up to war strength:

"By virtue of the authority vested in the president by the act of congress approved August 29, 1916, entitled 'An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes' it is hereby directed that the authorized enlisted strength of the navy be increased to 87,000 men.

(Signed) "WOODROW WILSON."

The navy must enroll immediately approximately 26,000 men to reach the required strength. Secretary Daniels supplemented it yesterday with personal telegrams to newspaper editors all over the country urging them to aid the department in every way in their power to obtain the men.

Congress must determine the system under which an army is to be raised. Yesterday's action provides that elastic machinery, found necessary as a result of the recent border mobilization, enrolling and entraining of a great army whether rased as volunteer, by conscription or through a universal service bill. The object of the creation of the new departments of the northeast and southeast was to distribute among three central commanders the work of mobilising in the states most thickly populated and from which the greatest number of soldiers must come. The present eastern department directed the mobilization of approximately 80 per cent. of the 150,000 guardsmen sent to the border. With 440,000 men the maximum authorized strength of the national guard called out in addition to whatever volunteers might be summoned, the task would be too great for a single departmental organization because of the vastness of the supply problems involved.

NATIONAL GUARD ORDERED OUT BY WAR DEPARTMENT

Fourteen Regiments Called Into Service for Police Protection Purposes.

Washington, March 26.—Calling into the federal service of fourteen regiments of the national guard for police protection purposes was announced yesterday by the war department.

The department issued this statement:

"Many states have deemed it advisable to call out the national guard for police purposes of protection. As the necessity for such steps arises from issues which are more national than local, it has been deemed advisable by the president to call into federal service for the above mentioned purpose the following organizations of the national guard:

Massachusetts, Second and Ninth regiments; Pennsylvania, First and Third regiments; Maryland, Fourth regiment; District of Columbia, First separate battalion; Virginia, Second regiment; Vermont, Company B, First regiment; Connecticut, First regiment; New York, Second and Seventy-first regiments; New Jersey, First and Fifth regiments; Delaware, First battalion, First regiment.

"The following organizations which are now in the federal servce will not be mustered out: Thirteenth Pennsylvania; A and B companies of the First Georgia."

GREAT DEMAND FOR CANADIAN LAND

Americans Are Buyers and Becoming Settlers—Anxious to Get Cheap and Productive Land.

Reports are to hand that there will be a large influx of settlers from the United States into the Canadian West during the coming Spring. For a time there has been a falling off, on account of the fear of conscription, which of course was not possible, and which the Canadian Government gave every assurance would not be put into operation. In any case it would not affect the American settler, and more than that the man who was working on the farm, helping to produce the grain that goes to feed those who are at war, would not be affected.

The excellent yields of the Western Canada crops, and the high prices secured is having its influence on those looking for homes. The authenticated reports that have been sent out from time to time that this farmer and that farmer had paid for their entire farm holdings out of one crop has reached the ears of the man looking for a farm. When he hears that G. H. Beatty of Nanton, Alberta, had 679 bushels of wheat from 12 acres or an average of 56½ bushels to the acre, he becomes interested. When he learns that Sidney E. Phillips of Beddeford, Alberta, threshed ten hundred and fifty-three bushels of wheat, the average being 52½ bushels per acre, his interest is further aroused. Thos. Long of Lethbridge had 120 bushels of oats to the acre from a field of 25 acres, W. Quinn of Milk River had 6,094 bushels of wheat from 100 acres, an average of 60 bushels per acre, and Robert Tackaberry of Nobleford makes affidavit that he had an average of seventy-six bushels of wheat per acre from a field of 10.63 acres. Thos. Boulton of the same place makes affidavit that from fifty acres he had a yield of fifty-three bushels of wheat per acre. Newell J. Noble's affidavit of getting 54 bushels per acre from 1,000 acres stands out most strongly as evidence of what the wheat grower can do. This affidavit is strengthened by a paragraph stating that he had 122 bushels and 30 lbs. per acre from 394.69 acres. Mrs. Nancy Coe makes affidavit that on her farm at Nobleford she threshed six thousand one hundred and ten bushels of wheat from one hundred and fifteen acres, or fifty-three bushels and eight lbs. per acre, and from a flax field (stubble field) she got 20 bushels and 38 pounds per acre.

It cannot be said that these were freak yields because so many had such great success. When these reports are read, the man looking for a farm becomes convinced.

These are only a few of the reasons that will cause a large influx of American farmers into the Canadian West during the coming Spring.

The farmers now resident in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta are purchasing additional lands. Prices are low and Free homestead land can be had in many districts and the homesteader is welcome.—Advertisement.

KAZAN

KAZAN SAVES THE LIFE OF HIS MISTRESS AND THEN DECIDES TO BID HER FAREWELL FOREVER

Kazan is a huge and vicious Alaskan sledge dog, one-quarter gray wolf. He saves his master's life and is taken along when the master goes to civilization to meet his bride and return with her to the frozen country. Even the master is afraid to touch the dog, but Isobel, Kazan's new mistress, wins his devotion instantly. On the way northward McCready, a dog-team driver, joins the party and Kazan tries to attack him. Even Isobel finds it hard to quiet the dog. Kazan knows that McCready is bad all through. The others do not.

Later, after Thorpe and his wife had gone into their tent, it began to snow, and the effect of the snow upon McCready puzzled Kazan. The man was restless, and he drank frequently from the flask that he had used the night before. In the firelight his face grew redder and redder, and Kazan could see the strange gleam of his teeth as he gazed at the tent in which his mistress was sleeping. Again and again he went close to that tent, and listened. Twice he heard movement. The last time, it was the sound of Thorpe's deep breathing. McCready hurried back to the fire and turned his face straight up to the sky. The snow was falling so thickly that when he lowered his face he blinked and wiped his eyes. Then he went into the gloom and bent low over the trail they had made a few hours before. It was almost obliterated by the falling snow. Another hour and there would be no trail—nothing the next day to tell whoever might pass that they had come this way. By morning it would cover everything, even the fire, if he allowed it to die down. McCready drank again, out in the darkness. Low words of an insane joy burst from his lips. His head was hot with a drunken fire. His heart beat madly, but scarcely more furiously than did Kazan's when the dog saw that McCready was returning with a club! The club he placed on end against a tree. Then he took a lantern from the sledge and lighted it. He approached Thorpe's tent-flap, the lantern in his hand.

"Ho, Thorpe—Thorpe!" he called.

There was no answer. He could hear Thorpe breathing. He drew the flap aside a little, and raised his voice.

"Thorpe!"

Still there was no movement inside, and he untied the flap strings and thrust in his lantern. The light flashed on Isobel's golden head, and McCready stared at it, his eyes burning like red coals, until he saw that Thorpe was awakening. Quickly he dropped the flap and rustled it from the outside.

"Ho, Thorpe—Thorpe!" he called again.

This time Thorpe replied.

"Hello, McCready—is that you?"

McCready drew the flap back a little, and spoke in a low voice.

"Yes. Can you come out a minute? Something's happening out in the woods. Don't wake up your wife!"

He drew back and waited. A minute later Thorpe came quietly out of the tent. McCready pointed into the thick spruce.

"I'll swear there's someone nosing around the camp," he said. "I'm certain that I saw a man out there a few minutes ago, when I went for a log. It's a good night for stealing dogs. Here—you take the lantern! If I wasn't clean fooled, we'll find a trail in the snow.'

He gave Thorpe the lantern and picked up the heavy club. A growl rose in Kazan's throat, but he choked it back. He wanted to snarl forth his warning, to leap at the end of his leash, but he knew that if he did that, they would return and beat him. So he lay still, trembling and shivering, and whining softly. He watched them until they disappeared—and then waited—listened. At last he heard the crunch of snow. He was not surprised to see McCready come back alone. He had expected him to return alone. For he knew what a club meant!

McCready's face was terrible now. It was like a beast's. He was hatless. Kazan slunk deeper in his shadow at the low horrible laugh that fell from his lips—for the man still held the club. In a moment he dropped that, and approached the tent. He drew back the flap and peered in. Thorpe's wife was sleeping, and as quietly as a cat he entered and hung the lantern on a nail in the tent-pole. His movement did not awaken her, and for a few moments he stood there, staring—staring.

Kazan watched McCready as he entered, and suddenly the dog was on his feet, his back tense and bristling, his limbs rigid. He saw McCready's huge shadow on the canvas, and a moment later there came a strange piercing cry. In the wild terror of that cry he recognized her voice—and he leaped toward the tent. The leash stopped him, choking the snarl in his throat. He saw the shadows struggling now, and there came cry after cry She was calling to his master, and with his master's name she was calling him!

"Kazan—Kazan—"

He leaped again, and was thrown upon his back. A second and a third time he sprang the length of the leash into the night, and the babiche cord about his neck cut into his flesh like a knife. He stopped for an instant, gasping for breath. The shadows were still fighting. Now they were upright! Now they were crumpling down! With a fierce snarl he flung his whole weight once more at the end of the chain. There was a snap, as the thong about his neck gave way.

In half a dozen bounds Kazan made the tent and rushed under the flap. With a snarl he was at McCready's throat. The first snap of his powerful jaws was death, but he did not know that. He knew only that his mistress was there, and that he was fighting for her. There came one choking gasping cry that ended with a terrible sob; it was McCready. The man sank from his knees upon his back, and Kazan thrust his fangs deeper into his enemy's throat; he felt the warm blood.

The dog's mistress was calling to him now. She was pulling at his shaggy neck. But he would not loose his hold—not for a long time. When he did, his mistress looked down once upon the man and covered her face with her hands. Then she sank down upon the blankets. She was very still. Her face and hands were cold, and Kazan muzzled them tenderly. Her eyes were closed. He snuggled up close against her, with his ready jaws turned toward the dead man. Why was she so still, he wondered?

A long time passed, and then she moved. Her eyes opened. Her hand touched him.

Then he heard a step outside.

It was his master, and with that old thrill of fear—fear of the club—he went swiftly to the door. Yes, there was his master in the firelight—and in his hand he held the club. He was coming slowly, almost falling at each step, and his face was red with blood. But he had the club! He would beat him again—beat him terribly for hurting McCready; so Kazan slipped quietly under the tent-flap and stole off into the shadows. From out the gloom of the thick spruce he looked back, and a low whine of love and grief rose and died softly in his throat. They would beat him always now—after that. Even she would beat him. They would hunt him down, and beat him when they found him.

From out of the glow of the fire he turned his wolfish head to the depths of the forest. There were no clubs or stinging lashes out in that gloom. They would never find him there.

For another moment he wavered. And then, as silently as one of the wild creatures whose blood was partly his, he stole away into the blackness of the night.

CHAPTER IV.

Free From Bonds.

There was a low moaning of the wind in the spruce tops as Kazan slunk off into the blackness and mystery of the forest. For hours he lay near the camp, his red and blistered eyes gazing steadily at the tent wherein the terrible thing had happened a little while before.

He knew now what death was. He could tell it farther than man. He could smell it in the air. And he knew that there was death all about him, and that he was the cause of it. He lay on his belly in the deep snow and shivered, and the three-quarters of him that was dog whined in a grief-stricken way, while the quarter that was wolf still revealed itself menacingly in his fangs, and in the vengeful glare of his eyes.

Three times the man—his master—came out of the tent, and shouted loudly, "Kazan—Kazan—Kazan!"

Three times the woman came with him. In the firelight Kazan could see her shining hair streaming about her, as he had seen it in the tent, when he had leaped up and killed the other man. In her blue eyes there was the same wild terror, and her face was white as the snow. "Kazan—Kazan—Kazan!"—and all that part of him that was dog, and not wolf, trembled joyously at the sound of her voice, and he almost crept in to take his beating. But fear of the club was the greater, and he held back, hour after hour, until now it was silent again in the tent, and he could no longer see their shadows, and the fire was dying down.

Cautiously he crept out from the thick gloom, working his way on his belly toward the packed sledge, and what remained of the burned logs. Beyond that sledge, hidden in the darkness of the trees, was the body of the man he had killed, covered with a blanket. Thorpe, his master, had dragged it there.

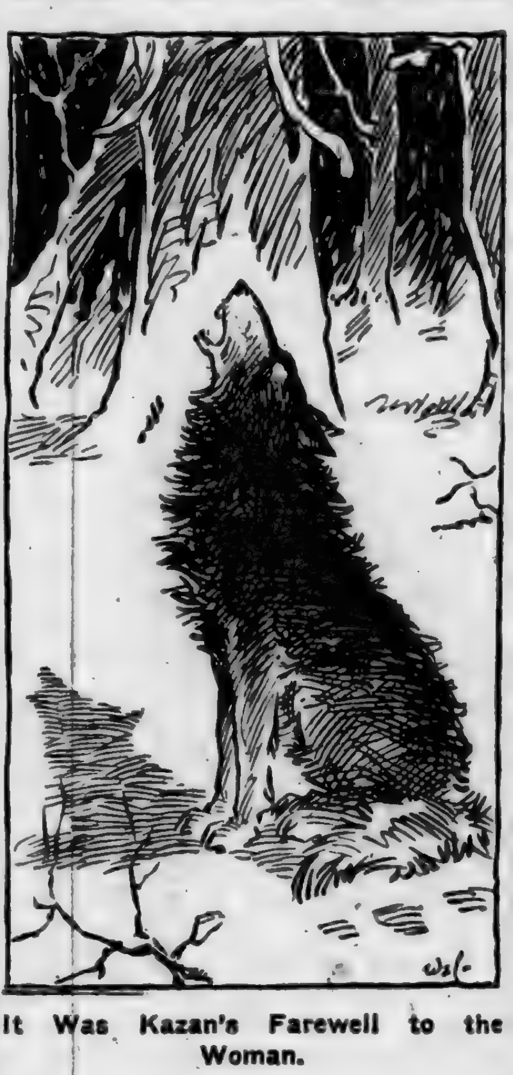
He lay down, with his nose to the warm coals and his eyes leveled between his forepaws, straight at the closed tent-flap. He meant to keep awake, to watch, to be ready to slink off into the forest at the first movement there. But a warmth was rising from out of the gray ash of the fire-bed, and his eyes closed. Twice—three times—he fought himself back into watchfulness; but the last time his eyes came only half open, and closed heavily again.

In his sleep he was leaping again at the end of his chain. His jaws snapped like castanets of steel—and the sound awakened him, and he sprang to his feet, his spine as stiff as a brush, and his snarling fangs bared like ivory knives. He had awakened just in time. There was movement in the tent. His master was awake, and if he did not escape—

He sped swiftly into the thick spruce, and paused, flat and hidden, with only his head showing from behind a tree. He knew that his master would not spare him. Three times Thorpe had beaten him for snapping at McCready. The last time he would have shot him if the girl had not saved him. And now he had torn McCready's throat. He had taken the life from him, and his master would not spare him. Even the woman could not save him.

Kazan was sorry that his master had returned, dazed and bleeding, after he had torn McCready's jugular. Then he would have had her always. She would have loved him. She did love him. And he would have followed her, and fought for her always, and died for her when the time came. But Thorpe had come in from the forest again, and Kazan had slunk away quickly—for Thorpe meant to him what all men meant to him now: the club, the whip and the strange things that spat fire and death. And now—

Thorpe had come out from the tent. It was approaching dawn, and in his hand he held a rifle. A moment later the girl came out, and her hand caught the man's arm. They looked toward the thing covered by the blanket. Then she spoke to Thorpe and he suddenly straightened and threw back his head.



It Was Kazan's Farewell to the Woman.

"H-o-o-o-o — Kazan — Kazan — Kazan!" he called.

A shiver ran through Kazan. The man was trying to inveigle him back. He had in his hand the thing that killed.

"Kazan—Kazan—Ka-a-a-a-zan!" he shouted again.

Kazan sneaked cautiously back from the tree. He knew that distance meant nothing to the cold thing of death that Thorpe held in his hand. He turned his head once, and whined softly, and for an instant a great longing filled his reddened eyes as he saw the last of the girl.

He knew, now, that he was leaving her forever, and there was an ache in his heart that had never been there before, a pain that was not of the club or whip, of cold or hunger, but which was greater than them all, and which filled him with a desire to throw back his head and cry out his loneliness to the gray emptiness of the sky.

Back in the camp the girl's voice quivered.

"He is gone."

The man's strong voice choked a little.

"Yes, he is gone. He knew—and I didn't. I'd give—a year of my life—if I hadn't whipped him yesterday and last night. He won't come back."

Isobel Thorpe's hand tightened on his arm.

"He will!" she cried. "He won't leave me. He loved me, if he was savage and terrible. And he knows that I love him. He'll come back—"

"Listen!"

From deep in the forest there came a long wailing howl, filled with a plaintive sadness. It was Kazan's farewell to the woman.

Kazan's real life story begins with the next installment. Just as the good and bad in man are constantly in conflict, so the dog and wolf strains are constantly in conflict in Kazan.

Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

MAKING FOOL OF HIMSELF.

"Because one man out of ten makes a fool of himself is no reason why the other nine should be deprived of the pleasure of drink." Replying to this proliquor argument, Clarence True Wilson, prohibition speaker, says:

"Yes; but it does not stop with one man's making a fool of himself. The trouble is that he makes, too often, a wild beast of himself. The trouble is that in that condition he is liable to make a corpse of somebody else. If one man out of ten, or one out of fifty, turned out by a saloon is for the time being a maniac, it is about time to shut up the saloon and let the other forty-nine men gratify their appetites in a less hazardous way. If one coat out of every ten made from South American wool were found to engender insanity in the wearer, would the public do right to pass a law, if necessary, preventing the manufacture or sale of such coats? If one man out of every ten that ate ice cream was found to be afflicted with an incurable disease that made him a danger to passers-by, how long before the law would throttle the ice cream restaurants?

"If liquor were an entirely new thing, just introduced into the country, and the effects were at once ascertained to be what they are known to be, a prohibitory law would be passed by acclamation."

BEER.

The Bremen Anti-Alcohol congress concluded that while whisky and brandy made a man crazy, beer tends to make him stupid. Doctor Forel of the University of Zurich says: "The drinking of beer has killed the ideals and ethics and has produced an incredible vulgarity." The reason for the sottishness is that each pint of beer contains a small quantity of pure alcohol, a percentage of lupulin, the active principle of hops, which acts very much like the poisonous principle of Indian hemp. At one time Indian hemp was used as a medicine, but it had to be abandoned on account of its varying and poisonous characteristics. Doctor Delbruck, another authority, says that beer and wine drinking countries such as France, Germany, Belgium and Bavaria, are more alcohol soaked than the whisky and brandy countries, and states that the beer danger is much greater than the spirit danger.

CONSUMPTION OF LIQUOR.

The internal revenue department of the United States has made public figures from its 1915 report which definitely and conclusively dispose of one of the stock arguments of the liquor interests, namely, that prohibition does not prohibit and that with the growth of dry territory the consumption of liquor increases. Notwithstanding indications on every hand to the contrary, journals of the liquor trade, anti-prohibition platform orators and writers of liquor publicity articles in the general press reiterate the statement that legislation has not had, and never will have, any effect upon the amount of liquor consumed. The statistics given out by the internal revenue department, to the effect that the internal revenue tax on spirituous liquors is decreasing at the rate of $1,250,000 every month, most effectively dispose of these falsifications.

MODERN WAY.

The newest and largest of United States battleships, the Mississippi, was christened with water from the Mississippi river. When people stop to consider the symbolism of the christening rite, religious or nautical, water is invariably chosen. In days gone by, spirituous liquors were generally supposed to give long life and to bring good luck, but the revelations of science have thoroughly exploded that belief. As is well pointed out, the christening of a ship with champagne or anything containing alcohol, the symbol of destruction and death, is an absurdity and a confession of ignorance.

CRIPPLES MINE INDUSTRY.

Startling testimony showing how the liquor traffic injures the mining industry was given in Washington, Pa., by the district attorney in equity proceedings against the Western Pennsylvania and Ohio Brewing companies and wholesale liquor dealers. Prominent coal men told of the wild revelry of their workmen following pay days and holidays that crippled their plants for days. There are no saloons in Washington county, and the district attorney is seeking to have the liquor men perpetually enjoined from doing business, through agents or otherwise, in the county.

Well, your cash drawer is being rifled. Your business servant is spending $7 to get one.

Ignorance Is Bliss.

A certain section foreman noticed that one of his men had rabbit meat in his pail. He questioned the man.

"Yes; me got lots rabbit," was the smiling reply.

"John," the foreman said, "you bring me rabbit tomorrow."

John promised he would, and the next day the foreman received his portion and ate it with relish. He also became curious as to where John got it.

"Say, John," he inquired, "where do you get all this rabbit?"

"Oh, that's easy," was the reply. "Rabbit him come to my house every night. Him go 'Meow, meow,' and I shoot him."—Connellsville Courier.

TAKES OFF DANDRUFF HAIR STOPS FALLING

Girls! Try This! Makes Hair Thick, Glossy, Fluffy, Beautiful—No More Itching Scalp.

Within ten minutes after an application of Danderine you cannot find a single trace of dandruff or falling hair and your scalp will not itch, but what will please you most will be after a few weeks' use, when you see new hair, fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair—growing all over the scalp.

A little Danderine immediately doubles the beauty of your hair. No difference how dull, faded, brittle and scraggy, just moisten a cloth with Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. The effect is amazing—your hair will be light, fluffy and wavy, and have an appearance of abundance; an incomparable luster, softness and luxuriance.

Get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any store, and prove that your hair is as pretty and soft as any—that it has been neglected or injured by careless treatment—that's all—you surely can have beautiful hair and lots of it if you will just try a little Danderine. Adv.

The Tendency of Every Man Is to Live up to His Name

By J. R. HAMILTON

Former Advertising Manager of Wanamaker's, Philadelphia

Wherever you find a good name you will find some man trying to live up to it. Character follows reputation far more quickly than reputation follows character. No one ever lost his good name except through folly.

What the world thinks of a man is the very best moral tonic that is sold under the label of philosophy.

And it is the same with merchandise as it is with men. The nameless thing is dreaded everywhere, while the thing with a good name is usually good because you expect it to be.

Men grow proud of their products. You will find a manufacturer saying, "This shoe has got to be good because it bears my name." You will find a canner saying, "I cannot use lye any more than I can tell a lie." You will find a clothing manufacturer saying, "If I am 'all wool,' my clothing must also be all wool."

And so it goes with every single product that carries a brand or a name. Whenever a man sets a standard, he strives to live up to it; and whenever the world sets that standard, he doubles the effort.

Which simply means, if you want the best, you must ask for the best. And every time you ask, you make it better.

There is hardly one of you readers who does not know the name of every good product on the market. From clothing to sugar and from hosiery to baking powder some good name is indelibly fixed in your mind, yet, when you ask for an article, most of the time you do not use that name.

And every time you fail to do so, you discourage the maker, you lower the standard for yourself and you allow some inferior thing to gain in strength and capacity.

Let this go home in your mind: You set the standard of merchandise. The maker follows your ideals. Adulterations creep in through your laxity. Whenever you ask for any old thing, you get it.

While you are reading the advertising news in this paper today, make up your mind to ask only for what you know to be good; to learn what is best and demand it and to have no parley with the nameless things of trade.

"Clean Up and Paint Up" A New Adventure. Will U help us thru?

In the local issue of this paper, last week, we had inserted a short notice in regard to a GENERAL CLEAN-UP DAY, but we are going to deviate somewhat from that plan. After studying the situation over and in conjunction with the editor of the NEWS who has kindly consented to the use of the columns of his paper and from reading literature from the "National Clean Up and Paint Up Campaign Bureau, St. Louis, Mo., have decided to go after this thing right.

In the first place we want to get away from the thought of just a "General Clean Up Day" and "Annual Bath" as I mentioned last week but to have that CLEAN UP SPIRIT continue indefinitely. The plan now is to have a good CLEAN UP WEEK to get things started right and then to have a committe appointed to see that the work is carried out properly and the plans are undertaken for permanent and visable results.

In order to accomplish any thing along this line requires a spirit of enthusiasm and a sense of intelligent co-operation. In St. Joe we have lodges, literary societies, culture clubs, churches, volunteer firemen, town board, business men and citizens, and from each of these we want a committee named that are to co-operate and make plans. During this week and by the first of next week we want these committee's to get together and appoint a time for this "Clean Up and Paint Up Campaign" to begin. As each committee is named they can report to the editor of the "News" and then a meeting night and place can be named for a meeting of a committee of the whole. Do not read this over and pass to the next news item, but stop and think how much good this will do our town, both in health and business, and get busy. If you want any further light on the subject call on either the editor or Dr. Farnham.

We want to do things that will make our neighbors sit up and take notice. If we do not watch out we will slowly degenerate and sooner or later have no town at all, but just a trading post. We do not just want to sell gasoline to people who are passing through to other towns to do their shopping, but we want to make things interesting and attractive enough that they will stop over and do their trading here. A little touch here and there will make a wonderful improvement.

It is now up to you and each of you. Get busy and let us hear from you. NOW is the appointed time, not EVENTUALLY. Call and talk it over with either of us.

Fred B. Leighty, Editor.
Dr. H. R. Farnham, Health Of.

Why That Lame Back?

Morning lameness, sharp twinges when bending, or an all-day backache; each is cause enough to suspect kidney trouble. Get after the cause. Help the kidneys. We Americans go it too hard. We overdo, overeat and neglect our sleep and exercise and so we are fast becoming a nation of kidney sufferers. 72% more deaths than in 1890 is the 1910 census story. Use Doan's Kidney Pills. Thousands recommend them.

"Every Picture Tells a Story."

J. H. Truebe, 342 Harvard St., Youngstown, O., says: "Three physicians said I was in such bad shape with kidney complaint I couldn't live six months. For nine months I was confined to the house, most of the time in bed. My limbs were terribly swollen and my back pained acutely. The kidney secretions were scanty and I had awful dizzy spells. Doan's Kidney Pills cured me and the cure has been permanent for years."

YES! LIFT A CORN OFF WITHOUT PAIN!

Cincinnati man tells how to dry up a corn or callus so it lifts off with fingers.

You corn-pestered men and women need suffer no longer. Wear the shoes that nearly killed you before, says this Cincinnati authority, because a few drops of freezone applied directly on a tender, aching corn or callus, stops soreness at once and soon the corn or hardened callus loosens so it can be lifted off, root and all, without pain.

A small bottle of freezone costs very little at any drug store, but will positively take off every hard or soft corn or callus. This should be tried, as it is inexpensive and is said not to irritate the surrounding skin.

If your druggist hasn't any freezone tell him to get a small bottle for you from his wholesale drug house.—adv.

ECONOMIC RULE IS UNBROKEN

The More Money, the Higher the Prices, Has Been the Law Since Earliest Days of World.

When the Indians of New England found plenty of seashells out of which to make their money called wampum, the more of it they would give for a blanket, basket, kettle, pair of moccasins or feather bonnet, says Girard in the Philadelphia Ledger.

The political economy of King Phillip's race and time still prevails. Every day this year the rest of the world has dumped a cool $3,000,000 of gold upon the United States. Now we have nearly $1,000,000,000 more gold than we had when the war began.

If we had cheap wheat, shoes, overcoats, vegetables, or coal after having added nearly 50 per cent to our gold hoard, we should be obliged to tear up all those fine-spun and dusty political economy books we were taught in school.

But the books stand, and rightly so, for the very paper they are printed on has been boosted upward by this colossal wave of gold. When this unmatched crest of yellow metal breaks and recedes after the war—well, we shall follow King Phillip and his wampum and pay a smaller amount of it for what we buy.

Ajax may have defied the lightning, but he never bumped into a "U" boat.

GOVERNOR URGES GOOD MEN CHOSEN

Says Delegates to the Constitutional Convention Must Be Men of High Character.

TO CORRECT PRESENT EVILS

Hands of Future Governors Should Be Freed From the Restrictions of the Old Constitution.

Indianapolis.—Men of the state must elect delegates to the coming constitutional convention who will view the business of the state as they would view their own private business, said Gov. James P. Goodrich in a speech before the "Efficiency" club at a meeting in the Chamber of Commerce building. They must elect men who will produce a constitution, under which the hands of future governors will not be tied in matters pertaining to economy and efficiency in the state's business, as now is the case.

The governor declared that the present system in Indiana permits partisan politics so to "hamstring" a governor that both economy and efficiency in the state's business are lost. It is unfair to an executive, he said, to hold him responsible for an efficient and economic administration, and yet so to limit his power over the public finances of the state that legislators, who sometimes "do not even know what is in an appropriation bill" really have more to say about the public expenditures than the governor.

Favors Budget System.

Goodrich favored the adoption of the budget system by the constitutional convention and he strongly urged such legislation as would make it possible for a governor to veto separate items in an appropriation bill.

The governor made it plain that he was not discussing partisan politics in the consideration of the state's affairs. He said he didn't know of any better system that could be devised to "hamstring" a governor than the present Indiana system, with reference to the appropriation bills, whereby they must originate in the house, then be sent to the senate and after that be sent to the governor for his approval, as a whole.

"Long Ballot."

H then took up the question of the state's "long ballot" and said the system of electing so many state officers is wrong. He said that a governor, lieutenant governor and a state auditor (the latter to be the check on the governor in all financial maters), should be elected by the people.

Sees Increased Efficiency.

The shortening of the ballot thus would bring about increased efficiency immediately, the governor contended, for it would take the pressure of partisan politics off many state offices that now go to men "to whom some political party is indebted."

Oil Inspectors.

Then he told how the state must pay $125,000 to $130,000 a year for practically no services from a great group of oil inspectors, because the bipartisan combine in the recent legislature "three times" defeated the Goodrich proposal to abolish this useless department and provide a "real inspection" under the state food and drug department. He prophesied the abolition of the oil department within two years.

Plan Big Summer School.

Word comes from the state university at Bloomington that many prominent educators who are connected with other higher institutions of learning have been engaged to work in the Indiana University Summer school this year. The faculty this summer will be even larger than ever before, an even 100 members having been engaged. The attendance of the summer school has grown steadily until last year it was 1,025.

Among those from other institutions who will be here this summer are Ray Allen, instructor in zoology, Kansas State Agricultural college; John Beyl, professor of education, Franklin college; Antonio Cirino, instructor in design, Providence School of Design, Providence, R. I.; Harvey Snyder Gruver, assistant superintendent of Indianapolis schools; Elizabeth Hoefman, home economics department, Northwestern college; Grace Linder, home economics department, Ohio State university; J. Z. A. McCaughn, assistant principal of Bloomington High school; Alma McCrum, Indiana State Normal school; Henry Noble Sherwood, professor of history, State Normal school, La Crosse, Wis.; Mrs. Ethel S. Tudor, home economics department, Baldwin-Wallace college; Clayton R. Wise, education, prinicpal of the Prescott district, Minneapolis, Minn.

Marvelous Telephone Shift.

"The greatest telephone engineering feat in the history of Indianapolis and the most successful 'cut-over' in the history of automatic telephony!" This expression accurately describes the event which took place in Indianapolis when the entire city system of the Indianapolis Telephone company was transferred from manual to automatic service. The "cut-over" was simultaneous in each of the company's exchanges, eight in number. Every subscriber in the city was given automatic service at the same time.

Postmasters Under Civil Service.

All troubles of Indiana statesmen, representatives and senators regarding the appointment of postmasters of the first and second classes are about to be removed forever, according to semi-official advices from Washington, received by Postmaster Springsteen. It is expected that when Mr. Springsteen's term as postmaster expires in May, he will continue to hold his position as long as he elects, by virtue of an order issued by President Wilson, which places all first and second-class post offices under the civil service system.

This order, however, does not mean that the incumbents will have to take a competitive examination along with countless scores of other applicants, for, it is understood, the order specifies that all incumbents who have conducted the affairs of their offices satisfactorily will be exempt from the civil-service examination.

Semi-Official Source.

This would mean that Postmaster Springsteen will have a lifetime job, if he so elects, or can retain his position until he resigns. Mr. Springsteen said he had received his information from a semi-official source while he was in Washington for the inauguration ceremonies; that President Wilson called the Indiana Democratic representatives to his office and announced an order placing all postmasters of first and second-class offices under the civil service commission.

Charge Money Spent Unlawfully.

The state board of accounts made public its findings in several cases where a number of officials insist that the charges made against them are illegal and decline to make settlement. Until a new act of the recent general assembly becomes effective the state board is authorized to make public only those cases where settlement is refused by the official. While the state board charges that these officials paid out sums of money unlawfully, there is no charge of crookedness.

A charge of $1,183.19 is made against R. H. Nelson, E. I. Bailey and H. E. Dodd, who were members of the school board of Beech Grove from August 1, 1914, to August 7, 1915. It is alleged that the board made excess payments to teachers, to members of the school board, illegal payments to teachers for attending institutes and making illegal payment of premiums on surety bonds. Members of the board contend that these several payments were within the law.

A charge of $115 is made against Frank Cunningham and Philip Herter, who were commissioners of Harrison county in 1914. Charges for small amounts, for which settlements have been refused, are made also against the following officials: William Hoddinott, city clerk at Washington in 1914; F. P. McKay, trustee of Liberty township, Shelby county; F. A. Wittmer, clerk of the circuit court of Pulaski county from 1906 to 1911; J. Frank Sproatt, trustee of Haddon township, Sullivan county, in 1913 and 1914; Owen Daly, trustee of Railroad township, Starke county, in 1913; Dr. H. M. Pell, secretary of the city board of health at Brazil in 1915 and 1916, and George H. Robbins, former treasurer of Shelbyville.

Delay Test Suit on Dry Law.

The question of a suit to test the constitutionality of Indiana's statewide prohibition law, which will become effective April 2, 1918, has not been determined by representatives of wet interests in the state, according to a statement made by George Shirts, attorney for the Indiana Brewers' association.

"There has been no decision about a suit," said Mr. Shirts. "If there is to be a test of the validity of the law, it is not improbable that a program of action will be outlined in a short time. Nothing definite has been done up to this time, however."

Interest has been awakened among representatives of the brewers by information that there is a movement among the drys in the state to institute a suit as a means of forestalling opponents of the law in their plan for a legal attack. It is understood that a friendly suit has been contemplated by drys living in Wells and Blackford counties. If such a suit is undertaken, it will be brought in the court of Judge W. H. Eichhorn of Bluffton.

Every Element Considered.

It has been apparent for some time that the opponents of prohibition are weighing very carefully every element that enters into the question of a suit to test the constitutionality of the law. The leaders of the wets are not ignoring the effect that such a suit might have on the campaign to incorporate a prohibition amendment in the new constitution of Indiana. They recognize that the bringing of a suit would only intensify the foes of liquor in their desire to get a prohibition amendment into the new constitution, and they recognize, also, that a decision overthrowing the prohibition law, if it came before the constitutional convention, might serve to give greater unity and solidarity to the constitutional prohibitionists.

Governor Accepts Engineers' Offer.

Gov. James P. Goodrich, replying to a letter from a special committee of the Indianapolis Engineers' club, which includes engineers from all parts of Indiana, heartily accepted their proposal for patriotic activities of the membership of the club and discussed the advisability of an immediate census of the engineers, skilled mechanics and technicians in the state in order that swift use of these men might be made in case of war with Germany.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER

TOUCAN BIRD.

"I wish you would tell me why you are so queer," said a little Fairy to the Toucan Bird.

"Don't you like me?" asked the Toucan Bird.

"Oh, yes," said the Fairy.

"But you said I was queer."

"You are queer. But I like queer things—at least some queer things and you are one of them. It would be very dull indeed if everything were just the same. We need queer creatures to make things interesting."

"Well, I'm glad of that," said the Toucan Bird.

"And are you going to tell me about yourself?" asked the Fairy.

"What shall I tell you—why I am queer? I can't very well tell you that—because to my mind I'm not queer. Now you are queer to me because you are so different."

"We both have wings," said the Fairy, for she was a little afraid that the toucan bird might be hurt because she had called him queer.

"Our wings are very different, though," said the Toucan Bird. "And we speak differently. It's strange that I can understand you. I can't understand children."

"That's because I'm a fairy. We can always be understood. We love birds and animals and know all their languages."

"How nice?" said the Toucan Bird.

"But you're not telling me why you are queer—even though you are so nice."

"Thank you, thank you," said the Toucan Bird. "I'm very glad I'm nice. I'm still more glad that you like me. I've always wanted to be liked by a fairy." And he stuck his head way out as he said so.

"Won't you tell me then?" said the little Fairy coaxingly.

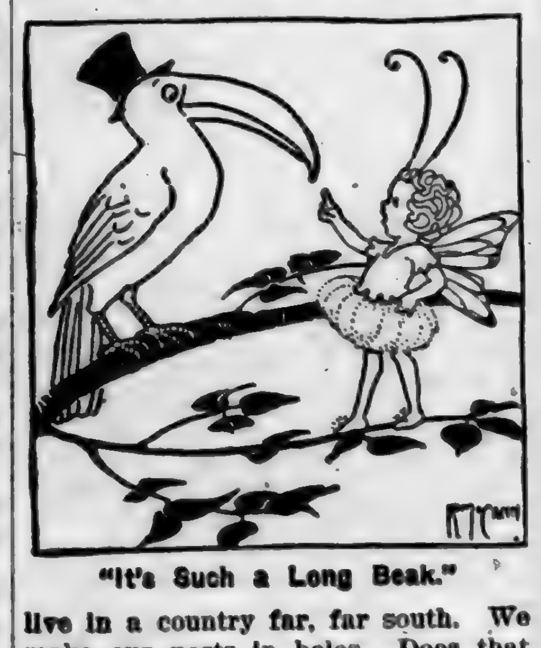
"You see, the trouble is I can't tell you why I'm queer, when I don't think I am."

"Perhaps you will answer my questions then," said the Fairy.

"That I will be delighted to do," said the Toucan Bird.

"Then why do you shoot your head way out as you fly about? It seems as if your neck were so much longer than it is, and no one can think of your body when you shoot your head out so very far. Often I've thought maybe you hadn't a body as all I've noticed is your head. Perhaps not so much your head as your long beak. It's such a very long beak. Is that why you are named toucan?"

"No," said the Toucan Bird. "I am given that name, and all my family have the same name because of our shrill voices and queer cries. And if you want to know more about us we live in a country far, far south. We make our nests in holes. Does that interest you?"



"It's Such a Long Beak."

"Yes," said the Fairy, "it certainly does. But still I must know why you put your head forward and stick your bill so far out when you are flying about. That is what makes you so queer—that, and the fact that you have such a long bill."

"I will tell you," said the Toucan Bird. "You see it's always well to have one's beak ahead. Then we won't miss anything good to eat. Suppose we walked or flew backwards. Then our tails would always arrive first and maybe by the time our beaks got there, nothing would be left to eat."

"Are you so fond of food then?" asked the Fairy.

"We like it—but that is not the only reason."

"Tell me some more," said the Fairy.

"We see with our heads."

"Don't you see with your eyes?" asked the Fairy.

"Of course, of course," said the Toucan Bird. "But our eyes are in our heads. We can't shove our eyes ahead of us—but we can shove our heads and our eyes go to! Isn't that a fine reason? We see everything so quickly then."

"It's a splendid reason," said the Fairy, "and one that I had never thought of."

"And," added the Toucan Bird, "our bodies always follow—but it's with our eyes we see and with our beaks that we eat. So we hurry with our heads and our bodies come along after—not too much after, though!"

And as the Fairy watched the Toucan Bird flying around shooting his head out in such a queer way she thought of his excellent reasons for doing so!

Poultry Hints.

"Why is the rooster always called the kind of the flock?"

"That's easy. The hens are merely lay members."

MOTHER! LOOK AT CHILD'S TONGUE

If cross, feverish, constipated, give "California Syrup of Figs."

A laxative today saves a sick child tomorrow. Children simply will not take the time from play to empty their bowels, which become clogged up with waste, liver gets sluggish; stomach sour.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, or your child is listless, cross, feverish, breath bad, restless, doesn't eat heartily, full of cold or has sore throat or any other children's ailment, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," then don't worry, because it is perfectly harmless, and in a few hours all this constipation poison, sour bile and fermenting waste will gently move out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again. A thorough "inside cleansing" is ofttimes all that is necessary. It should be the first treatment given in any sickness.

Beware of counterfeit fig syrups. Ask at the store for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly printed on the bottle. Adv.

Natural Sequence.

The teacher had explained that a monarchy is a country ruled by a king. The pupils got that.

"If the king dies, who rules?" the teacher continued.

"The queen," someone suggested.

"Yes, under certain circumstances which I shall explain later, that is true. Now, if the queen dies, who takes her place?"

Only one boy ventured to reply.

"The Jack," he said.—The Web.

KAZAN

By James Oliver Curwood

Copyright by the Bobbs-Merrill Company.

FOR THE FIRST TIME IN HIS LIFE KAZAN KNOWS THE JOY OF PERFECT FREEDOM — HOW HE MEETS THE CHALLENGE OF A HUGE GRAY WOLF.

Kazan is a vicious Alaskan sledge dog, one-quarter gray wolf. He saves his master's life and is taken along when the master goes to civilization to meet his bride and return with her to the frozen country. Even the master is afraid to touch the dog, but Isobel, Kazan's new mistress, wins his devotion instantly. On the way northward McCready, a dog-team driver, joins the party. Inflamed by drink on the following night, McCready beats the master insensible and attacks the bride. Kazan flies at the assailant's throat and kills him. Fearful of punishment, the dog takes to the woods and wild life.

CHAPTER IV.—Continued.

After that cry Kazan sat for a long time on his haunches, sniffing the new freedom of the air, and watching the deep black pits in the forest about him, as they faded away before dawn. Now and then, since the day the traders had first bought him and put him into sledge-traces away over on the Mackenzie, he had often thought of his freedom longingly, the wolf blood in him urging him to take it. But he had never quite dared. It thrilled him now. There were no clubs here, no whips, none of the man-beasts whom he had first learned to distrust, and then to hate. It was his misfortune—that quarter-strain of wolf; and the clubs, instead of subduing him, had added to the savagery that was born in him. Men had been his worst enemies. They had beaten him time and again until he was almost dead. They called him "bad," and stepped wide of him, and never missed the chance to snap a whip over his back. His body was covered with scars they had given him.

He had never felt kindness, or love, until the first night the woman had put her warm little hand on his head, and had snuggled her face close down to his, while Thorpe—her husband—had cried out in horror. He had almost buried his fangs in her white flesh, but in an instant her gentle touch, and her sweet voice, had sent through him that wonderful thrill that was his first knowledge of love. And now it was a man who was driving him from her, away from the hand that had never held a club or a whip, and he growled as he trotted deeper into the forest.

He came to the edge of a swamp as day broke. For a time he had been filled with a strange uneasiness, and light did not quite dispel it. At last he was free of men. He could detect nothing that reminded him of their hated presence in the air. But neither could he smell the presence of other dogs, of the sledge, the fire, of companionship and food, and so far back as he could remember they had always been a part of his life.

Here it was very quiet. The swamp lay in a hollow between two ridge mountains, and the spruce and cedar grew low and thick—so thick that there was almost no snow under them, and the day was like twilight. Two things he began to miss more than all others—food and company. Both the wolf and the dog that was in him demanded the first, and that part of him that was dog longed for the latter. To both desires the wolf blood that was strong in him rose responsively. It told him that somewhere in this silent world between the two ridges there was companionship, and that all he had to do to find it was to sit back on his haunches, and cry out his loneliness. More than once something trembled in his deep chest, rose in his throat, and ended there in a whine. It was the wolf howl, not yet quite born.

Food came more easily than voice. Toward midday he cornered a big white rabbit under a log, and killed it. The warm flesh and blood was better than frozen fish, or tallow and bran, and the feast he had gave him confidence. That afternoon he chased many rabbits, and killed two more. Until now, he had never known the delight of pursuing and killing at will, even though he did not eat all he killed.

But there was no fight in the rabbits. They died too easily. They were very sweet and tender to eat, when he was hungry, but the first thrill of killing them passed away after a time. He wanted something bigger. He no longer slunk along as if he were afraid, or as if he wanted to remain hidden. He held his head up. His back bristled. His tail swung free and bushy, like a wolf's. Every hair in his body quivered with the electric energy of life and action. He traveled north and west. It was the call of early days—the days away up on the Mackenzie. The Mackenzie was a thousand miles away.

He came upon many trails in the snow that day, and sniffed the scents left by the hoofs of moose and caribou, and the fur-padded feet of a lynx. He followed a fox, and the trail led him to a place shut in by tall spruce, where the snow was beaten down and reddened with blood. There was an owl's head, feathers, wings and entrails lying here, and he knew that there were other hunters abroad besides himself.

Toward evening he came upon tracks in the snow that were very much like his own. They were quite fresh, and there was a warm scent about them that made him whine, and filled him again with that desire to fall back upon his haunches and send forth the wolf-cry. This desire grew stronger in him as the shadows of night deepened in the forest. He had traveled all day, but he was not tired. There was something about night, now that there were no men near, that exhilarated him strangely. The wolf blood in him ran swifter and swifter. Tonight it was clear. The sky was filled with stars. The moon rose. And at last he settled back in the snow and turned his head straight up to the spruce tops, and the wolf came out of him in a long mournful cry which quivered through the still night for miles.

For a long time he sat and listened after that howl. He had found voice—a voice with a strange new note in it, and it gave him still greater confidence. He had expected an answer, but none came. He had traveled in the face of the wind, and as he howled, a bull moose crashed through the scrub timber ahead of him, his horns rattling against the trees like the tattoo of a clear birch club as he put distance between himself and that cry.

Twice Kazan howled before he went on, and he found joy in the practice of that new note. He came then to the foot of a rough ridge, and turned up out of the swamp to the top of it. The stars and the moon were nearer to him there, and on the other side of the ridge he looked down upon a great sweeping plain, with a frozen lake glistening in the moonlight, and a white river leading from it off into timber that was neither so thick nor so black as that in the swamp.

And then every muscle in his body grew tense, and his blood leaped. From far off in the plain there came a cry. It was his cry—the wolf-cry. His jaws snapped. His white fangs gleamed, and he growled deep in his throat. He wanted to reply, but some strange instinct urged him not to. That instinct of the wild was already becoming master of him. In the air, in the whispering of the spruce tops, in the moon and the stars themselves, there breathed a spirit which told him that what he had heard was the wolf-cry, but that it was not the wolf call.

The other came an hour later, clear and distinct, that same wailing howl at the beginning—but ending in a staccato of quick sharp yelps that stirred his blood at once into a fiery excitement that it had never known before. The same instinct told him that this was the call—the hunt-cry. It urged him to come quickly. A few moments later it came again, and this time there was a reply from close down along the foot of the ridge, and another from so far away that Kazan could scarcely hear it. The hunt-pack was gathering for the night chase; but Kazan sat quiet and trembling.

He was not afraid, but he was not ready to go. The ridge seemed to split the world for him. Down there it was new, and strange, and without men. From the other side something seemed pulling him back, and suddenly he turned his head and gazed back through the moonlit space behind him, and whined. It was the dog-whine now. The woman was back there. He could hear her voice. He could feel the touch of her soft hand. He could see the laughter in her face and eyes, the laughter that had made him warm and happy. She was calling to him through the forests, and he was torn between desire to answer that call, and desire to go down into the plain. For he could also see many men waiting for him with clubs, and he could hear the cracking of whips, and feel the sting of their lashes.

For a long time he remained on the top of the ridge that divided his world. And then, at last, he turned and went down into the plain.

CHAPTER V.

Leader of the Pack.

All that night Kazan kept close to the hunt-pack, but never quite approached it. This was fortunate for him. He still bore the scent of traces, and of man. The pack would have torn him to pieces. The first instinct of the wild is that of self-preservation. It may have been this, a whisper back through the years of savage forebears, that made Kazan roll in the snow now and then where the feet of the pack had trod the thickest.

That night the pack killed a caribou on the edge of the lake, and feasted until nearly dawn. Kazan hung in the face of the wind. The smell of blood and of warm flesh tickled his nostrils, and his sharp ears could catch the cracking of bones.

Not until broad day, when the pack had scattered far and wide over the plain, did he go boldly to the scene of the kill. He found nothing but an area of blood-reddened snow, covered with bones, entrails and torn bits of tough hide. But it was enough, and he rolled in it, and buried his nose in what was left, and remained all that day close to it, saturating himself with the scent of it.

That night, when the moon and the stars came out again, he sat back with fear and hesitation no longer in him, and announced himself to his new comrades of the great plain.

The pack hunted again that night, or else it was a new pack that started miles to the south, and came up with a doe caribou to the big frozen lake. The night was almost as clear as day, and from the edge of the forest Kazan first saw the caribou run out on the lake a third of a mile away. The pack was about a dozen strong, and had already split into the fatal horseshoe formation, the two leaders running almost abreast of the kill, and slowly closing in.

With a sharp yelp Kazan darted out into the moonlight. He was directly in the path of the fleeing doe, and bore down upon her with lightning speed. Two hundred yards away the doe saw him, and swerved to the right, and the leader on that side met her with open jaws. Kazan was in with the second leader, and leaped at the doe's soft throat. In a snarling mass the pack closed in from behind, and the doe went down, with Kazan half under her body, his fangs sunk deep in her jugular. She lay heavily on him, but he did not lose his hold. It was his first big kill. His blood ran like fire. He snarled between his clamped teeth.

Not until the last quiver had left the body over him did he pull himself out from under her chest and forelegs. He had killed a rabbit that day and was not hungry. So he sat back in the snow and waited, while the ravenous pack tore at the dead doe. After a little he came nearer, nosed in between two of them, and was nipped for his intrusion.

As Kazan drew back, still hesitating to mix with his wild brothers, a big gray form leaped out of the pack and drove straight for his throat. He had just time to throw his shoulder to the attack, and for a moment the two rolled over and over in the snow. They were up before the excitement of sudden battle had drawn the pack from the feast. Slowly they circled about each other, their white fangs bare, their yellowish backs bristling like brushes. The fatal ring of wolves drew about the fighters.

It was not new to Kazan. A dozen times he had sat in rings like this, waiting for the final moment. More than once he had fought for his life within the circle. It was the sledge-dog way of fighting. Unless man interrupted with a club or a whip it always ended in death. Only one fighter could come out alive. Sometimes both died. And there was no man here—only that fatal cordon of waiting white-fanged demons, ready to leap upon and tear to pieces the first of the fighters who was thrown upon his side or back. Kazan was a stranger, but he did not fear those that hemmed him in. The one great law of the pack would compel them to be fair.

He kept his eyes only on the big gray leader who had challenged him. Shoulder to shoulder they continued to circle. Where a few moments before there had been the snapping of jaws and the rending of flesh there was now silence. Soft-footed and soft-throated mongrel dogs from the south would have snarled and growled, but Kazan and the wolf were still, their ears laid forward instead of back, their tails free and bushy.

Suddenly the wolf struck in with the swiftness of lightning, and his jaws came together with the sharpness of steel striking steel. They missed by an inch. In that same instant Kazan darted in to the side, and like knives his teeth gashed the wolf's flank.

They circled again, their eyes growing redder, their lips drawn back until they seemed to have disappeared. And then Kazan leaped for that death-grip at the throat—and missed. It was only by an inch again, and the wolf came back, as he had done, and laid open Kazan's flank so that the blood ran down his leg and reddened the snow. The burn of that flank-wound told Kazan that his enemy was old in the game of fighting. He crouched low, his head straight out, and his throat close to the snow. It was a trick Kazan had learned in puppyhood—to shield his throat, and wait.

Twice the wolf circled about him, and Kazan pivoted slowly, his eyes half closed. A second time the wolf leaped and Kazan threw up his terrible jaws, sure of that fatal grip just in front of the forelegs. His teeth snapped on empty air. With the nimbleness of a cat the wolf had gone completely over his back.

The trick had failed, and with a rumble of the dog-snarl in his throat, Kazan reached the wolf in a single bound. They met breast to breast. Their fangs clashed and with the whole weight of his body, Kazan flung himself against the wolf's shoulders, cleared his jaws, and struck again for the throat hold. It was another miss—by a hair's breadth—and before he could recover, the wolf's teeth were buried in the back of his neck.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

The Day of Lilies

A LILY grows mysteriously, pushing up its solid weight of stem and leaf in the teeth of gravity. Shaped into beauty by secret and invisible fingers, the flower develops we know not how. But we do not wonder at it. Every day the thing is done; it is Nature, it is God. We are spiritual enough at least to understand that. When the soul rises slowly above the world pushing up its delicate virtues in the teeth of sin, shaping itself mysteriously into the image of Christ, the power is not of man.

There is no day so inspiring, not only to the Christian, but to the careless and indifferent, as Easter, bringing, as it does, so much of God's love even in the display of Almighty power, to an otherwise hopeless life, in making possible the assurance of a world and a life beyond the grave.

Easter "Joy" Is Christian

CRUEL critics may insist that the name "Easter" is of pagan origin; but, be that as it may, the "Joy" which comes with the day of Resurrection is purely Christian.

The Harvest Home and Thanksgiving day festivals may be enjoyed and honored by all who have faith in a Supreme Being, or Creator, but Christmas and Easter point directly back to the World's Redeemer, the God-man—Christ Jesus.

Easter is the queen of church feasts. It commemorates the greatest of all victories—the triumph of life over death.

"If," writes St. Paul, "Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith also is vain."

A bird cage is only a mass of gilded wire, silent and useless so long as empty.

By and by, when the feathered songster lives within it, and the thrilling, rippling music issues from its little throat, the purpose of the cage becomes apparent.

So men must be mere animals in our sight, do we not discern the Holy Spirit dwelling within each human breast.

Man is finite, but there is an infinite in him which longs for immortality, for God and heaven.

Our hearts refuse to give up their dead forever. Broken-hearted, faint and lonely, yet, at the grave's edge, the memory of the good who have loved us gives us courage out of our sorrow and tears to defy death to divide us forever. Our minds will not believe that when this life is over there is nothing beyond.

The spark of divinity which in each of us whispers that somehow, somewhere, sometime, we shall be ourselves again and be reunited with our beloved ones.

The Easter bells tell their full story only to those who know the way to the cemetery, and who often kneel by the green mound and place garlands on the pure white marble.

"He lives!" "They live!" sing the chimes from many steeples.

The "he" means always Jesus. The "they" means the faces you and I mourn so deeply today.

Take comfort. What our hearts tell us of future reunion in Christ is more than confirmed by holy church and Holy Writ.

The rest of paradise, the felicity of heaven, will more than compensate for all pain of the present.

Parent and child, husband and wife, brother and sister, friend and friend, will clasp hands once more, never to be torn asunder.

The church in her hymn teaches:

When we at death must part,
  Not like the World's our pain,
But one in Christ, and one in heart
  We part to meet again.

The Old Testament, speaking by the Patriarch Job, sings: "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth. And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: Whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another."

The New Testament, speaking with authority by the mouth of our blessed Lord, says: "I am the resurrection and the life, saith the Lord; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die."—James Henry Darlington, in Easter Joys.

Continuing Ancient Custom.

The woman who appears Easter morning in her favorite pew with a "perfect dream" of a hat and a gown fresh from the confines of its basting threads is simply repeating the attitude of devotion assumed by her sister of the church in the early centuries of Christianity. Gregory of Nyssa, in the last days of the fourth century, wrote vividly of the gay and joyous crowds that in his far bishopric honored the festival of the resurrection with bright and fresh attire, as their Oriental minds dictated. The manner of the celebration has had more permanence than Gregory's writing. There is today a wider circulation of milliners' bills than of those pious books.

New Kind of Easter Eggs.

When the eggs have been boiled hard and cooled, write names or draw flowers, rabbits and the like on them with a stub pen dipped in melted max. Then drop the eggs carefully into any dye that can be boiled, and let them boil two minutes. Wipe each egg with an oiled rag, and you will have some very attractive souvenirs with white names or designs upon colored backgrounds.

The Gospel of Pity.

It has seemed to me, peering into the enigma of existence, that the Gospel of Pity, the installation of Loving Kindness as a cardinal axiom, the attempt to save failures, the finding of a niche even for the unsuccessful, were principles never so well expressed as in the teachings of Christ.—Sir H. H. Johnston.

With the Fingers! Says Corns Lift Out Without Any Pain

Sore corns, hard corns, soft corns or any kind of a corn can shortly be lifted right out with the fingers if you will apply directly upon the corn a few drops of freesone, says a Cincinnati authority.

It is claimed that at small cost one can get a quarter of an ounce of freesone at any drug store, which is sufficient to rid one's feet of every corn or callus without pain or soreness or the danger of infection.

This new drug is an ether compound, and while sticky, dries the moment it is applied and does not inflame or even irritate the surrounding tissue.

This announcement will interest many women here, for it is said that the present high-heel footwear is putting corns on practically every woman's feet.

The Culture Club was very pleasantly entertained Wednesday afternoon by Mrs. Harry Farnham. The occasion being guest day for Mothers. Miss Pearl Shurts gave a very interesting talk on "Information the Source of Power"; her talk showed how very necessary it was to be well informed along any line of work to be able to succeed. Discussion following. The Secretary read the minutes of the last meeting. At roll call 18 members responded. Mrs. Belle Keesler was a guest, four little folks were also present. Mrs. Amanda Spayd and Mrs. Elizabeth Mumma were chosen Captains for a membership contest to last until August. The former's side to be known as the "Yellow", and the latter as the "White". Two Years Illness Cured by Glando The Great Gland Tonic.

Mrs. Susan B. Taylor, 348 S. Williams St., Paulding, Ohio, said: "Two years ago I had a general break-down. I was nervous, languid, and hardly able to drag around. My liver and kidneys were sluggish and my complexion sallow. I felt sleepy and drowsy most all day, yet I did not sleep well at night. My heart fluttered terribly at times. I was in this miserable condition two years. A friend persuaded me to try Glando Tonic. The first treatment helped me. I am taking the sixth treatment and am feeling so well that I gladly recommend Glando Tonic to any one who suffers as I did."

Nearly every case of poor health is due to inactivity of the liver, kidneys and other glands. There is enough poison produced in the body every day to cause poor health if it is not eliminated. This poison can be removed only by keeping the glands in a good working condition. Some of the most common symptoms of inactive ganlds are headache, dizziness, indigestion, constipation, backache, pain or ache under the shoulder blade, biliousness, tonsilitis and quinsy. These conditions can be most quickly relieved by using Glando the Great Gland Tonic. It restores the glands to action, removes the impurities and builds up the entire system. Sold only in 50-cent treatments and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Manufactured by the Gland Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Mrs. Laura Acton called on Mrs. Fred Martin, Thursday afternoon.

A. E. Miller and wife were Ft. Wayne visitors, Saturday and Sunday.

The W. C. T. U. Meeting which was announced for next Friday, April 6, was held last Friday afternoon. The topic was "The present day tendencies". The change was made owing to the fact that some of the schools were being out about that date. Everyone that could be called was notified of the change by phone.

A gentleman by the sir name of Bell, who taught school in Newville 35 years ago, was the guest of Harry Hendershott and wife, Sunday. When this gentleman taught school here the building which is now the vacated saw mill was the school house. We did not learn the present residence of our former school teacher.

PAINS SHARP AND STABBING

Woman Thought She Would Die. Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Ogdensburg, Wis.—"I suffered from female troubles which caused piercing pains like a knife through my back and side. I finally lost all my strength so I had to go to bed. The doctor advised an operation but I would not listen to it. I thought of what I had read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and tried it. The first bottle brought great relief and six bottles have entirely cured me. All women who have female trouble of any kind should try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. ETTA DORION, Ogdensburg, Wis.

Physicians undoubtedly did their best, battled with this case steadily and could do no more, but often the most scientific treatment is surpassed by the medicinal properties of the good old fashioned roots and herbs contained in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If any complication exists it pays to write the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., for special free advice.

A Turn Down.

The late Jack London once arranged with a magazine editor to do a short story for $1,500.

"And," said London, hopefully, the deal being concluded, "can I have the money now, before I write the stuff?"

The editor gave a laugh and a shrug. "Your stories, my dear London," he said, "are immortal, but you, unfortunately, are not."

THICK, GLOSSY HAIR FREE FROM DANDRUFF

Girls! Beautify Your Hair! Make It Soft, Fluffy and Luxuriant—Try the Moist Cloth.

Try as you will, after an application of Danderine, you cannot find a single trace of dandruff or falling hair and your scalp will not itch, but what will please you most, will be after a few weeks' use, when you see new hair, fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair—growing all over the scalp.

A little Danderine immediately doubles the beauty of your hair. No difference how dull, faded, brittle and scraggy, just moisten a cloth with Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. The effect is immediate and amazing—your hair will be light, fluffy and wavy, and have an appearance of abundance; an incomparable luster, softness and luxuriance, the beauty and shimmer of true hair health.

Get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any store and prove that your hair is as pretty and soft as any—that it has been neglected or injured by careless treatment—that's all. Adv.

Peterson Bros.: I was afflicted with a very severe sore on my leg for years. I am a teamster. I tried all medicines and salves, but without success. I tried doctors, but they failed to cure me. INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

LESSON FOR APRIL 8

JESUS RAISED LAZARUS FROM THE DEAD—EASTER LESSON.

LESSON TEXT—John 11:17-27, 43, 44. (Read 17 to 44).

GOLDEN TEXT—Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection, and the life.—John 11:25.

This lesson occurred about two months before the crucifixion, Jesus being in Bethabara at the time of this call (See John 10:40; 1:28). There are four recorded cases of resurrection from the dead: Jairus' daughter (Matt. 9), the son of the widow of Nain (Luke 7), Lazarus, and also Jesus after his crucifixion (John 20).

I. The Lesson of Unbelief. Bethany, the home of Lazarus, is on the southeastern slope of Mt. Olivet, two miles from Jerusalem. Christ and his disciples were on the east side of the Jordan, having been driven there by the hostility of the Jews (John 10:31). He purposely delays his stay in that place that this event might give an opportunity for the manifestation of his wonder-working power. This delay was in face of his supernatural knowledge that Lazarus' sickness had been fatal, for he said plainly to his disciples, "Lazarus is dead." Philosophers have often called death a sleep, but always one from which there was no awakening; hence the skepticism of these sisters is not surprising. (1) They limited the power of Jesus to his person—"If thou hadst been here." (2) They also limited his power to a certain place, "If thou hadst been here" (v. 21).

II. The Lesson of Pain. The suffering of these sisters produced sacrifice and self-devotion. Suffering brings blessing to others. It is also a means of self-culture. Suffering drives us to the Christ, and reveals to us the unrealized side of Christ's character (v. 25). Jesus is often never more kind than when he seems to be least kind. In the midst of her skepticism and pain Jesus gave Martha a new and glorious thought about the resurrection. "I am the resurrection and the life." If we desire that, all we have to do is to get Jesus himself (I John 5:12). Resurrection has to do with the body, and life has to do with the spirit (John 17:3). All will ultimately experience resurrection, but only those who believe on him receive life (John 3:36). There is a resurrection of life and there is a resurrection of damnation (John 5:29). Martha answered, "Yea Lord, I believe that thou art the Christ, the Son of God." It is all-important that we should really believe that (John 20:31; I John 5:1-5).

III. The Lesson of Love. Love always manifests itself in deeds. Martha secretly and quickly arose and left the wailing friends to go and meet the waiting Master. "The Master is come." He still comes, and calls to us, and, if, like Martha, we spring up gladly to meet him, he will fill our lives with blessing and joy. Jesus came to these sisters individually (vv. 21, 28). He had entered the danger zone in order to be there (v. 8), and it was Thomas, the doubter, who wanted to accompany him (v. 16). "Jesus wept," not with the wailing of professional mourners, but with the silent, grief-stricken sisters.

IV. The Lesson of Power. Jesus had let natural causes work to their fullest extent. Coming to the tomb, Jesus said (v. 39), "Take ye away the stone." It was four days after the death of Lazarus before he came forth. Jesus was soon to die and rise in three days after his entombment. The stone had to be removed from the tomb of Lazarus; it rolled itself away from the tomb of Christ. The restrictions which Christ placed upon his exercise of power, viz., that he allowed Lazarus to die, to be buried, and his body to reach the point of putrefaction, and not to come forth until Jesus himself, in his body, was present at the tomb, emphasizes the lesson of the restraint of power for the glory of God. Out of such extreme circumstances of seeming impossibility God manifested his glory (Rom. 8:28).

Browning has given us a wonderfully imaginative picture of his renewed life on earth:

And oft the man's soul springs into his face
As if he saw again and heard again
His sage that bade him rise,
And he did rise.

The effect of the miracle was twofold. Many who were present believed on Jesus, others did not.

Some went to the Pharisees to relate what they had seen, only to meet with rebuff.

The remainder of the chapter is occupied with the plotting of the Pharisees against Jesus, and from this grave there stretches the shadow of a cross upon the path of Jesus.

This miracle ranks next to Christ's own resurrection as a demonstration of immortality.

Are we on resurrection ground? Has the stone been rolled away?

The resurrection of Lazarus proves that our earthly existence is only temporary, that our real existence is eternal.

IN THE LIMELIGHT

FOE OF COUNTERFEITERS

The chief of the secret service, John J. Flynn, recently told of a young man who confined his operations to federal reserve notes of low denominations with temporary success. His paper was so good that at first it was even suspected that he might surreptiously have obtained some of the genuine paper used by the government, but this was soon proved to be not so. His reproduction of "ones" and "fives" was so good that by traveling about the country he was able to pass out many of his spurious bills, to the great annoyance of business men and with considerable profit to himself, but his "fate was the common fate of all his ilk." He played the game once too often.

This young man walked into a jeweler's store in Santa Cruz, Cal., and bought a fountain pen for $2.50. He paid for it with one of his counterfeit bills, walked out with his new pen and seven good dollar bills and a silver half dollar, a transaction giving all the profit he could make in one operation.

But he had not acted his part very well. He forgot to test the pen and fuss over it before putting it in his pocket, as an honest purchaser would have done, and that failure, or oversight, aroused the suspicion of the clerk. He took the bill to the bank, where it was pronounced bad.

The clerk rushed to the station, where he found a train ready to pull out. He found in the last car the young man making notes with his new pen and looking as unconcerned as if oblivious of the fact that in his pocket were more of his homemade notes. After a couple of days' reflection in close confinement, he told where his plant was concealed in Los Angeles, and it has been confiscated. He is in prison.

DIRECTS NAVAL AFFAIRS

Josephus Daniels, secretary of the navy, is one man on whom the eyes of the whole world are turned today.

From Raleigh, N. C.—an inland city—he was made President Wilson's navy chief. He has to start the building of these newly authorized warships—three battleships, one battle cruiser, three scout cruisers, fifteen destroyers, thirty-eight submarines, one destroyer tender and one submarine tender.

He has to finish these other naval vessels previously authorized—seven battleships, five battle cruisers, seven scout cruisers, thirty-five destroyers, forty-eight submarines, one destroyer tender, one submarine tender, one hospital ship, one fuel ship, one ammunition ship, and one gunboat.

With shipbuilding being overworked, with a shortage of skilled labor, he has to get all of these vessels built efficiently and quickly. At his disposal have been placed specific appropriations of $517,389,447.08, which is by far the largest sum ever appropriated for the United States naval establishment.

NEWSPAPER MAN PROMOTED

George R. Cooksey, former newspaper man, was named and sworn in as assistant to the secretary of the treasury, a post revived after more than the lapse of a century. Mr. Cooksey succeeds Tench Coxe of Pennsylvania, who was assistant to the secretary of the treasury when Alexander Hamilton held that post in the administration of George Washington.

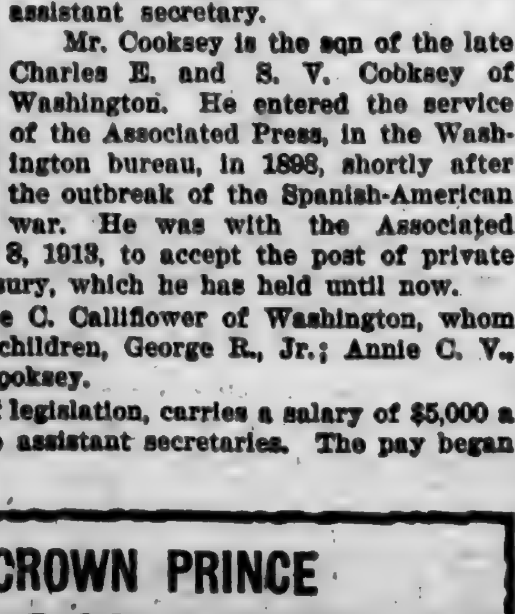
Washington is the home and birthplace of Mr. Cooksey. He has been private secretary to the secretary of the treasury for more than three years, succeeding Byron R. Newton on the latter's advancement to the post of assistant secretary.

Mr. Cooksey is the son of the late Charles E. and S. V. Cooksey of Washington. He entered the service of the Associated Press, in the Washington bureau, in 1898, shortly after the outbreak of the Spanish-American war. He was with the Associated Press for 15 years, resigning October 8, 1913, to accept the post of private secretary to the secretary of the treasury, which he has held until now.

His wife was formerly Miss Annie C. Calliflower of Washington, whom he married in 1907. They have five children, George R., Jr.; Annie C. V., Charles F., Harry J., and Joseph E. Cooksey.

The post, as revived by the present legislation, carries a salary of $5,000 a year, the same amount that is paid to assistant secretaries. The pay began March 1.

HE WHIPPED CROWN PRINCE



Being a German-American, but at the same time a loyal American citizen, Otto H. Krause isn't boasting about his extraordinary feat, but there is a bit of pride in his manner when he says to his friends, "I am probably the only man in the world who ever licked the kaiser.

"Of course, it is some years ago when Kaiser Wilhelm and I had our little fisticuff," said Mr. Krause, who is a hotelkeeper and a former chief of Hackensack's fire department. "I really didn't know that the boy I whipped in 1866 was the German prince, and I was so angry at the time I did not care. My grandfather, Herman Vogel, was at that time in charge of the city waterworks at Potsdam, and he gave me a bouquet of flowers to take to the palace. On my way a lad about my age, six years, grabbed the flowers from my hand and proceeded to run away. I caught him, took the flowers, and whipped him. The nurse came to his rescue, and it was then I was told the boy was the crown prince. Being a boyish prank, the offense was overlooked, but I never forgot it, and naturally the kaiser's great war power just now impresses it more deeply on my mind."

Mr. Krause is now in his fifty-eighth year. He was at one time in the German navy. He has lived in Hackensack, N. J., for 30 or more years.

Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

BOOZER MUST GO.

Employers' liability laws in the different states have been an important factor in bringing about the present attitude of the business world toward liquor. Corporation managers, investigating the causes of accidents in mill and factory, on railroad and waterway, found a large proportion directly due to the drink habit. Hence the reason for the famous "rule G" of the American Railroad association and the total abstinence requirements of big business generally.

In line with this comes the Michigan Workmen's Compensation Mutual of Detroit, which, we learn from the Western Underwriter, an insurance journal, has sent its members a circular letter on the booze question. We quote:

"The careful consideration of all moral hazards involved under the compensation law reveals the fact that booze is the biggest.

"Booze is so insidious in its workings that even though an employee may not be actually under the influence of liquor at the time of an injury, a very large percentage of all injuries are either directly or indirectly due to the drinking of liquor.

"Therefore, we are earnestly recommending to all of our members that the service of the booze fighter, whether he drink much or little, be dispensed with as promptly as possible, providing he cannot be made to see the error of his ways and become an abstainer."

LIQUOR BUSINESS AND LABOR.

"The average workingman fears being out of a job more than he does going to hell, and the liquor interests have capitalized on this fear," said Rev. Charles Stelzle before the Federal Council of Churches. And he pointed out that:

"If the money now invested in the liquor business were invested in the average American industry it would give employment to four times as many workingmen, who collectively would receive four times as much in the form of wages, and four times as much raw material would be required than is now the case in the liquor business."

Mr. Stelzle said that the number of workingmen employed in the liquor business has been greatly exaggerated. The liquor interests purchase annually only about an average of $10 worth of produce from each farmer in the United States.

FAIRNESS TO TAXPAYERS.

A Muncie (Ind.) judge the other day made the novel ruling that a man not only has a right to lie down in the saloon where he becomes intoxicated but that it is his duty to do so instead of going to some other place. The victim in the case had explained to the judge that after drinking at the bar he felt the drunken stupor coming on and so hurried to the jail, only a block away, and gave himself up, because he did not suppose the saloonkeeper would permit him to sleep off his intoxication on his premises. "So you thought you'd go to the jail and let the taxpayers take care of you?" queried the court. "The next time you get drunk I want you to lie down right there in the saloon and not become a public expense."

INCREASES VALUES.

From report of state auditor of North Carolina.

Value of real estate:

1908	$287,459,602.00
1914	360,079,952.00

Value of personal property:

1908	$174,926,792.00
1914	213,324,039.00

Taxes collected:

1908	$ 2,616,439.62
1914	4,683,875.13

"North Carolina," says Governor Craig, "has never known in all her history a period of greater prosperity than that through which she has passed since prohibition was adopted. Real estate in all the cities and larger towns has greatly enhanced in value and every line of business has prospered."

SCIENTIST FEARS ALCOHOL.

I fear alcohol as I fear the bacillus found associated, probably casually, with anesthetic leprosy, because it does away with the danger signals with which we are provided through our senses—pain, irritability, hunger, fatigue. Each one of these may be rendered less insistent by the use of alcohol, but the real causes of these sensations are left unaffected or may even be increased by the use of the very agent that blunts the "senses" through which they are manifested.—Prof. G. Sims Woodhead of Cambridge University, England.

PROHIBITION GAINING.

Twenty-five states and the territory of Alaska are now dry. Utah has the honor of coming in with the first half of our 48 United States. Indiana, only 20 hours behind, has the honor of leading the second section of the dry procession. Wyoming, New Mexico and Minnesota have submitted the question to the people, and prohibition campaigns are on in Missouri, Ohio, Texas, Wisconsin, Illinois, Florida, Pennsylvania, Nevada. Indeed, there is hardly a state not already dry which is not more or less stirred

HAD A CAPITAL OF $400

In Six Years He Was Well Off

An Alberta farmer, who had borrowed from a loan company, in remitting to them the last payment on his mortgage, decided to give them the history of his experience, on a Manitoba farm. It was that of many another farmer, and for the benefit of those who contemplate a change the liberty is taken of reproducing it.

"I will give you here a brief summary of my experience since coming here six years ago. I was a new hand at farming, my trade being meat-cutting and butchering. My capital was $400, which was a first payment on my quarter section (160 acres). Most of my stock, harness, implements, etc., were bought at sales, all "on time," necessarily. The buildings on the place were about as good as nothing and had either to be rebuilt or replaced entirely. There were 26 acres broken, and very badly farmed, bringing poor returns the first year." After mentioning a number of mischances, he says: "In spite of all these drawbacks, I have done well. I consider my farm worth $3,500 to $4,000. I have four head of horses, 12 of cattle, over 400 purebred Buff Orpington chickens and 125 turkeys, besides implements, harness, etc., to run my place. I have a well 170 feet deep with an inexhaustible supply of water. The well with pump cost me $400. I have built a $125 chicken house and put up nearly $50 worth of poultry fencing; have built root cellars to hold over 3,000 bushels of potatoes and other vegetables. As to income, I raise about ten acres of garden and roots annually which net from $600 to $1,000 total. I generally sell from 20 to 40 tons timothy hay which brings from $6 to $14 per ton. My grain is most all used on the farm except a few hundred bushels sold to the neighbors for seed. My four milk cows bring in from $50 to $80 each (counting calf). Last year 80 hens laid 600 dozen eggs which averaged more than 25 cents a dozen (I always work for winter egg production). The surplus hens were sold in spring, dressed at $1 each. My turkeys average $2.50 each in fall. By having vegetables to feed my young cattle, the two-year-old steers bring $75 each in spring."—Advertisement.

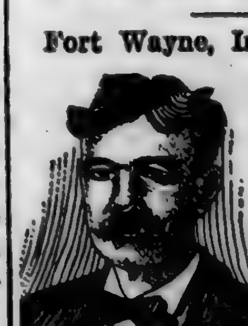
To Prevent Old Age Coming Too Soon!

"Toxic poisons in the blood are thrown out by the kidneys. The kidneys act as filters for such products. If we wish to prevent old age coming too soon and increase our chances for a long life, we should drink plenty of pure water and take a little Anuric," says the world-famed Dr. Pierce of Buffalo, N. Y.

When suffering from backache, frequent or scanty urine, rheumatic pains here or there, or that constant tired, worn-out feeling, the simple way to overcome these disorders is merely to obtain a little Anuric (double strength) from your nearest druggist and you will quickly notice the grand results. You will find it many times more potent than lithia, and that it dissolves uric acid as hot water does sugar.



A PROMINENT MAN SPEAKS

Fort Wayne, Ind.—"I caught a severe cold which settled on my lungs. I coughed continually. Had very little rest day or night. I soon lost weight and grew weak. I thought when it became warmer this would leave me but it did not. Four month had passed without my getting any better, although I doctored and took medicine. Everyone thought I was going into consumption and I firmly believed so myself. I then learned of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. I had only taken it a few days when I began to get relief and three bottles completely cured me. I gained in weight and was once more hale and hearty."—GEORGE F. AICHELE, 68 Portage Ave.

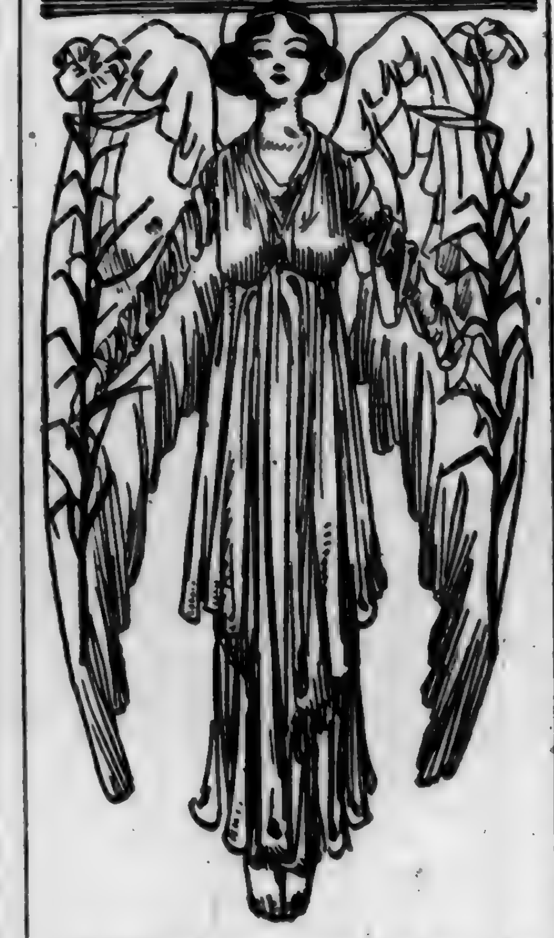
A LEGEND OF THE EASTER LILY



THE aisles in velvet darkness lay,
The pews in shadow slept,
The rows of gilded organ pipes
Majestic silence kept.
Through painted panes a moonbeam stole
Along the altar rail,
And showed upon the steps a group
Of kneeling angels pale.

Each swung a censer as she prayed,
And alabaster cup,
Star-shaped and lined with purest gold,
With fragrance brimming up.
And as she swayed it to and fro,
Behold! The chilly gloom
Grew soft with airs of Paradise,
And heavy with perfume.

A sound disturbed the seraph band,
They vanished in the night;
But one forgot and left behind
Her censer pearly white.
So when the worshipers arrived,
The church was dim and stilly,
But lo! upon the altar steps
They found an Easter lily.

—Minna Irving in Lippincott's Magazine.

TIME FOR RESOLUTIONS

Easter Is the Season to Start Anew and Stop Worrying Over Little Things That Can't Be Helped.

THERE'S just one thing for resolutions to thrive, and that is at the Easter season, when everything is starting anew. There's something in the very atmosphere that strengthens puny, timid resolutions.

For instance, suppose that you resolve to stop worrying over little things that can't be helped, and then wake up on the morning of the day you had planned to make a lettuce bed and put out your spring flowers, to find a vigorous snowstorm in full session. Be still for a minute and listen to that redbird in your neighbor's cherry trees, piping shrilly: "Here! here! With you—with you—with you!"

To be sure he is with us, the blessed dash of crimson joy, and he will save the day for that resolution. Suppose you've resolved to stop grouching, and then the brick masons and the carpenters next door throw things on your tiny rose garden, and trample your grass into the mud. That resolution would snap like glass in January, but just as it is being strained to the limit now, a robin calls to you from the telegraph wire overhead: "Cheer up—cheer up—cheer up!" And you just can't help cheering up.

Oh, you get all sorts of encouragement in the resolution business at this season! If you resolve to grow in mind and heart and soul, there's the example of the green grass that rises in spite of rude, trampling feet, and the birds that sing in spite of the beating spring rains, and the flowers that bloom because of rains and buffeting winds. And think of the help you will get from the Easter music! It is so sweet and tender and glad and triumphant! How could you help being better and stronger and truer after hearing it? It's the sweetest, finest season of the whole year—the Easter season, with its message of rising and growing and doing and being. New Year's resolutions are broken, or even nicked here and there, why not get a fresh set when you get your new Easter clothes, and when you array your body, put some of the newness of life into your mind and heart and soul? And, even if we haven't new Easter clothes—and a precious lot of us won't have—why can't we deck our minds and hearts and souls a bit more lavishly, so that the steady, happy light shining through our eyes from within will prove to the world that Easter is not entirely a time for outward adornment. Why not try making just a few new resolutions at the blessed Easter time?

Fulfill Note of Spring.

Only the coming of Easter could give to spring its note of fulfillment. Only the sacred sentiment of the great religious festival could add to the flowering season the supreme touch of emotional beauty.

Unique Gift for Easter

AT EASTER time the people of Patrick county, Virginia, frequently send to their friends unique gifts. In this county, about certain beautiful springs and the clear streams flowing from them, are found quantities of small stone crystals in the form of perfect crosses. They are mixed with the gravel and pebbles of this limestone country.

More remarkable still, the crosses are found in various shapes—the plain Roman cross, the square maltese cross, and the Greek cross where the crystals interpenetrate each other at an angle of 60 degrees. This last is the most common form, but it is not so pleasing when the stone is used as an ornament because of the twisted appearance it gives, although the structure itself is very interesting, resembling a double cross. Sometimes three or even four crystals are grouped together.

The crystals are six-sided prisms, and in a simple form appear in an envelope shape complete as to the pointed flaps even. The scientific name of the material is "staurolite," or "cross-stone," the name staurolite coming from the Greek words meaning "cross" and "stone."

The girls of Patrick county wear the cross in place of a locket or pendant on gold or silver chains. The stone is comparatively soft and a small gold screw is inserted in the cross and the chain passed through a projecting ring. Sometimes those who live in this valley search for crosses that match in size and make a long necklace of the stones themselves. The crosses vary in size from an inch to two inches in length.

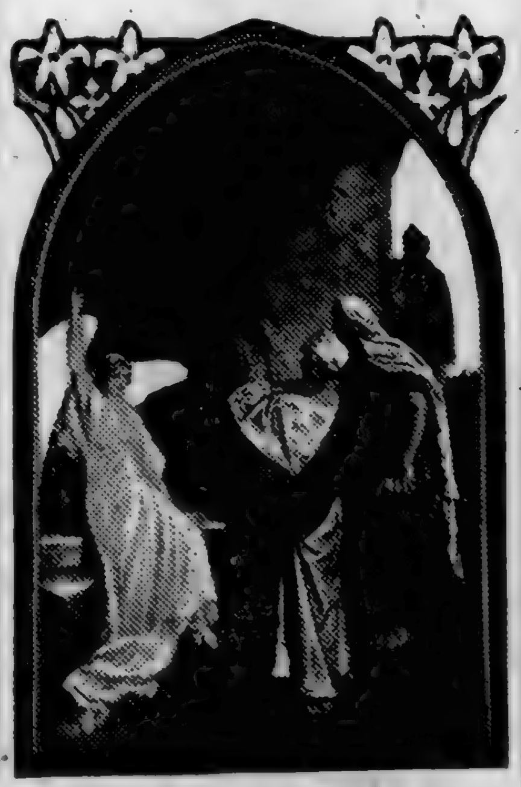
The writer has a fairy stone of the popular Roman style, presented by the finder, who picked it up on a Patrick county farm. It has a dull brown color and looks as if it might be a bit of rich, dark wood from the altar of a church. The color varies from a reddish or yellowish brown to black or gray, but is uniform in each individual stone.

The inhabitants of Patrick county believe that the stone is found nowhere else in the world outside of their particular county, a picturesque mountain section of Virginia.

Resurrection

An Easter Carol

By FREDERICK MERES



The tomb was sealed, the watch was set,
Within the portals lay the form
Who by the host of heaven was met,
As he arose on Easter morn
When the Angel rolled away the stone,
The risen Lord in glory shone,
And though the tomb was sealed,
Resurrection was revealed.

The Roman guard in terror fled
From the Angel bright, with flaming sword,
When the Son of Man rose from the dead,
And spoke to frightened souls the word
That conquers sin, prevails o'er death,
Transports the soul at parting breath,
And though the tomb was sealed,
Resurrection was revealed.

The Magdalen with pious love,
At early morning sought the tomb,
Was met by Angel from above,
Who pointed to the empty room,
The grave clothes on the floor were spread,
Not with the napkin that pressed his head;
And though the tomb was sealed,
Resurrection was revealed.

"Who seek ye here?" the Angel said
To Mary, who was bound in prayer
"The living Christ among the dead,
He is not here, but will appear
In glory, filling all the skies,
The pardoned sinners' sacrifice;"
And though the tomb was sealed,
Resurrection was revealed.

What the Season Means to Us.

The real lesson that we ought to get out of this Easter season is not simply the fact of life beyond death, but rather the possibility and the beauty of living the risen life while we are yet in the body. If, after the strains of Easter music have died away, and the fragrance of the lilies has gone from the church, we pass on to live the same old lives, seeking the things that are below more zealously than the things that are above, what has Easter profited us? In what way does the fact of Christ's resurrection make its power felt in the molding of our character and the forming of our life plans? If, having passed through the events of the Passion week, and experiencing in thought the glory of the resurrection morning, we do not attune our lives to a diviner key, and bring more of heaven into our everyday pursuits, are we not worse rather than better for these experiences?

Canada Offers 160 Acres Free to Farm Hands

Bonus of Western Canada Land to Men Assisting in Maintaining Needed Grain Production

The demand for farm labor in Canada is great. As an inducement to secure the necessary help at once, Canada will give

ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY ACRES OF LAND FREE AS A HOMESTEAD

and allow the time of the farm laborer, who has filed on the land, to apply as residence duties, the same as if he actually had lived on it. This special concession is the reduction of one year in the time to complete duties. Two years' residence instead of three as heretofore, but only to men working on the farms for at least six months in 1917. This appeal for farm help is in no way connected with enlistment for military service but solely to increase agricultural output. A wonderful opportunity to secure a farm and draw good wages at the same time. Canadian Government will pay all fare over one cent per mile from St. Paul or Duluth to Canadian destination. Bulletins are Not Successf'l

It is presumed that every farm agent appreciates the hearty cooperation of the local papers of the county in getting their messages before the farmers and citizens interested in farm development. All the folks nowadays are interested in farm development, or should be, for the more prosperous the farmer, the more prosperous the towns and citizens of the county

The editors of local papers all approve of the plan of securing a farm agent for each county, realizing the widespread benefits accruing from an experienced specialist along this line; a man capable of helping make the "poor farmer" a good farmer and the "good farmer" a better farmer.

No editor of a weekly paper in any county that we have noticed, has refused to publish communications from the county agent. There are times, of course, when the length of the article was reduced because it was received too close to press time, but the cooperation of the editors were always given. And personal boosting has been done by the editors of local papers.

Now, we regret to learn, that several county agents, not appreciating the indebetness to the local weekly papers, propose to publish a paper to deliver their messages to the farmers. This would be wrong. And it would not give the same result that publishing a regular department in the papers of the county would give. A small bulletin mailed to the farmer at a considerable expense would not secure the ready response, because it would be treated as are other bulletins. Some folks would read them, but were the agent to canvas for information on this subject, it would lead to the abandoning of the project of publishing a paper edited by the farm agent and his helpers.

If the weekly papers have not been co-operating as you think they should, Mr. Farm Agent, call "the boys" together and discuss your needs and the needs of your county. You will find them ready and willing to co-operate.

Just Two Kinds of Men in the World

By J. R. HAMILTON

Former Advertising Manager of Wanamaker's, Philadelphia

Financially, there are just two kinds of men in the world; those who constantly figure upon the principal of their money and those who deal with the interest on the principal.

The one kind of man throws away ten dollars carelessly and says, "What's the difference. It is only a ten dollar bill."

The other holds on to that ten and says, "Ten dollars is the interest at 5 per cent on a capital of two hundred dollars."

One man figures on how much ten dollars will buy. The other man figures on how much it would cost him to buy ten dollars.

A difference of principal and interest—that is all.

Yet the principal-figure is not the principle figurer in life. Indeed, he counts for very little except when he is spending that ten. No one comes to him with opportunities. No one considers him as a possible investor in anything good. Money always passes him quietly by.

And yet this is all a simple habit of mind. The difference between financial success and financial failure is only a little trick of the brain.

And the habit of figuring interest—the habit of figuring every dollar you spend as the interest on twenty times that amount at five per cent, is very easily learned.

Try it now in the personal things you are going out to buy. If you need a suit of clothes, look through the advertising in this paper. See where you can save five dollars, and then say to yourself, "I am not merely saving five dollars by buying a suit of clothes from this advertisement; I am saving the amount which one hundred dollars would earn if it worked at five per cent interest for a whole year."

That's the thing that brings you to your muttons. That's the thing that makes you stop and think.

Now these good sales are going on all through this paper. You can save money on anything you buy. Your clothes, your shoes, your shirts, your household goods—all offer money-saving opportunities in these sales.

Why, you can save the interest on at least five hundred dollars if you will only go at it right. And show me the man to whom five hundred dollars is not a capital worth considering?

Interest—that is the thing to figure on always. And the way to save the interest on a lot of money is to watch the advertising in this paper day by day and do your buying from these sales.

"The School-ma'am" a four-act play given by local talent Friday evening to a crowded house at the Widney Opera House, was a success in every way. Each one had his or her part perfectly and the play went through without a hitch. Flossie Sechler as "Miss Bell, the school-ma'am" was fine. Mrs. Price as "Mrs. Grump" the complaining parent had quite a bit of trouble with her little (?) boy Johnnie (Merritt Sechler) who was really the bad boy of the school although his mother didn't think so. Mrs. Esther Bowman as "Miss Marly Undertow" was perfect in her hatred for the new school ma'am because her lover (Merritt Maxwell, as Milt Harmon) turned from her to devote himself to the teacher. Ray D. Herrick as "Undertow, the self-made man"; Sam Mumaw as "Cypher—a friend of education" and who always agreed with the "board;" and John Woodcox as "Trueblood", who was the teacher's friend; all made fine school directors. It being her first school, the teacher was very anxious to succeed but her troubles were many even at last of being accused of burning down the school house. But at last the guilty are punished, her name cleared and everything ends lovely.

Jamie McWhack, Janitor—Gray Woodcox showed quite an interest in his work, due probably to the good looking school ma'am. Minnie Trueblood—Lena Meek acted her part fine as a scholar, while Mrs. Underwood—Belle Barney, was very considerate of the school ma'am and her responsibilities.

Between the acts, the audience was entertained by the young ladies chorus, the "Dixie Girls" in their "darkey" costumes and songs, and especially with the "Bostonian Orchestra" led by Mrs C. T. Bayman. The following is a report of the receipts and expenditures of the play—

365 tickets sold previous to play	$73 00
Single tickets sold at the door	17.20
F. A. Jenkins	10 07
Total Receipts	100.27
Expenses	11.42
Amount Cleared	88 85

The $10 07 turned in by F. A. Jenkins was from the old St. Joe Literary Society, who gave the "School-Ma'am" here twenty-four years ago (1893.) The Society disbanded and Mr. Jenkins being treasurer, the money was left with him. He, thinking this an appropriate place to put the money kindly offered the same and it was accepted with much appreciation.

They are starting up housekeeping right by purchasing their furniture in St. Joe. Congratulations.

Sunday, April 1st., occurred the marriage of Miss Avis Sechler to Mr. William Staman, at the Lutheran parsonage, Spencerville. The matter was kept a secret until Thursday of the following week, when the papers announced that a license had been issued to the above named parties. While the relatives were not aware of the fact, yet they were certain that the marriage was to take place soon. The young folks will make their home on the Staman farm, formerly owned by Frank Balts. Mrs. Staman will still work in the drug store until a suitable clerk can be secured to take her place. Their many friends extend congratulations.

Sunday, an auto passed through town bearing the beautiful Fort Wayne flag. It was of a penant shape with a blue background and a letter Y in white, indicating the conjunction of the three rivers. Two white stars decorated the corners indicating her to be the second city in the state in population. Many inquiries were made as to the meaning of this flag.

Something to Beat.

On last Sunday there were 363 persons in Sunday School in St. Joe alone—with a population of 391 according to the census. Show me another place that can beat it—no, you can't do it. Now all the folks in St. Joe don't attend, I should say not, but the good folks surrounding our little town help to make this splendid record. Total for township last Sunday was 478 attendance and collection $39.00.

MISSIONARIES NAMED—The following were appointed missionaries: John Wengatz, Africa; J. Ira Jones, Japan; E. J. Magor, Utah; J. E. Ferris, Arizona; J. C. Murray, Porto Rico.

May Plead Guilty.

Indianapolis.—A very large number of Republican politicians of Evansville, indicted for conspiracy to debauch the recent election there, will plead guilty in federal court, according to word from the district attorney's office. Forty politicians, including Charles Sihler and Frank DeJarnett, chairman and secretary, respectively, of the Republican county organization, refused to plead guilty when arraigned in federal court two weeks ago. Their trial is set for the last week in April.

Commission Is Appointed.

Indianapolis.—Gov. James P. Goodrich appointed the members of the Indiana highway commission created by the act of the last legislature. The commission will have charge of the administration of good roads law and the expenditure of $600,000 appropriated for 1917 and 1918.

The members appointed are: David C. Jenkins, manufacturer, Kokomo; L. P. Wright, master of Indiana State Grange, Columbus; Hines Egbert, manufacturer, Goshen.

It was announced that S. W. Taylor of Boonville would be the fourth member, but due to a confusion of names his name was taken off the official list until Governor Goodrich could consult Boonville persons.

The commissioners will receive no salary, but will appoint a state highway engineer at a large salary. Their attendance will be required at meetings only occasionally. The commission will choose its own president.

Wright and Jenkins were appointed as the Republican members. Egbert one of the two Democratic members, was recommended by Senator Beardsley of Elkhart, it is understood.

The legislature appropriated $100,000 for use in 1917 and $500,000 for use in 1918 in giving state aid to the construction of main market roads in the state. The contracts are to be let by the county commissioners, but must have the approval of the state highway engineer and the commission shall decide on what roads state money shall be expended.

Indiana's Quota Will Be 20,000.

Indianapolis. — Adjt. Gen. Harry B. Smith of the Indiana National Guard announced that plans are complete for recruiting men for an army of half a million, as asked by the president. General Smith figures Indiana's quota at 20,000 men. Many promotions will be made in the Indiana National Guard in the next few weeks to provide for greater efficiency and for the influx of recruits, and many officers also will be demoted. Col. George Fryermuth of South Bend, newly appointed colonel for the Third Indiana regiment, was in active charge of that regiment yesterday. Among the other appointments announced are: Maj. William Carpenter of Indianapolis, commanding officer of the Second battalion First infantry; Lieut. John B. Dilworth of Laporte, brigade adjutant of the entire guard; Maj. Robert Moorehead of Indianapolis, lieutenant coloney of infantry; Capt. Charles B. Calvert of South Bend, major in First infantry.

How Women Will Vote.

Indianapolis.—Women of state will use the same voting place, but will cast their ballots separately, in the next election in Indiana if the recommendations of a committee appointed by Governor Goodrich to interpret the woman suffrage law are carried out. The committee has reported to the governor that in counties where machines are used Australian ballots must be supplied the women or additional voting machines provided. The provisions are made necessary because women will vote for only a part of the offices. The committee also holds that women must have full citizenship, that a declaration of intention will not be sufficient as in the case of men.

Must Increase Food Production.

Indianapolis.—The problem of increasing the food production of Indiana will be discussed by leading agriculturists and business men at a meeting in the statehouse. Governor Goodrich, in issuing the call, said: "Indiana will supply her quota of men. She must prepare to furnish more than her quota of men. It is necessary to mobilize the agriculture of Indiana that we may plant a larger acreage, grow larger crops, prevent wastage." President W. E. Stone of Purdue university will preside.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR APRIL 15

JESUS THE GOOD SHEPHERD.

LESSON TEXT—John 10:7-17.

GOLDEN TEXT—I am the good Shepherd: the good Shepherd giveth His life for the sheep.—John 10:11.

This lesson probably occurred at the Feast of the Tabernacle in October, A. D. 29. The place was Jerusalem, perhaps in or near the temple. Facts, pictures and illustrations regarding eastern shepherd life can be used effectively in teaching the lesson. The true teacher must impart, develop and protect. Jesus does all of these things.

I. Jesus, the Door (vv. 1-9). Anyone who tries to get access to the sheep any other way than through Jesus the door is a thief and a robber (v. 1). A door is an invitation to enter, to investigate, to purchase, to learn, to meet others. It is the proper entrance. To go in through any other way arouses suspicion. It is also a means of safety to control those who enter; it can be closed in case of danger, and is strong to protect against storms and thieves. It is a means of separation, to insure privacy, and to furnish a means of egress. Jesus says we are to "go in" for communion with God, and to "go out" for service, to "go in" for strength and to "go out" for conflict. Verse nine is a wonderful verse. In it we have the simplicity of the Gospel, "I am the door;" the exclusiveness of the Gospel, "By me," the conditions of the Gospel, "Enter in;" the certainty, "Be saved;" the liberty, "Go in and out;" the provision, "Find pasture."

The true acceptance of Jesus leads not to a life of fear and constraint but to the perfect liberty of a child, satisfaction in green pastures (Ps. 23:2) that never fail (Rev. 7:16-17). The world's richest pasture lands are bleak and barren wildernesses in comparison with this. Christ is the door to other things not mentioned in this lesson (See John 14:6; Eph. 2:18; Rom. 5:1-2; Heb. 10:19-22). By him we enter the room of the knowledge of God. The Christian's business is to know God and to make him known.

II. Jesus, the Good Shepherd (vv. 10-18). It is not enough to be a door. A door has no volition. It cannot leave its place. A shepherd can go in and out. A false Christ and false shepherd are really thieves and robbers who come to "Steal and kill and destroy." On the other hand, Jesus' mission was a glorious one, "I came that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." As a good Shepherd (1) he has courage (v. 12). Jesus was not only willing, but actually did give his life for the sheep. He had love for all of the sheep, and was willing to seek the lost (Matt. 18:12). He also had confidence, due to his knowledge of God (v. 14). This is not audacity but quiet confidence due to experience. He knows the proper pastures. He knows where to find water for the sheep. He knows the dangers and pitfalls along the pathway. He knows how to direct our efforts. Sunday school teachers who are following in the steps of the master, and who perform the acts of a good shepherd, must pay the price of knowledge. (2) Jesus had character (v. 15). He was right in the sight of God, but in order to be right in the sight of God he must also be right in the sight of men. God expects results. The church expects results from us. The parents who trust their children to our teaching expect results. A sheep does not live for itself. It lives for others. Unless it produces wool, and is good for meat, it has existed in vain; so God, man and the church expect of us, as undershepherds, that we shall produce results. This we do not have to do in our own strength for any of us may have the life which is "abundant" and "exceeding" and "beyond measure." The question is, have we this superabundant life? (See I Pet. 1:8; John 1:15; Col. 1:19; Eph. 3:16-19).

Doctor Torrey has called our attention to ten points about the good Shepherd. (1) He knows the sheep. (2) He is known by his sheep. (3) He has a personal interest in his sheep, calls each by name (v. 3). (4) He leadeth them on. (5) He thrusts forth the laggard sheep (v. 4). (6) He overlooks none; all are his own (v. 4 R. V.). (7) He goeth before them. He has trodden every step of the way that they must take. (8) He careth for the sheep (v. 13). (9) He layeth down his life for the sheep (vv. 11 and 15). (10) Giveth eternal and abundant life to the sheep (vv. 10, 28, 29).

Jesus has sheep outside of Israel (v. 16). When these are brought in they will all become one fold (Eph. 2:14, 15; Gal. 3:28). It is through hearing his voice that they are to be brought. The laying down of his life was a voluntary act on his part, but it was performed in obedience to the father's will (See Chap. 6:38; 15:10). Jesus intended that his relation to his followers should be exactly like that which bound himself to the Father (See Chap. 17:21-23).

This love of the Good Shepherd led him to die for our sins, and to be raised for our justification.

FARM LABOR IN DEMAND IN WESTERN CANADA

Extraordinary Inducements Being Offered.

Previous articles have dealt with the necessity of producing extra quantities of foods to feed the world during this stress of high consumption and paucity of production. Instead of the condition improving it is growing worse, and unless drastic and immediate action is taken, prices will continue to climb higher. It is hoped by the Canadian government that by offering extra inducements to secure a homestead of 160 acres of excellent land in the homesteading areas of Western Canada, with the combined effort of the farmer in extraordinary preparation of tillage and bigger wages than ever, that Western Canada, with the assistance of a Divine Providence, may produce a greater number of million acres of wheat than ever in the past. The farm laborer can now secure a homestead on easier conditions than ever before. All the time that he works for a Western Canadian farmer during 1917, after he makes his entry or filing will count as residence on his homestead for that year, leaving him but two additional years' residence before getting title to a piece of land that should then be easily worth $1,600. The response to this offer has been wonderful, and hundreds have already taken advantage of it.

The climate of Western Canada is one that breeds energy, instils life and buoyancy, and with the soil that the country possesses, no greater asset could be desired. The country is past the pioneering stage; its ability to grow all the smaller grains better than any other portion of the continent has been proven so often that it seems a waste of time to speak of it. The high name that has been given the country in the splendid class of live stock that it raises, has placed it in the high column with the best states of the Union. And then social conditions, something that every housewife asks about, are as nearly perfect as could be wished for. Thousands of miles of telephone line connect the remotest hamlet with the principal cities of the country and continent, miles of excellent graded roads, as well as the perfect natural roads of the prairie, make driving and hauling easy. Gridironed as these provinces are with railway lines bring the farm near to Atlantic or Pacific, or United States markets, rural mail delivery brings the settler still closer to the homes abroad. Rural and consolidated schools everywhere are easy adjuncts to the colleges and universities, which are said to be among the best on the continent.

Taxation is light, and only applied on the farm land, cattle, implements, etc., on the farm being exempt. Many farmers, having realized sufficient from one crop of wheat to pay for their entire farm holdings, have installed their own electric light and heating plants, have their automobiles and many luxuries they would not have possessed on their old home abroad. Life is comfortable and existence enjoyable in Western Canada. In no country is there a greater percentage of contented farmers, and in no part of the continent is farming easier or more profitable.

Land there will produce 30 bushels of wheat to the acre, while there are many cases where the yield was higher, as high as 70 bushels. What this means to the farm laborer does not fully appear on the surface. He will get good wages, he can secure a homestead worth at the end of three years about $1,600, while working for wages he can put in residence duties, and can also look around, and find a good location.

Besides the homesteading attraction of Western Canada, there remains the other fact that other lands can be purchased at from $15 to $30, while improved farms may be had at reasonable figures.

The desire to have a piece of land of one's own is a natural instinct in the heart of every properly developed man and woman. In earlier years, on account of the great areas of land available in the United States, no great difficulty was experienced by any ambitious settler of that country who wished to become his own landholder, but the rapid increase in population, combined with the corresponding rise in the price of land, has completely changed this condition. Land, which a generation ago might be had for the homesteading, now commands prices ranging to $100 an acre and over. At such prices it is quite hopeless for the tenant farmer or the farmer's son in moderate circumstances, or the city man with limited capital, to attempt to buy a farm of his own. To pay for it becomes a life-long task, and the probability is that he will never do more than meet the interest charges. If he is serious in his desire to secure a farm home, he must look to countries where there is still abundant fertile land available at moderate cost, and where these lands are to be purchased on terms which make it possible for the settler with small capital to become a farm owner as the result of a few years' labor. He will also want land in a country where the practices of the people are similar to those to which he has been accustomed; a country with the same language, same religion, same general habits of living, with laws, currency, weights and measures, etc., based on the same principles as those with which he is familiar. He wants a country where he can buy land from $10.00 to $30.00 an acre, which will produce as big or bigger crops as those he has been accustomed to from lands at $100.00 an acre. He wants this land where social conditions will be attractive to himself and his family, and where he can look forward with confidence to being in a few years independent, and well started on the road to financial success.

All these conditions he will find in Western Canada, and nowhere else. The provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, commonly called "Western Canada," provide the one and only answer to the land-hungry. The land is here; it is the kind of land he wants; the conditions are as nearly ideal as is possible, and the prices and terms are such that the man of moderate capital has an opportunity not available to him elsewhere.—Advertisement.

Fates of Queens.

Why do we think enviously of those who are "born to the purple," and consider them happy and fortunate when their lives are shadowed by sorrows and perils that those of humbler station never know? Eugenie, once queen of fashion and empress of France; Carlotta, hopelessly mad; Elizabeth of Belgium, an Exile in England; Natalie, one-time queen of Serbia, discovered last summer doing mental tasks in a French hospital; Alexandra of Russia, at the mercy of an unfriendly people—surely these are not women to be envied. Upon the leaves of the ages we find countless other tragedies that have been associated with queenship—Mary Stuart and Marie Antoinette come at once into mind.—Detroit Free Press.

SYRUP OF FIGS FOR A CHILD'S BOWELS

It is cruel to force nauseating, harsh physic into a sick child.

Look back at your childhood days. Remember the "dose" mother insisted on—castor oil, calomel, cathartics. How you hated them, how you fought against taking them.

With our children it's different. Mothers who cling to the old form of physic simply don't realize what they do. The children's revolt is well-founded. Their tender little "insides" are injured by them.

If your child's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing, give only delicious "California Syrup of Figs." Its action is positive, but gentle. Millions of mothers keep this harmless "fruit laxative" handy; they know children love to take it; that it never fails to clean the liver and bowels and sweeten the stomach, and that a teaspoonful given today saves a sick child tomorrow.

Ask at the store for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on each bottle. Adv.

Appraising Father's Wealth.

When the kid went to Sunday school the lesson was evidently about how it is easier for a camel to go through a needle's eye than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven.

"Dad," said the boy, "you're awfully rich, aren't you?"

"Why, no, son," answered the father, "not so terribly rich."

"Well, you're pretty rich, anyhow, aren't you?"

"I don't call myself rich at all. Why?"

"Are you rich enough to go to Hades?"

Fantastic.

A government official, condemning a suggested war economy of a rather fantastic nature, said at a Washington dinner:

"This economy reminds me of the private who visited the canteen and asked for a pound of bacon.

"'Yes, sir,' said the canteen keeper, 'and what kind of bacon do you prefer?'

"'That there nice, long, streaky kind,' said the private. 'Then I can use the rind for shoe-laces.'"

106 Fly Poison Cases Reported in 3 Years
A Large Percentage Fatal

Appalling as this record seems, it is only a fraction of the real number. The symptoms of cholera infantum and arsenical poisoning are almost identical. Diagnosis is extremely difficult. Many actual fly poison cases are unrecognized and unreported.

The Government recognizes this danger to childhood and issues this warning, in supplement No. 29 to the Public Health Report:

"Of other fly poisons mentioned, mention should be made, merely for the purpose of condemnation, of those composed of arsenic. Fatal cases of poisoning of children through the use of such compounds are far too frequent, and owing to the resemblance of arsenical poisoning to summer diarrhea and cholera infantum, it is believed that the cases reported do not, by any means, comprise the total. Arsenical fly-destroying devices must be rated as extremely dangerous, and should never be used, even if other measures are not at hand."

FALLING HAIR MEANS DANDRUFF IS ACTIVE

Save Your Hair! Get a 25 Cent Bottle of Danderine Right Now—Also Stops Itching Scalp.

Thin, brittle, colorless and scraggy hair is mute evidence of a neglected scalp; of dandruff—that awful scurf.

There is nothing so destructive to the hair as dandruff. It robs the hair of its luster, its strength and its very life; eventually producing a feverishness and itching of the scalp, which if not remedied causes the hair roots to shrink, loosen and die—then the hair falls out fast. A little Danderine tonight—now—any time—will surely save your hair.

Get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any store, and after the first application your hair will take on that life, luster and luxuriance which is so beautiful. It will become wavy and fluffy and have the appearance of abundance; an incomparable gloss and softness, but what will please you most will be after just a few weeks' use, when you will actually see a lot of fine, downy hair—new hair—growing all over the scalp. Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

BUSINESS AND HEALTH.

"Why is our country going dry so fast?" asks the Philadelphia Ledger, and answers: "Business and health! That combination beats moral suasion and the appeals of a 'Ten Nights in a Barroom.'

"Life insurance companies for some years past have paid very close attention to liquor as an insurance hazard. They have compiled figures, using hundreds of thousands of persons as a basis for computations. These prove that a man who does not drink will on the average live much longer than the man who drinks even moderately.

"Taking 2,000,000 policyholders as a test, insurance companies discovered that men who only occasionally 'got tight' suffered a death rate just one-half greater than strictly temperance men. Among men who drink only two glasses of beer or one glass of whisky in a day the mortality was almost a fifth greater. Other men who drink more than that but still not enough to bar them from insurance companies, showed an appalling mortality of almost double that among men who were never introduced to John Barleycorn."

DRINK AND MACHINERY.

Things have changed since the day when a man could drink and injure no one but himself and a few others, says the Kansas City Star in an editorial on "Booze and Machinery."

A drunken man might drive a horse through a street crowded with other horses and not damage himself or anyone else; but a drunken man in a motor car in a street crowded with other hurrying motor cars becomes a veritable death angel. A drunken man might drive a stage coach filled with passengers and all arrive safely. But a drunken man at the engine throttle, or asleep in the signal tower, is a different thing. A drunken blacksmith in the old days would simply spoil a few horseshoes, and maybe give his wife a black eye. But now a drunken factory hand can ruin thousands of dollars' worth of machinery and endanger lives of fellow workmen.

PROHIBITION STANDS TEST.

The year 1916 has witnessed a triumph perhaps even greater than the mere gaining of territory, a thorough and satisfactory testing of the prohibition policy. During the past 52 weeks the new prohibition states have so convincingly demonstrated the economic, social and moral benefits of the law that they are quite sufficient refutation of the false charges made by the liquor publicity bureaus that prohibition does not prohibit; that it is a failure; that it leads to economic disaster, and other statements of like tenor. As to the satisfaction of the residents of these states with the new regime, the magnificent vote in Oregon, Washington, Colorado, Arizona and Arkansas on November 7 against the measures initiated by the liquor interests to weaken or nullify the new laws, furnishes abundant testimony.

INSANITY AND DRY STATES.

The publicity bureau of the liquor interests is trying to make the public believe that prohibition Kansas has more insane in proportion to the population than have license states. He selects for selection three wet states which are more than 50 per cent dry, rather than three which are mostly wet, as New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. But that is a way the liquorites have.

The insane rate in Kansas is 172.2 per 100,000; in New York it is 342.2 per 100,000; in New Jersey, 238.1 per 100,000; in Pennsylvania, 229.1 per 100,000.

When it comes to the percentage of what is known as alcoholic insanity—the only fair basis for a test—the rate in Kansas is remarkably low. That state has only 17 per cent of alcoholic insane.

PROHIBITION IS PROHIBITING.

Three breweries in St. Louis have gone out of business within the last few months. The Mutual was closed November 14 by order of the referee in bankruptcy; the Excelsior closed its doors January 1, and about the same time the Forest Park Brewing company filed a petition in bankruptcy. All on account of the encroachments of prohibition!

AVERAGE TAX RATE.

In 1915 the average tax rate in the dry Illinois cities of Mattoon, Decatur, Champaign, Bloomington, Freeport, Elgin, Canton, Galesburg, Rockford, and Jacksonville was 6.01. The average rate in the wet cities of East St. Louis, Springfield, Joliet, Waukegan, Moline, Rock Island, Aurora, Peoria, Danville and Quincy was 6.84.

TRULY PITIFUL!

"Speaking of drink," he said, though nobody had been, "you hear it said that alcohol stimulates the wit and imagination. That's rot. Have you ever been on the water wagon at a dinner where every one else was drinking? They say things they wouldn't think worth saying, and laugh at things they wouldn't think of laughing at, if it weren't for the champagne. The drinking doesn't make them brighter. It merely lowers their standard of appreciation. When you're stone sober, it's pitiful."

Old Looks?

(BY DR. L. H. SMITH)

Persons suffering from too much uric acid in the system frequently look older than they should. They age faster and the appearance of gray hair or baldhead in early years is, indeed, often a sign of uric acid. The face appears lean and haggard, lines and wrinkles appearing in young men or women.

The best way to combat this premature age and the obstruction to the arteries and faulty circulation is of the simplest: Drink copiously of pure water between meals. This will not make you fat, as it is only the water taken with the meals that fattens. Obtain at any drug store a package of Anuric, double strength, which is to be taken before meals, in order to expel the uric acid from the system. The painful effects of backache, lumbago, rheumatism, gout, due to uric acid in the blood should quickly disappear after treatment with Anuric.

Marvelous Herbal Medicine Cures Long-Standing Cough

Goshen, Ind.—"I was down and out with what my doctor pronounced tuberculosis. I had coughed night and day for a whole year and had lost so much flesh I began to look like a walking skeleton. Two of my sisters had died with tuberculosis and I felt certain that my time had come, too. A friend recommended Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery to my husband. The 'Discovery' gave new strength and vitality right from the start, and in a year's time I was just as strong and hardy as ever. I have never suffered with a deep-hacking cough since. School and Churches

Friday, April 6, was the last day of school at Hayes. The event was celebrated in a very appropriate manner. A "big dinner" was served by the patrons, one which fairly made the table squeak under the load placed upon it. But when it was over, it had the appearance of a cyclonic swept territory. Afterwards a program was rendered by the pupils. The song "O Columbia the Gem of the Ocean" was acted out in drill formation, each of the pupils being supplied with the national emblem; and every one was impressed at the close when the school, as one body, repeated the flag pledge "I pledge allegiance to my flag, and to the republic for which it stands,-one nation indivisible, with liberty and justice for all." Those neither tardy nor absent were:—Walter Morr, Pauline Morr, Thelma Johnson, Beulah Schrader and Clark Bassett. Robert Morr received the prize for having the neatest copy-book.

Strangers Impressed With Well Painted Houses

THOUSANDS of strangers are constantly visiting our city.

Imagine the effect upon them of seeing our stores cleanly and attractive, our mansions and pretentious dwellings dressed in the newness and freshness of the painters' art and material and the many humbler homes bearing evidence of the ambition and wisdom of their owners.

The practical side of life means much, for it is necessary. But it is not everything. What woman is not happier when she beholds the jeweled rings on her fingers or the gems about her neck? And what man does not share her pleasure at the sight in which he participates? It is the higher nature within humanity that values beauty. But the same aesthetic spirit that discovers pearls in the morning mists, rubies in the depths of blood stained roses or diamonds gleaming in the sunlight fires should not be too proud to affiliate with the harder facts of life and tame them to their prosaic uses.

Do you want to rent that house of yours?
Then paint it.
Paint preserves the life of your property.
Tenants are attracted.
Be progressive.
Paint up.

Paint May Save Your Town From an Epidemic

PAINT means death to dirt and disease!

Malaria is said to have hastened the downfall of Rome. The insects which transmitted it were more deadly to the inhabitants of the imperial city than their barbarian enemies. Much has also been written of similar injury to Greece in yet earlier times.

At least two diseases are carried by certain species of insects—malaria and yellow fever. All species are disagreeable pests that often make nature's most attractive spots untenantable.

Paint kills germs!
Paint up!

Women dress up in the springtime.
Men dress up in the springtime.
Nature dresses up in the springtime.
Why don't you dress up your home with a fresh coat of paint?
Don't spare the paint brush.
If you own a house it will preserve it.
A landlord who keeps his premises well painted never is at a loss for a tenant.

Do Your Part In the Paint Up Campaign

CIVIC bodies all over the country have joined in the crusade against prevalence of rubbish and dirt and the dull, forbidding aspect that follows in the wake of failure to preserve and beautify with paints. They are laying special emphasis upon the paint up feature. Paint makes any frame structure twice as enduring and ten times as attractive, and the adornment phase of its merits applies in full to brick structures.

Do your part!
Paint up!
Do it now!
Paint kills dirt.
Paint kills disease!

Tuesday evening, March 26th., the Farmers' Benefit Club met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Ulm, south of town. Nearly all the members were present and an interesting session was held. After a pleasing program was given the ladies retired to one room to study canning by the cold pack method and the gentlemen made soil tests for acidity. Of the fifteen different samples of soil brought from various farms, all were more or less acid save one. The sample which was sweet was taken from Mr. Ulm's garden where he had dumped the lime and refuse from plastering his house.

From these tests we may conclude that practically all the soils in this community are more or less acid or sour and the one sample which was sweet shows that lime is the remedy, because other parts of Mr. Ulm's farm tested sour. Farmers, hereabout, are beginning to realize that lime is as important in getting better crops as is fertilizer. Lime not only sweetens the soil but makes available phosporic acid, potash, nitrogen and other minerals necessary to plant life.

The next meeting of this club will be held in one of the halls in St. Joe so that anyone who wishes may attend.

Obituary

Albert Morton Shearer, son of Solomon and Letitia Shearer, was born in Auburn, Indiana, January 18, 1881. Died at his home in Jackson Twp., DeKalb County, Indiana, April 1, 1917, at the age of 36 years, 2 months and 13 days. He was married to Icy Ricketts, (Rev. Madison A. Harlan of the Auburn M. E. Church officiating) Nov. 29, 1905. To this union were born five children, three of whom had preceeded the father in death.

He leaves to mourn their loss his faithful wife and two small children, Marjorie and Marion, his father and mother, of Auburn, Ind.; one brother, Fred Shearer; of Auburn, Ind.; three sisters, Hattie Pilgrim, of Avilla, Ind.; Sadie Bruce, of Lakin, Kansas, and Mattie Ranier, of Auburn, Ind., and besides these, other relatives and many friends.

The following summer after his marriage, he with his wife moved to the farm where they resided at the time of his death. He was sick but a few days with Pneumonia and his sudden death came as a shock to the community where he was so well and favorably known. Death always has its sting but particularly is it so when one is taken of whom we had such reason to hope that many years was before him and that seemed to be so badly needed by his family to whom he was devoted.

Among the last rational words spoken to his wife was "I am making a hard fight to stay to help take care of our children". We commend these loved ones to our Heavenly Father's care. He is over all and suffers only that He from which ultimate good must come. "He doeth all things well."

Nellie Fern Scott, daughter and only child of Charles A. and Della Scott, was born in Spencerville, Ind., Aug 13, 1905, and after a short but beautiful career in this world, entered upon the higher life of the world to come at 4:00 o'clock in the morning of March 31, 1917 at the age of 11 years, 7 months and 18 days. She was a sweet child and religiously inclined; a faithful member of Class 7 in the M. E. S. S. and of the Junior League, and of the Pansy Club, being one of the most regular and prompt attendants of each of these She also loved the day school and worked diligently and did well notwithstanding her failing health. Her kind unassuming lady-like ways won for her many friends among the older as well as the younger folks. She was very patient in her sickness, though she suffered intensely, and was anxious to get well so she could go to Sunday School. She leaves a father and mother, grandparents and many other relatives and friends to mourn their loss.

"She is gone but will not be forgotten."

Calmly we shrouded her little frame,
Smoothed back her light brown hair,
Folded on her silent breast,
Her little hands so fair.

Still why should we mourn,
For the spirit that's flown,
To the beautiful land
Where no sorrow is known?

Though the body of Nellie,
Is laid neath the sod:
The soul of our Darling
Is resting with God.

CARD OF THANKS.

Two Years Illness Cured by Glando The Great Gland Tonic.

Mrs. Susan B. Taylor, 348 S. Williams St., Paulding, Ohio, said: "Two years ago I had a general break-down. I was nervous, languid, and hardly able to drag around. My liver and kidneys were sluggish and my complexion sallow. I felt sleepy and drowsy most all day, yet I did not sleep well at night. My heart fluttered terribly at times. I was in this miserable condition two years. A friend persuaded me to try Glando Tonic. The first treatment helped me. I am taking the sixth treatment and am feeling so well that I gladly recommend Glando Tonic to any one who suffers as I did."

Nearly every case of poor health is due to inactivity of the liver, kidneys and other glands. There is enough poison produced in the body every day to cause poor health if it is not eliminated. This poison can be removed only by keeping the glands in a good working condition. Some of the most common symptoms of inactive ganlds are headache, dizziness, indigestion, constipation, backache, pain or ache under the shoulder blade, biliousness, tonsilitis and quinsy. These conditions can be most quickly relieved by using Glando the Great Gland Tonic. It restores the glands to action, removes the impurities and builds up the entire system. Sold only in 50-cent treatments and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Manufactured by the Gland Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

AMERICA FORMALLY ENTERS THE WAR WITH GERMANY

Congress Declares a State of War Exists With the Imperial Government.

HEATED DEBATE IN SENATE

La Follette, Gronna, Stone, Norris, Vardaman and Lane Vote Against Resolution—Great Majority for the Measure in the Lower House.

Following is the text of the joint resolution declaring a state of war between the United States and Germany, as adopted by congress:

Whereas, The imperial German government has committed repeated acts of war against the government and the people of the United States of America; therefore be it

Resolved, by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America, in congress assembled, That the state of war between the United States and the imperial German government which has thus been thrust upon the United States is hereby formally declared; and that the president be and he is hereby, authorized and directed to employ the entire naval and military forces of the United States and the resources of the government to carry on war against the imperial German government; and to bring the conflict to a successful termination all of the resources of the country are hereby pledged by the congress of the United States.

Washington, April 6.—The United States is now formally at war with Germany. In response to the president's message congress has adopted the resolution declaring that a state of war exists between the two countries.

The senate was the first to act on the war resolution and adopted it by a vote of 82 to 6. The six senators who voted against the resolution for war were:

ASLE J. GRONNA, Republican, North Dakota.

HARRY LANE, Democrat, Oregon.

R. M. LA FOLLETTE, Republican, Wisconsin.

G. W. NORRIS, Republican, Nebraska.

WILLIAM J. STONE, Democrat, Missouri.

J. K. VARDAMAN, Democrat, Mississippi.

There were eight senators absent or paired. They were: Bankhead, Goff, Gore, Hollis, Newlands, Smith of Maryland, Thomas, and Tillman. Of those absent it was announced that all except Senator Gore of Oklahoma would have voted for the resolution if present.

All six of the senators who voted against the resolution were members of the group of twelve which defeated the armed neutrality bill at the last session. There was no attempt to filibuster this time, however.

Thirteen Hour Debate.

Thirteen hours of heated debate preceded the vote. Party lines disappeared in this discussion and Republicans joined with Democrats in sounding the call to the nation to support the president unitedly.

The little group opposed to the resolution drew fire from every side. Senator La Follette, defending Germany and heaping blame upon England, was informed by Senator Williams that Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, the German chancellor, would have made the same speech in the reichstag had he been imbued with sufficient effrontery.

Senator Norris, charging that the United States is going to war at the behest of the munition barons of Wall street, drew from Senator Reed the retort that such an accusation is "almost treason."

The assertion that the nation was going to war on the demand of gold, he said, was "an indictment of the president of the United States, an indictment of congress, of the American people, and of the truth."

"The president is not calling America to arms for the sake of a few paltry dollars," Senator Reed continued, "but for the life, honor, and integrity of this country."

Introduced by Hitchcock.

In introducing the resolution into the senate, Senator Hitchcock made a brief statement in which he said that the present time was one "for action, not discussion."

"The time for discussion has passed," he said. "The president has stated clearly, effectively, more conclusively the reasons which make this grave step necessary. The resolution provides for war against the imperial German government. It places responsibility for the war squarely upon the shoulders of the German government, charged with repeated acts of war against the United States.

"We want no more territory. We will demand no indemnity. We have no grudge to settle, nor racial antipathy. We will spend our treasure and our blood and sacrifice our lives without the thought of gain. We are going to war to vindicate our honor and independence as a great nation and in defense of humanity.

"Such quarrel as we have with Germany is not of our choosing. It was forced upon us and we did much to avoid it. For nearly three years the president, congress, and the American people have hoped to avoid it. But one desperate act by the imperial German government has followed another."

German Pledges Broken.

Senator Hitchcock was followed by Senator Swanson of Virginia, who said the German government "has repeatedly and grossly violated its treaty obligations to us, and wantonly broken solemn assurances."

"The issue is not peace or war," Senator Swanson continued. "War has already been declared upon us. The issue is whether we shall accept war or abject and cowardly submission."

Reciting the sinking of American ships, German plots, and outrages in this country, Senator Swanson said the Zimmermann plot to incite Mexico against this country "reaches the lowest depths of national turpitude."

Many other senators took part in the debate, Gronna, Stone, Vardaman, Norris and LaFollette, all opposing the resolution.

Senator Smoot made the last speech—a short prayer that God would "hasten the day when liberty will be enjoyed by all the peoples of the earth."

The roll call was taken while the senators and spectators sat solemn. A few cheers greeted the result and then all filed quietly out of the chamber.

House Vote, 373 to 50.

The house, after a debate lasting about seventeen hours, adopted the joint resolution by a vote of 373 to 50. Nearly a hundred representatives made speeches.

In offering the senate resolution as a substitute for its own, the house foreign affairs committee submitted a long report reviewing the history of submarine warfare and America's futile protests against it, German intrigues and bomb plots in this country, the effort to ally Japan and Mexico against the United States and the mistreatment of American officials and citizens in Germany.

"It is with the deepest sense of responsibility for the momentous results which will follow the passage of this resolution," said the report, "that your committee reports it to the house, with the recommendation that it be passed

"The conduct of the imperial German government toward this government, its citizens and its interests, has been so discourteous, unjust, cruel, barbarous, and so lacking in honesty and practice that it has constituted a violation of the course of conduct which should obtain between friendly nations.

"In addition to this the German government is actually making war upon the people and commerce of this country, and leaves no course open to this government but to accept its gage of battle and declare that a state of war exists."

Flood Opens the Debate.

Under the unanimous consent rule by which the resolution was considered Representative Flood could move the previous question at any time after one hour and, if sustained, bring the measure to a vote. He was disposed, however, to give members every opportunity to speak throughout the day. The debate began without any limitation.

"War is being made upon our country and its people," Representative Flood said in opening. "Our ships are being sunk. Our noncombatant citizens, including men, women and children, are being murdered, our merchantmen are denied the freedom of the seas.

"The time for argument has passed; the time for heroic action is here, and our people will rally to the support of their government in this high and patriotic hour and meet war's sacrifices and war's perils as a brave and patriotic people should.

"We should take our stand by the side of the allied nations who have been fighting humanity's battles for two and one-half years, determined that our power shall be so employed that complete victory shall crown their efforts and that Prussian militarism shall be crushed and the world shall be delivered from the threat and danger of the Hohenzollern dynasty."

WILSON IS UPHELD IN LONDON

Americans in British Metropolis Indorse Action Taken in Controversy With Germany.

London, England, April 6.—A meeting of Americans, resident or sojourning in London, was held to indorse the action of President Wilson and congress in declaring that a state of war exists between the United States and Germany. This resolution was adopted:

"We, American citizens, resident or sojourning in Great Britain, assembled here at the call of the American society in London, desire to place on record our profound satisfaction with the unqualified approval of the momentous decision that has been taken by our president and government in declaring that a state of war exists between the United States and Germany. In no other way could the honor and dignity of our flag and country be maintained and our national self-respect be preserved."

WILSON WARNS ALIENS IN WAR PROCLAMATION

President Calls Upon Americans To Support Measures of Government.

ALIENS MUST KEEP PEACE

All Who Fail to Conduct Themselves Properly Are Liable to Restraint and Other Penalties—Executive Calls for Volunteers for Both the Navy and Army.

Washington, April 7.—The president on Friday signed a proclamation formally declaring a state of war between the United States and Germany. In the proclamation he called upon American citizens to give support to all measures of the government.

Text of War Proclamation.

The war proclamation issued by President Wilson is as follows:

"Whereas, the congress of the United States, in the exercise of the constitutional authority vested in them, have resolved by joint resolution of the senate and house of representatives bearing date this day, 'that a state of war between the United States and the imperial German government, which has been thrust upon the United States,' is hereby formally declared:

"Whereas, it is provided by section 4067 of the revised statutes as follows:

"'Whenever there is declared a war between the United States and any foreign nation or government or any invasion or predatory incursion is perpetrated, attempted or threatened against the territory of the United States by any foreign nation or government and the president makes public proclamation of the event, all natives, citizens, denizens or subjects of a hostile nation or government being male of the age of fourteen years and upward who shall be within the United States and not actually naturalized shall be liable to be apprehended, restrained, secured and removed as alien enemies.

"The president is authorized in any such event by his proclamation thereof or other public acts to direct the conduct to be observed on the part of the United States toward the aliens who become so liable; the manner and degree of the restraint to which they shall be permitted."

"Whereas, by sections 4068, 4069 and 4070 of the revised statutes, further provision is made relative to alien enemies:

"Now, therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, president of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim to all whom it may concern that a state of war exists between the United States and the imperial German government, and I do specially direct all officers, civil or military, of the United States that they exercise vigilance and zeal in the discharge of the duties incident to such a state of war, and I do, moreover, earnestly appeal to all American citizens that they in loyal devotion to their country, dedicated from its foundation to the principles of liberty and justice, uphold the laws of the land and give undivided and willing support to those measures which may be adopted by the constitutional authorities in prosecuting the war to a successful issue and in obtaining a secure and just peace.

Aliens Enjoined to Keep Peace.

"And, acting under and by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution of the United States and the said sections of the revised statues, I do hereby further proclaim and direct that the conduct to be observed on the part of the United States toward all natives, citizens, denizens or subjects of Germany, being male, of the age of fourteen years and upward, who shall be within the United States and not actually naturalized, who for the purpose of this proclamation and under such sections of the revised statutes are termed alien enemies, shall be as follows:

"All alien enemies are enjoined to preserve the peace toward the United States and to refrain from crime against the public safety and from violating the laws of the United States and of the states and territories thereof, and to refrain from actual hostility or giving information, aid or comfort to the enemies of the United States and to comply strictly with the regulations which are hereby or which may be from time to time promulgated by the president, and so long as they shall conduct themselves in accordance with law they shall be undisturbed in the peaceful pursuit of their lives and occupations and be accorded the consideration due to all peaceful and lawabiding persons, except so far as restrictions may be necessary for their own protection and for the safety of the United States, and toward such alien enemies as conduct themselves in accordance with law all citizens of the United States are enjoined to preserve the peace and to treat them with all such friendliness as may be compatible with loyalty and allegiance to the United States.

"And all alien enemies who fail to conduct themselves as so enjoined in addition to all other penalties prescribed by law shall be liable to restraint or to give security or to remove, depart from the United States.

"And pursuant to the authority vested in me, I hereby declare and establish the following regulations, which I find necessary in the premises and for the public safety:

"1 An alien enemy shall not have in his possession at any time or place any firearms, weapons or implements of war or component parts thereof, ammunition, maxim or other silencer, arms or explosives or material used in the manufacture of explosives.

"2. An alien enemy shall not have in his possession at any time or place, or use or operate, any aircraft or wireless apparatus, or any form of signaling devices, or any form of cipher code or any paper, document or book, written or printed in cipher or in which there may be invisible writing.

"3. All property found in the possession of an alien enemy in violation of the foregoing regulations shall be subject to seizure by the United States.

Must Keep Away From Forts.

"4. An alien enemy shall not approach or be found within one-half of a mile of any federal or state fort, camp, arsenal, aircraft station, government or naval vessel, navy yard, factory or workshop for the manufacture of munitions of war, or of any products for the use of the army or navy.

"5. An alien enemy shall not write, print or publish any attack or threat against the government or congress of the United States or either branch thereof, or against the measures or policy of the United States, or against the persons or property of any person in the military, naval or civil service of the United States, or of the states or territories, or of the District of Columbia or of the municipal governments therein.

"6. An alien enemy shall not commit or abet any hostile acts against the United States or give information, aid or comfort to its enemies.

Cannot Live in Barred Localities.

"7. An alien enemy shall not reside in or continue to reside in, to remain in or enter any locality which the president may from time to time designate by an executive order as a prohibitive area.

"8. An alien enemy whom the president shall have reasonable cause to believe to be aiding or about to aid the enemy or to be at large to the danger of the public peace or safety of the United States, or to have violated or to be about to violate any of these regulations, shall remove to any locality designated by the president by executive order and shall not remove therefrom without permit, or shall depart from the United States if so required by the president.

"9. No alien enemy shall depart from the United States until he shall have received such permit as the president shall prescribe or except under order of a court, judge or justice, under sections 4069 and 4070 of the revised statutes.

"10. No alien enemy shall land in or enter the United States except under such restrictions and at such places as the president may prescribe.

"11. If necessary to prevent violation of the regulations all alien enemies will be obliged to register.

"12. An alien enemy whom there may be reasonable cause to believe to be aiding or about to aid the enemy, or to be at large to the danger of the public peace or safety, or who violates or who attempts to violate, or of whom there is reasonable grounds to believe that he is about to violate, any regulation to be promulgated by the president or any criminal law of the United States or of the states or territories thereof will be subject to summary arrest by the United States marshal or his deputy or such other officers as the president shall designate, and confinement in such penitentiary, prison, jail, military camp or other place of detention as may be directed by the president."

White House Statement.

The president also issued a call for volunteers to bring the army and navy up to war strength, and gave his indorsement to the general staff army bill designed to obtain men by selective conscription.

"The necessary men," said the president in a statement, "will be secured for the regular army and the National Guard by volunteering, as at present, until, in the judgment of the president, a resort to selective draft is advisable.

"The principles embodied in the legislation presented by the war department to the military committee of the senate and house have my entire approval, and its specific recommendations embody the best judgment of the officers of the war department."

A Free Agent.

"I adopted the profession of hermiting entirely from choice," confessed the outcast, as he sat in the doorway of his lonesome cavern. "You see, I always was an extremely conscientious gent. And finally I made up my mind that it was never right under any circumstance, no matter how it might hurt the hearer, to tell aught but the literal truth, so far as words would do it. Not many moons thereafter my fellow citizens grabbed me and offered me my choice of being lynched or getting out of their sight and hearing forever. Naturally, having several other theories with which I wished to experiment further, I selected abequatulation, and lit out as the crow flies."—Kansas City Star.

"The deuce there isn't! Just let him kiss the wrong woman and he'll find out."

Federal Officials Take Over Interned German Ships.

ACT UNDER M'ADOO'S ORDERS

Vessels Now in American Ports Are Declared to Have a Tonnage of About 600,000—Flower of Teuton Empire's Marine.

New York, April 6.—Federal officials seized German merchant vessels that took refuge in Atlantic ports at the beginning of the war, almost immediately after congress passed the resolution declaring a state of war between the United States and Germany. The collector of the port at Boston was the first to act.

Port officers acted on orders issued by the secretary of the treasury. It is understood that this move does not involve confiscation and that the vessels are held for the present as a measure of safety.

German vessels now in American ports number 91, with a gross tonnage of about 600,000. This includes 23 ships in refuge at the Philippine islands, 11 at Honolulu and one at Pagopago, a port of the Pacific islands.

The ships lying at their slips at the Hamburg-American and North German Lloyd docks at New York and Hoboken include some of the flower of the German merchant marine. The Vaterland, one of the largest vessels in the world, is by far the most valuable. Next in size is the George Washington, 25,570 tons. Others of more than 15,000 tons are the President Grant, President Lincoln and Kaiser Wilhelm II. Four Austrian steamships also are tied up here.

The ships taken, with their value and tonnage, is officially announced as follows:

Welcomes America's Entrance in War.

Ottawa, Ont.—Entrance of the United States into the war against Germany was characterized by Sir Edward Morris, premier of Newfoundland, as "the most momentous act that has occurred since Germany proclaimed war," according to a dispatch from London, received by the agency here of the Reuter Telegram company. "Not only is it important as regards the war, but in its future effect in the participation of the United States in the permanent peace of the world," he declared.

BILIOUS, HEADACHY, SICK "CASCARETS"

Gently cleanse your liver and sluggish bowels while you sleep.

Get a 10-cent box.

Sick headache, biliousness, dizziness, coated tongue, foul taste and foul breath—always trace them to torpid liver; delayed, fermenting food in the bowels or sour, gassy stomach.

Poisonous matter clogged in the intestines, instead of being cast out of the system is re-absorbed into the blood. When this poison reaches the delicate brain tissue it causes congestion and that dull, throbbing, sickening headache.

Cascarets immediately cleanse the stomach, remove the sour, undigested food and foul gases, take the excess bile from the liver and carry out all the constipated waste matter and poisons in the bowels.

A Cascaret to-night will surely straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist means your head clear, stomach sweet and your liver and bowels regular for months. Adv.

The Pie Market.

The influx of pieplant from the South has caused a strong demand in fashionable quarters for rhubarb pie, "deep dish preferred" selling at a slight advance over "common." The result has been the expected seasonal slump in the staple pumpkin, although there is still some reactionary trading in that commodity. Apple sold off on account of the public fancy for the newcomer, but is expected to recover when money tightens later in the week. Lemon meringue was dull. Always an off season pie, it is expected soon to fall back to the level of custard and coconut, attractive only to a certain conservative class of investors. Boston cream was slow and colorless, and it is reported that the governors expect to take it from the pie market list and let it go back to be cake curb, where it naturally belongs. No trading in mince, which is expected to pass its next dividend.—New York Sun.

Knew What Dad Would Say.

Jack, the three-year-old brother of the new and historic Bellefontaine Avenue twins, has taken up his dad's burden in a remarkable manner, considering his years. A neighbor lady calling on the twins the other night expressed her approval of them, and then turned to Jack and asked:

"Jack, may I have your little sister Betty?"

Jack consented readily.

"And how about little brother Bob—may I have him, too?"

Jack said sure.

"Well, what would papa say when he came home and found them gone?"

"Oh," said Jack, "he'd say, 'You're very we'come.'"

WOMEN! IT IS MAGIC! LIFT OUT ANY CORN

Apply a few drops then lift corns or calluses off with fingers—no pain.

Just think! You can lift off any corn or callus without pain or soreness.

A Cincinnati man discovered this ether compound and named it freezone. Any druggist will sell a tiny bottle of freezone, like here shown, for very little cost. You apply a few drops directly upon a tender corn or callus. Instantly the soreness disappears, then shortly you will find the corn or callus so loose that you can lift it right off.

Freezone is wonderful. It dries instantly. It doesn't eat away the corn or callus, but shrivels it up without even irritating the surrounding skin.

Hard, soft or corns between the toes, as well as painful calluses, lift right off. There is no pain before or afterwards. If your druggist hasn't freezone, tell him to order a small bottle for you from his wholesale drug house.—adv.

KAZAN

The Story of a Dog That Turned Wolf

By JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD

Copyright Bobbs-Merrill Co.

KAZAN EXPERIENCES THE JOY OF MATING AND HUNTING GAME WITH THE WOLF PACK

Kazan is a vicious Alaskan sledge dog, one-quarter gray wolf. He saves his master's life and is taken along when the master goes to civilization to meet his bride and return with her to the frozen country. Even the master is afraid to touch the dog, but Isobel, Kazan's new mistress, wins his devotion instantly. On the way northward, McCready, a dog-team driver, joins the party. Inflamed by drink on the following night, McCready beats the master insensible and attacks the bride. Kazan flies at the assailant's throat, kills him, takes to the woods and joins a wolf pack. He fights the pack leader.

For the first time in his life Kazan felt the terror and the pain of the death-grip, and with a mighty effort he flung his head a little forward and snapped blindly. His powerful jaws closed on the wolf's foreleg, close to the body. There was a cracking of bone and a crunching of flesh, and the circle of waiting wolves grew tense and alert. One or the other of the fighters was sure to go down before the holds were broken, and they but awaited that fatal fall as a signal to leap in to the death.

Only the thickness of hair and hide on the back of Kazan's neck, and the toughness of his muscles, saved him from that terrible fate of the vanquished. The wolf's teeth sank deep, but not deep enough to reach the vital spot, and suddenly Kazan put every ounce of strength in his limbs to the effort, and flung himself up bodily from under his antagonist. The grip on his neck relaxed, and with another rearing leap he tore himself free.

As swift as a whip-lash he whirled on the broken-legged leader of the pack and with the full rush and weight of his shoulders struck him fairly in the side. More deadly than the throat-grip had Kazan sometimes found the lunge when delivered at the right moment. It was deadly now. The big gray wolf lost his feet, rolled upon his back for an instant, and the pack rushed in, eager to rend the last of life from the leader whose power had ceased to exist.

From out of that gray, snarling, bloody-lipped mass, Kazan drew back, panting and bleeding. He was weak. There was a curious sickness in his head. He wanted to lie down in the snow. But the old and infallible instinct warned him not to betray that weakness. From out of the pack a slim, lithe, gray she-wolf came up to him, and lay down in the snow before him, and then rose swiftly and sniffed at his wounds.

She was young and strong and beautiful, but Kazan did not look at her. Where the fight had been he was looking, at what little remained of the old leader. The pack had returned to the feast. He heard again the cracking of bones and the rending of flesh, and something told him that thereafter all the wilderness would hear and recognize his voice, and that when he sat back on his haunches and called to the moon and the stars, those swift-footed hunters of the big plain would respond to it. He circled twice about the caribou and the pack, and then trotted off to the edge of the black spruce forest.

When he reached the shadows he looked back. Gray Wolf was following him. She was only a few yards behind. And now she came up to him, a little timidly, and she, too, looked back to the dark blotch of life out on the lake. And as she stood there close beside him, Kazan sniffed at something in the air that was not the scent of blood, nor the perfume of the balsam and spruce. It was a thing that seemed to come to him from the clear stars, the cloudless moon, the strange and beautiful quiet of the night itself. And its presence seemed to be a part of Gray Wolf.

He looked at her, and he found Gray Wolf's eyes alert and questioning. She was young—so young that she seemed scarcely to have passed out of puppyhood. Her body was strong and slim and beautifully shaped. In the moonlight the hair under her throat and along her back shone sleek and soft. She whined at the red staring light in Kazan's eyes, and it was not a puppy's whimper. Kazan moved toward her, and stood with his head over her back, facing the pack. He felt her trembling against his chest. He looked at the moon and the stars again, the mystery of Gray Wolf and of the night throbbing in his blood.

Not much of his life had been spent at the posts. Most of it had been on the trail—in the traces—and the spirit of the mating season had only stirred him from afar. But it was very near now. Gray Wolf lifted her head. Her soft muzzle touched the wound on his neck, and in the gentleness of that touch, in the low sound in her throat, Kazan felt and heard again that wonderful something that had come with the caress of the woman's hand and the sound of her voice.

He turned, whining, his back bristling, his head high and defiant of the wilderness which he faced. Gray Wolf trotted close at his side as they entered into the gloom of the forest.

CHAPTER VI.

The Fight in the Snow.

They found shelter that night under thick balsam, and when they lay down on the soft carpet of needles which the snow had not covered, Gray Wolf snuggled her warm body close to Kazan and licked his wounds. The day broke with a velvety fall of snow, so white and thick that they could not see a dozen leaps ahead of them in the open. It was quite warm, and so still that the whole world seemed filled with only the flutter and whisper of the snowflakes. Through this day Kazan and Gray Wolf traveled side by side. Time and again he turned his head back to the ridge over which he had come, and Gray Wolf could not understand the strange note that trembled in his throat.

In the afternoon they returned to what was left of the caribou doe on the lake. In the edge of the forest Gray Wolf hung back. She did not yet know the meaning of poison-baits, deadfalls and traps, but the instinct of numberless generations was in her veins, and it told her there was danger in visiting a second time a thing that had grown cold in death.

Kazan had seen masters work about carcasses that the wolves had left. He had seen them conceal traps cleverly, and roll little capsules of strychnine in the fat of the entrails, and once he had put a foreleg in a trap, and had experienced its sting and pain and deadly grip. But he did not have Gray Wolf's fear. He urged her to accompany him to the white hummocks on the ice, and at last she went with him and sank back restlessly on her haunches, while he dug out the bones and pieces of flesh that the snow had kept from freezing. But she would not eat, and at last Kazan went and sat on his haunches at her side, and with her looked at what he had dug out from under the snow. He sniffed the air. He could not smell danger, but Gray Wolf told him that it might be there.

She told him many other things in the days and nights that followed. The third night Kazan himself gathered the hunt-pack and led in the chase. Three times that month, before the moon left the skies, he led the chase, and each time there was a kill. But as the snows began to grow softer under his feet he found a greater and greater companionship in Gray Wolf, and they hunted alone, living on the big white rabbits. In all the world he had loved but two things, the girl with the shining hair and the hands that had caressed him—and Gray Wolf.

He did not leave the big plain, and often he took his mate to the top of the ridge and he would try to tell her what he had left back there. With the dark nights the call of the woman became so strong upon him that he was filled with a longing to go back, and take Gray Wolf with him.

Something happened very soon after that. They were crossing the open plain one day when up on the face of the ridge Kazan saw something that made his heart stand still. A man, with a dog-sledge and team, was coming down into their world. The wind had not warned them, and suddenly Kazan saw something glisten in the man's hand. He knew what it was. It was the thing that spat fire and thunder, and killed.

He gave his warning to Gray Wolf, and they were off like the wind, side by side. And then came the sound—and Kazan's hatred of men burst forth in a snarl as he leaped. There was a queer humming over their heads. The sound from behind came again, and this time Gray Wolf gave a yelp of pain, and rolled over in the snow. She was on her feet again in an instant, and Kazan dropped behind her, and ran there until they reached the shelter of the timber. Gray Wolf lay down, and began licking the wound in her shoulder. Kazan faced the ridge. The man was taking up their trail. He stopped where Gray Wolf had fallen, and examined the snow. Then he came on.

Kazan urged Gray Wolf to her feet, and they made for the thick swamp close to the lake. All that day they kept in the face of the wind, and when Gray Wolf lay down Kazan stole back over their trail, watching and sniffing the air.

For days after that Gray Wolf ran lame, and when once they came upon the remains of an old camp, Kazan's teeth were bared in snarling hatred of the man-scent that had been left behind. Growing in him there was a desire for vengeance—vengeance for his own hurts, and for Gray Wolf's. He tried to nose out the man-trail under the cover of fresh snow, and Gray Wolf circled around him anxiously. At last he followed her sullenly. There was a savage redness in his eyes.

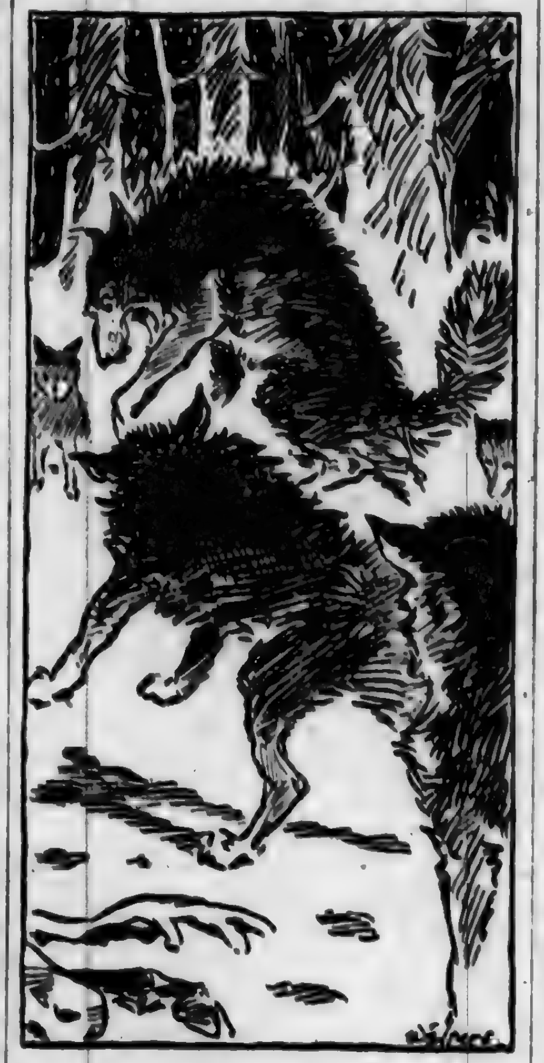
Three days later the new moon came. And on the fifth night Kazan struck a trail. It was fresh—so fresh that he stopped as suddenly as though struck by a bullet when he ran upon it, and stood with every muscle in his body quivering, and his hair on end. It was a man-trail. There were the marks of the sledge, the dog's feet, and the snowshoe prints of his enemy.

Then he threw up his head to the stars, and from his throat there rolled out over the wide plains the hunt-cry—the wild and savage call for the pack. Never had he put the savagery in it that was there tonight. Again and again he sent forth that call, and then there came an answer and another and still another, until Gray Wolf herself sat back on her haunches and added her voice to Kazan's, and far out on the plain a white and haggard-faced man halted his exhausted dogs to listen, while a voice said faintly from the sledge:

"The wolves, father. Are they coming—after us?"

The man was silent. He was not young. The moon shone in his long white beard, and added grotesquely to the height of his tall gaunt figure. A girl had raised her head from a bearskin pillow on the sleigh. Her dark eyes were filled beautifully with the starlight. She was pale. Her hair fell in a thick shining braid over her shoulder, and she was hugging something tightly to her breast.

"They're on the trail of something—probably a deer," said the man, looking at the breech of his rifle. "Don't worry, Jo. We'll stop at the next bit of scrub and see if we can't find enough dry stuff for a fire. Wee-ah-h-h-h, boys! Koosh—koosh—" and he snapped his whip over the backs of his team.



Swift as a Whiplash He Whirled.

From the bundle at the girl's breast there came a small wailing cry. And far back in the plain there answered it the scattered voice of the pack.

At last Kazan was on the trail of vengeance. He ran slowly at first, with Gray Wolf close beside him, pausing every three or four hundred yards to send forth the cry. A gray leaping form joined them from behind. Another followed. Two came in from the side, and Kazan's solitary howl gave place to the wild tongue of the pack. Numbers grew, and with increasing number the pace became swifter. Four—six—seven—ten—fourteen, by the time the more open and wind-swept part of the plain was reached.

It was a strong pack, filled with old and fearless hunters. Gray Wolf was the youngest, and she kept close to Kazan's shoulders. She could see nothing of his red-shot eyes and dripping jaws, and would not have understood if she had seen. But she could feel and she was thrilled by the spirit of that strange and mysterious savagery that had made Kazan forget all things but hurt and death.

The pack made no sound. There was only the panting of breath and the soft fall of many feet. They ran swiftly and close. And always Kazan was a leap ahead, with Gray Wolf nosing his shoulder. When at last he saw a moving blotch far out on the plain ahead of him, the cry that came out of his throat was one that Gray Wolf did not understand.

The strange influence of a kind woman once more works wonders on the savage disposition of the wolf-dog—as described in the next installment.

Sold Feathers.

On August 28, 1736, according to a story handed down in England, a man passing a bridge near Preston, Lancashire, saw two large flocks of birds meet so rapidly that 180 fell to the ground. He picked them up and sold them in Preston market the same day!—New York Telegram.

CUBA DECLARES WAR ON KAISER; SHIPS SEIZED

President Signs Resolution Passed by Congress.

WILL AID UNITED STATES

Proclamation Issued by President of Panama Pledges Republic to Help United States Defend the Canal.

Havana, April 9.—Cuba, not yet out of her 'teens as a republic, is at war with Germany—the first of the Latin-American countries to range herself alongside the United States, her liberator and protector.

At 7:16 Saturday night President Menocal affixed his signature to the joint resolution passed unanimously late in the afternoon by both the senate and house without a dissenting voice being raised, thus putting into effect the declaration that a state of war exists between Cuba and the imperial German government.

The senate acted with extreme solemnity. No amendments were offered and the 17 senators present voted "Yea" when the motion was put. There was no applause or excitement following the vote.

The scene in the house was more enlivening. The galleries were packed long before the session opened, the ministers of France, Spain and Uruguay occupying seats in the diplomatic section.

Representative Alfredo Betancourt, speaking for the conservatives, made an impassioned speech in favor of the resolution. He was frequently interrupted by tremendous applause, the entire house and galleries rising to their feet, cheering and clapping wildly.

German Ships Seized.

In the afternoon, after large volumes of smoke were seen pouring from the funnel of the self-interned German ship Bavaria, port police went aboard the ship and were informed by her commander, Captain Grandes, that he, in compliance with orders from his government, had attempted to damage the machinery.

The crew, together with the captain and his wife, were removed, as were the crews of three other interned German ships in the Havana harbor. All were sent to Cabanas fortress.

Panama to Defend Canal.

Panama, April 9.—The president of the Republic of Panama, Dr. Ramon Valdez, signed a proclamation committing Panama unreservedly to the assistance of the United States in the defense of the canal. The president also canceled the exequaturs of all the German consuls in Panama.

WILSON REPLIES TO FRANCE

Thanks President Poincare for Welcoming U. S. Into Battle Against Imperialism.

Washington, April 9.—The reply of President Wilson to the felicitations and expressions of gratitude from President Poincare of France was made public at the White House. The president said:

"In this trying hour, when the destinies of mankind are in the balance, it has been a source of gratification and joy to me to receive your congratulations upon the step my country has been constrained to take in opposition to the relentless policy and course of imperialistic Germany.

"It is very delightful to us that France, who stood shoulder to shoulder with us of the western world in our struggle for independence, should now give us such welcome into the lists of battle as upholders of the freedom and rights of humanity.

"We stand as partners of the noble democracies whose aims and acts make for the prepetuation of the rights and freedom of man and for the safeguarding of the true principles of human liberties.

"In the name of the American people, I salute you and your illustrious countrymen.

"WOODROW WILSON."

Daughter of Late Adolphus Busch Says Wireless Plant Was Removed From Home 15 Months Ago.

New York, April 9.—Mrs. Hugo Reisinger, daughter of the late Adolphus Busch of St. Louis, issued a statement explaining the report that United States secret service agents had discovered that until recently a wireless receiving plant was operated on the roof of her Fifth avenue home.

"There is no wireless or any instrument of this kind on my house or on any building in which I am in any way interested," declared Mrs. Reisinger. "Upwards of a year ago I had in my employ a second man, who was attending a wireless school.

"Unknown to me, he installed a small wireless apparatus on the roof of my house. As soon as I discovered this apparatus I ordered it removed from my roof. This all occurred over fifteen months ago."

SOUTH AMERICA MAY ENTER WAR

COUNTRIES EXPECTED TO TAKE SIDES WITH ALLIES.

BRAZIL'S ACTION IS CERTAIN

Germany's Sinking of Ship Parana Stirs Brazilians—United States Thinks Mexico Will Issue Neutrality Declaration.

Rio Janeiro, April 9.—The league allies has passed a resolution requesting the Brazilian government to immediately declare war on Germany.

Washington, April 9.—Early entrance of several of the South and Central American nations into the war against Germany is regarded here as pratcically certain. Brazil, aroused by the sinking of her steamship Parana, is expected to become a belligerent this week and it is assumed that her lead will be followed promptly by other counties.

Reports of divided opinion in Argentina have given officials here little encouragement to look for aggressive action by that country. Active support of the United States by at least two of the five Central American republics and possibly by four would not be surprising. Officials and unofficial reports that Estrada Cabrera, president of Guatemala, is contemplating seriously a break with Germany have been received. So long as Mexico's course is undefined, unusual interest is attached to the position the Central American governments, especially that of Guatemala controlling the southern frontier of Mexico. In the event of the development of an unfriendly situation in Mexico it is realized that Guatemala's roll would be far from unimportant. In Guatemala, Estrada Cabrera has built up what is regarded generally as the most efficient army in Central America, and with it he would be in a position to lend valuable assistance to the United States. Antipathy between the Guatemalans and the Mexicans there has existed for years

It is known that earnest efforts have been made by consellors of Cabrera to induce him to enter promptly into the war. If he does it is expected that Nicaragua will quickly follow, and that the long standing difficulties between those two countries and Salvador and Honduras may be swept away in a desire to present a United Central America.

An odd situation would be left in the position of Costa Rica. There a new government has just been installed and has apparently no opportunity of recognition by the United States.

American officials continue to watch closely every move in Mexico, but little real anxiety remains. It is believed now that German machinations in that country have failed and that the worst that may be expected from that quarter is a declaration of neutrality.

Investigation by officers of the American army showed that the reports of German reservists crossing from the United States into Mexico have been exaggerated, and that the total number crossing the Rio Grande since the beraking of relations with Germany up to ten days ago was not more than one hundred.

BRAZIL MAY ENTER THE WAR.

Brazilian Minister to France Receives Instruction to Make Urgent Inquiry.

Rio Janeiro, April 9.—The president of the republic, Dr. Wenceslau Braz, and Dr. Laurro Muller, the foreign minister, have hurriedly returned from Para to Rio Janerio. A council of ministers was held yesterday, at which the situation with respect to the war was reclewed and discussed. After the meeting the following official date was issued:

"At the meeting of the cabinet the president, after having explained the situation created by the torpedoing of the steamship Parana and presented the facts relative to this act, which have come to the knowledge of the government, declared himself determined to act with the spirit demanded by national dignity. He added that he awaited only the result of the official inquiry establishing the facts and the circumstances under which the steamer was sunk.

"The government has instructed the Brazilian minister to France to proceed urgently with the inquiry, which will be carried on by our consulate at Cherbourg."

Chilean People Disturbed.

Santiago, Chile, April 9.—The Chilean people are greatly disturbed by the course of events in Brazil in consequence of the sinking by the Germans of the Brazilian steamship Parana. The entrance of Cuba into the war and the attitude of Panama have made a deep impression, and in political quarters the belief is expressed that eventually Chili will be compelled to join in the war against Germany.

Rats and Fires.

At a time when everyone is complaining of the high cost of living it might be well to see if we cannot eliminate two great sources of waste—fires and rats.

Most fires are needless. All rats are so. Some years ago a study of the rat problem in Philadelphia arrived at the conclusion that the rodents of that city ate more than a million dollars' worth of food each year. At that rate, the disgusting creatures can hardly cost less than $100,000,000 per year to the whole country. This is a pretty high price to pay for the companionship of impish pests which, besides their other bad habits, undermine floors and carry the most dreaded of all diseases, bubonic plague.

Yet fires are more expensive than rats. In 1915—the last year for which figures are at hand—the American people paid out in premiums for fire insurance $419,361,346. Of this vast sum at least three-fourths could be saved by reducing our fire record to the rate prevailing in England, France or Germany; and even in our time and nation $300,000,000 per year is a saving worth noting, and one which would have a perceptible effect on the cost of living.

ONE WAY TO BE PATRIOTIC IS TO TILL THE SOIL

The Soil Supports the Corn; Corn Supports the Animals; and Corn and Animals Support the Army.

It is hoped that only in emergencies, it may be necessary for some patriots to unyoke the oxen and leave the plow standing in the furrow, as the lasting support of a nation requires efficient patriots to keep the plows going. The soil supports the corn; corn supports animals; corn and animals support an army; and "armies fight on their bellies." Let us properly care for the goose that lays the golden egg, say Department of Agriculture experts at Washington.

Whether corn prices are high or low, the farmer's profit depends on obtaining large acre yields. Large acre yields reduce the expense of both labor and land. It is remarkable that acre yields are increasing most rapidly in the states southeast and the states north and west of the corn belt states. These increased acre yields are largely due to earlier and thicker planting of better seed corn.

Unnecessary losses from planting poor seed corn are diminishing as it becomes more fully realized that neither frosts nor droughts can exterminate good acclimated varieties if sufficient seed be saved from good crops to last until another good crop is obtained. Good seed corn will retain its powers of germination and production for four or five years.

In the Central and Southern States, the scarcity of soil moisture in the middle of the summer reduces the corn crop more than all other causes combined. The best assurance of a good corn crop is to get moisture into the soil in as large quantities and to as great depths as possible.

To allow weeds, alfalfa, rye or other plants to grow during the spring upon land to be planted to corn is to invite failure of the corn crop.

To allow the soil to become dry enough in the spring before plowing to break up in big clods is to invite failure of the corn crop. If the plowing has been delayed until spring, the land should be disked before it has a chance to become too dry to plow. Disking is more rapid and should be done before the plowing in order to keep the ground from becoming too dry. Deep plowing should not be done in the spring. If followed by drought, it causes the land to dry out to greater depths than would result from shallow plowing.

The main corn planting is now completed in the South. When this main planting begins to form ears, the occurence of a drought will ruin the crop unless a good supply of moisture has been stored in the subsoil. To reduce the chances of loss from drought, one or more later plantings should be made.

Summer droughts are sometimes broken in time to cause later plantings to yield well. Good seed corn should be in readiness to make these later plantings as promptly as possible should droughts or floods injure the early plantings.

Big Patriotic Rally

Auburn Evening Star

If stirring patriotic addresses, inspiring music entered heartily into by an audience of over 1,500 people, young and old, flags waving and the giving anew of the pledge of allegiance to our country and flag, counts for patriotism, then Auburn was surely patriotic Sunday afternoon and demonstrated this fact by the splendid meeting at the DeKalb county court house.

A crowd of men and women, boys and girls, numbering at least 1,500 people gathered in the court house shortly after dinner Sunday and listened to one of the most patriotic and inspiring programs ever given in this city.

There was instrumental music by the Auburn city band and the high school orchestra and a mixed quartet made up of Mrs. A. Z. Arehart, Mrs. Simps Johnson, B. O. Fink and R. G. Dilts lead in such songs as "America," "The Red, White and Blue," "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," and the national hymn, "The Star Spangled Banner."

Mayor J. Y. W. McClellan was the presiding officer and after a few patriotic remarks by him, Rev. A. P. Bourns lead in the invocation. He made a very strong prayer and gave an invocation which was a very appropriate one for such an occasion. Chairman McClellan then introduced Judge D. M. Link who gave a splendid address.

A War Against Autocracy.

"There should be no question of any man's loyalty to his country, whether he be an American born or an American by adoption," said Judge Link.

"There are two sorts of treason. One is when a man proves faithless to his country and his flag. The other is the pointing of the finger of suspicion at a neighbor.

"Let us beware of the calumnies that may be started against our citizens, no matter from what country they may have come."

Judge Link said in his opening remarks that about three years ago the DeKalb county court house had been dedicated to peace and happiness by the people of the county and that at the meeting Sunday afternoon it was being re-dedicated by the same people to patriotism, loyalty and liberty.

He said that it was not necessarily the ruthless manner of the German government in carrying on the war which caused the United States to declare that a state of war existed between the government of the United States and that of Germany, but as President Wilson had said, "the more potent reason of entering into the war was that the war was a conflict between liberty loving people and autocracy.."

Judge Link said that war must crush autocracy and that the American people must allay themselves with the other liberty loving people of the world and expand liberty. To do this we must wage a 100 per cent. war, and thus the freedom of the world will be assured.

"We must be a nation in fact as well as in name," said Mr. Link. "We are all Americans, either by birth or adoption. Those who are Americans by adoption are as ready to uphold the principles of this government, as we who were born beneath the Stars and Stripes."

German-Americans Will be True.

Following Judge Link's address Captain M. B. Willis read the poem, "The Call to the Colors," and after this came another stirring address, by Rev. F. A. Hall.

"Men are prone to say unwise things," said Rev. Hall, "and this is the time when we must be careful what we say about the German-American people. The German-American will be true.

"We Americans are not a waring people and in the conflict which we have entered we contend for principles. We thrashed Great Britain for the violation of a principle and today she is our best friend. It looks as if we will have to do the same thing to another European power." Rev. Hall closed with a quotation from that fine poem, "The Ship of State."

Appeals for More Food.

Following an inspiring song, "Wake Up America," sung by Ralph Clark with band accompaniment, which was well sung and applauded generously, Attorney C. M. Brown arose and said, "We don't know the struggles ahead and it is painful to me to think that perhaps many of us here today may be sacrificed on the field of battle.

"The cause of the European war is now of little moment to us. We were neutral, we wanted to stay out of the war, but I believe we have not gone into it any too soon."

Mr. Brown said that we had protested against the ruthlessness of the German submarine warfare without success and that we should be able to go to the ports of the world and trade in perfect safety but that this had been denied us.

"A large duty awaits us; the world must be fed and we must do it," said the speaker. "We must till the soil and this will be an act of patriotism. Our manufacturers must help too."

Mr. Brown said that the manager of one Auburn fartory had stated to him that if the country needed their factory for use, he would be glad to turn the plant over to the government and do their work without one cent of profit. This bought forth many cheers from the audience.

He also spoke of an Auburn young lady who has tendered her services to the government for work in the ambulance corps and her services had been accepted. He closed by giving a fine tribute to the Auburn soldier boys.

Miss Amber Reesh was next on the program, giving as her offering that grand old poem, "The American Flag," and she gave it in a fine manner.

Not in War for Conquest.

Rev. W. H. Chase then spoke, using as his subject "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" and at the close of his remarks the quartet sang the song, the audience joining in on the chorus.

Rev. Chase said that our country's call was God's call and that we were not entering the war either for conquest or profit. "We do not want or expect to increase our territory or extend our commerce," said he.

"Never in the history of the world has a nation entered a great conflict with purer motives than the one which we speak of today. There is no hate or malice in our hearts.

"We enter the war because we love peace, peace for ourselves and peace for all the world. We believe that God brought this nation into being for a great purpose. We lead all the nations of the earth in christian citizenship.

"Christian citizenship means that God will rule the nations of the earth through the hearts of His people." Rev. Chase then read the "Battle Hymn of the Republic," and the audience caught a new meaning of the words of this hymn.

Following Rev. Chase's talk Mayor McClellan called on Frank Nelson, Auburn's poet, who gave the following:

The Call

Are you ready to serve where'er it we are here?
Is anyone worried or trembling with fear
Has anyone weakened or sickened at heart?
At the thoughts of the duty of doing their part?
Are you ready to serve where-er it may be?
In our own beloved land or over the sea?
Are you ready? I ask. Ah, the answer, I know,
Is, Yes we are ready, ready to go,
With the highest of hopes and hearts beating true,
We are ready to serve neath the Red, White and Blue.

We've all heard the call and we know what it means,
And whatever the picture may be in our dreams
Of the future awaiting, this one thing we know,
That humanity calls and we're ready to go.
Ready to fight and to die, if needs be,
If by dying we know that the world will be free,
Free from the kaisers and monarchs and kings,
And enjoy the blessings that liberty brings.
To win this for the world we can die and be true,
As our fathers were true to the Red, White and Blue.

So we'll follow Old Glory where'er she may lead,
And we'll stamp from the world false autocracy's greed,
And we'll give to all people the freedom at last,
That our fathers gave us in the years that have passed.
With this object in view God will carry us through,
As He ever has done, and the Red, White and Blue
Will be nearer and dearer than ever before,
And Liberty's light that will shine from our shore,
Will lighten a world that forever will be
The Land of the Brave and the Home of the Free.

This was received with great applause and in response to a call of "Give us another one," Mr. Nelson gave this one:

Stand by the President.

The time is gone for argument, you've heard the leader's call,
There's a burden we must carry, there's a service for us all.
From Portland, Maine, to Oregon, the call has now been sent,
Forget the past and get in line, stand by the president!

McKinley called in '98, Old Abe in '61,
And years before they heard the call of Grand Old Washington.
We'll answer now as they did then, in accents loud and long—
"We're coming, Woodrow Wilson, a hundred million strong."

So, one and all we'll heed the call and bear Old Glory on,
We'll fight for her or die for her, 'till every man is gone,
We'll give our lives, our homes, our all, down to our last red cent—
With flag unfurled, we'll show the world, we're with our President.

Catholics are Ready.

Rev. Father Aichinger then gave a splendid address in which he said there were 20,000,000 Catholics in the United States who were ready to stand by the country. "If any Catholic turns traitor to his country," said Rev. Aichinger, "he is ex-communicated.

"The die is cast and America, the greatest country in the world has entered the greatest war the world has ever seen. Blame not President Wilson, nor the Congress. The wickedness of the nations of the earth is the cause of the war.

"We should stand by our country, our flag, our president. A great wave of patriotism is sweeping o'er the country. Nations have disregarded all laws. God wanted them to observe Sunday, but, they disregarded His wish and so many of the nations are spending the Sabbath in the trenches of Europe.

"The wanted no children and so the God of battles has sent their few children to fight in the trenches. God elevated marriage as high as the Sacrament, but some lowered this sacred institution and many people are being punished.

"People wanted to dance and the God of Battles has given them the dance of war, with orchestra music of the howitzer, cannon and musketry.

"Columbia, God's youngest daughter of the nations is now entering war. Here there are no Germans, no Englishmen, no Irish—all Americans," and at this point Rev. Aichinger's words were drowned in a tremendous burst of applause.

Owe But One Allegiance.

Attorney J. E. Pomeroy gave the following advice in his address: "If you don't know what to do, stand still and keep your mouth shut until you do."

Mr. Pomeroy said that whether the people were called to the front or not we should all learn to know what patriotism means. "We owe but one allegiance," said he, "and that is to the Stars and Stripes. The large migration of the people during the past years from Europe to America is the greatest reason for our not having to apologize for America.

"There is a principle at stake now just as there was at the time of the Revolutionary war, the war of 1812 and the war of the Rebellion. And that is 'shall the principle promulgated by the rulers of Germany for the past forty years or the one we Americans have stood for during all the existence of our national life, prevail?'"

Call for Co. K Soon.

Colonel A. L. Kuhlman was then called to the speaker's platform and said that while he was two years too old to enlist, yet Vice President Marshal, Senators New and Watson and Congressman Fairfield had papers bearing his signature signifying his readiness to go when the call came if he was needed.

Colonel Kuhlman said he believed the call would come for Company K soon and that the company needed 100 men now. He believed two or more companies would be taken from DeKalb county besides Company K and that a draft would be made within thirty days.

He called on all present to raise their right hands while he gave the pledge of allegiance and as he finished and asked all to say "I do," the words rang out to the dome of the court house as if one person was speaking.

Colonel Kuhlman asked Mayor McClellan to read the report of the citizens' Defense committee which he did and the report was unanimously adopted.

Captain A. L. Moudy of Company K. was present and called upon for a speech and he responded with a strong appeal for men to enlist.

Collection Amounted to $67.

The finance committee of the Citizens' Defense league took up a collection at the meeting and secured $67.82 which will be used for patriotic purposes.

The members of the committee organized at the meeting last Friday morning in the city hall, which arranged for the splendid meeting Sunday wish to thank very heartily all who helped to make the patriotic demonstration the success that it was.

CLEAN UP AND
WEEK

Last Monday evening, the committee on the "clean up and paint up" campaign met at the office of THE NEWS. It was decided to fall in line with the state and make Sunday, April 22, the day for the the opening gun. At that time, the ministers of the local churches will advocate from their respective pulpits a cleaner and, as naturally follows, a more sanitary St. Joe. It was also decided to put it up to every citizen and house holder to get busy and do his own cleaning, the actual work to begin on Monday. Besides cleaning his own lot, he is requested to kelp clean up adjacent streets and alleys. This means that rubbish of all kinds is to be gathered up and taken to the dumping ground near the cemetery. It is also desired that all loose boards, boxes, etc., be gathered up. In other words, a clean up in the full sense of the word is wanted. Another thing is requested, and that is that owners of vacant lots have pride enough to see that they are put in shape.

It is also noticeable that some pipe smokers are still throwing their empty cans into the streets. These are hard on automobile tires and are evidence that we have an untidy and careless set of smokers.

Do not forget that the committee wants manure heaps cleaned up. The state law requires that they be kept sanitary.

Watch out that waste paper is not thrown on sidewalks nor between buildings. All persons seeing such offenses committed should give the offender a gentle reminder.

The next fellow seen throwing an empty tobacco can into the street should be asked to pick it up, as the committee desires to keep things clean.

Any one seeing a stone of any size in the street should pick it up and throw it to one side. It will not hurt him to do this, and it will be more pleasant for those traveling in buggies and autos.

Also see that those ash piles are hauled to the dump next week.

Quite a number are seeing things in the right light: some lawns are looking neat and trim.

Some are cleaning up in front, but are forgetting the back yard and around the barn.

Gather up those loose boards that are lying loose around the yard and barn. Either make kindling or put them into neat piles.

Everybody have everything neat and trim by the end of next week. Seven long days to do it in.

First clean up your own back yard before you talk about your neighbor's.

If you are able, do what painting you can. It will go a long way.

Some of the closets in town are in a heck of a shape.

PROCLAMATION.

Public Health and Cean-Up Week.

The custom of Spring cleaning is good business. The custom of community effort for Spring cleaning is also good business. In this connection, it is well to keep in mind the saying of Franklin that—"PUBLIC HEALTH IS PUBLIC WEALTH," and also the saying of Wesley that—"CLEANLINESS IS NEXT TO GODLINESS."

I earnestly recommend that all state, county, township, city and town officials, and all professional and business men, farmers, women, children and all citizens, organize in their respective localities to make Indiana clean.

Thinking it appropriate, I have selected

Sunday, April 22nd.
As The First Day Of PUBLIC HEALTH AND CLEAN-UP WEEK,

and I suggest to the churches that special services emphasizing the moral and religious importance of health and cleanliness, be arranged and appointed for that day.

THEREFORE, as Governor, I Proclaim the week beginning Sunday, April 22nd., as PUBLIC HEALTH AND CLEAN-UP WEEK in Indiana.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the Great Seal of the State, at the Capitol, in the City of Indianapolis, this third day of April, 1917.

Governor.

IN INDIANA.

Of the 2,750,000 inhabitants, 84,000 are sick at any one time. Each one of our 500,000 wage earners loses an average of nine days work on account of sickness annually. If each earns $1.50 per day then the annual wage loss is $6,750,000. To this, add for medical treatment, nurses and medicine $100,000 and we have an actual cash loss of $6,850,000. A further unestimated loss exists, namely, the injury done the individual which surely lowers his efficiency and shortens his life more or less.

IT IS IMMORAL TO PERMIT THIS TO CONTINUE WHEN HYGIENE STANDS READY TO MATERIALLY PREVENT IT.

A Drought in Sight.

America's "big push" for food may wipe out her breweries and distilleries. Taking advantage of the threatened food shortage throughout the world and demands on the American farmers to feed not only the United States but her allies, the "drys" in congress are preparing to launch a spectacular drive for "war prohibition." Plans for the effort have been completed and will be announced early next week. The purpose is to stop manufacture of all liquors and beers in the United States at least for the period of the war, thereby diverting millions of bushels of grain into food channels. Those behind the movement declare that more than 600,000,000 bushels of grain would be saved by closing the beer and whiskey plants. "That's enough to feed 12,000,000 people," Dr. Wiley, pure food expert, said.

Cheap and Rich Food.

A New Way to Prepare Breakfast Food at a Small Cost.

Whole wheat, which can be bought in the grain at seed or feed stores, is one of the best all-around cheap and nutritious foods in the country. Every American home should keep a supply of whole wheat. When soaked for several hours and cooked an equal length of time it makes a delicious breakfast food. Ground in a hand grist mill which can be bought for three or four dollars, it is equally palatable when made into bread or used as a cereal.

It has been estimated that when whole wheat, cooked over night in a fireless cooker, or cooked all day on the back of the kitchen range, makes a cereal costing one-sixteenth the price of some of the patent commercial breakfast foods, and furnishes, more-over, fully equal nourishment.

Whole wheat may be cooked without cracking or grinding, but it requires many hours in a double boiler to cook thoroughly. Whole wheat ground in a hand grist mill should be cooked at least three hours over the fire or all night in a fireless cooker. To have the best flavor it should not be too moist. The longer it is cooked the better. It is possible to cook up enough for several days and warm it over as desired. If whole wheat is soaked several hours, it will not need to be cooked so long.

The bureau of chemistry has worked out a recipe for bread made primarily from home ground meal. Two cupfuls of wheat meal, 1 cupful of white flour, 1¼ cupfuls of luke warm water, ½ cake of compressed yeast, 1 level tablespoonful of salt, 1 level tablespoonful of sugar, and 1 level tablespoonful of shortening, if desired, is the formula. Dough of this kind has only two-thirds of the usual rise of white bread. It should be baked slowly for three-quarters of an hour.

Every American woman should know and use whole wheat.

A Farmers' Meeting will be held in the Assembly room of the school house, next Tuesday night, April 24. Everybody invited.

FARMERS!

Organize for the War.

In accordance with the plans of the Agricultural Department at Washington, for a larger production and conservation of our food supplies, and working through the extention department of Purdue University, it is desired that the several townships of DeKalb Co., be closely organized, that the best results may obtain at this time of war, when so much depends on the farmer. Concord township already has two Farmers' Clubs and Newville and Spencer will be organized this week.

The County Agent can work more effectively through these townships and be of more use to the farmer.

Newville township will meet at the Newville Center school house, Friday evening of this week, at 8 o'clock, sun time, to organize.

Spencer township will meet at the Silberg Garage, at Spencerville, Saturday evening, at 8 o'clock, for the same purpose.

This is the time to be patriotic and do your mite toward a successful conclusion of the war. Every farmer should attend and lend his assistance. Committee.

SUFFRAGE LAW IS NOT VALID?

Antis Will Test Constitutionality of New Law in the Marion County Court.

WOMEN WILL DEFEND LAW

Attack to Be Made on Two Points and Effort Made to Secure Decision Before Constitutional Convention Meets.

Indianapolis.—It has become known that plans for attacking the validity of the equal suffrage law passed by the general assembly last winter have been virtually completed and a suit is expected to be filed shortly asking that the act be held unconstitutional.

The suit probably will be filed in time for those supporting it to obtain a decision from the Indiana supreme court before the election of delegates to the constitutional convention in September.

The suit will be filed in the Marion county courts, probably in one of the branches of the supreme court, it was said, and an appeal will be taken regardless of the decision of the county court.

Chief Objections Met.

The following allegations will be made, it is said:

"That the act is in violation of the state constitution, in that it permits women to vote, when the constitution provides specifically that suffrage shall be extended only to male citizens.

"That it is invalid because it distinguishes between native-born and foreign-born women, excluding those born in a foreign country from exercising the right of franchise and permitting native-born women to vote."

Those who are furthering the interests of the action pointed out that the writers of the present constitution forestalled the passage of a woman suffrage act by the legislature when, in fixing the qualifications of voters, they blocked such a statute by making the following provision in article 3:

"In all elections not otherwise provided for in this constitution, every male citizen of the United States . . . shall be entitled to vote in the township or precinct where he may reside. . . ."

All Within Prohibition.

In this connection it is pointed out that the constitution expressly prohibits women from voting, not only for constitutional offices, but for statutory offices, since it specifically states that, "In all elections not otherwise provided for by this constitution. . . ."

It will be contended that this reference is a barrier preventing the legislature from passing an act permitting women to vote. In this connection it is also said that, while equal suffrage advocates have contended that the Indiana statute is identical with the law of Illinois, where part suffrage is granted to women, the constitution of Illinois is different, since it makes no reference to elections "not otherwise provided for" by the constitution.

It has been agreed by lawyers who have studied the suffrage act that its provisions are such that a foreign-born woman must attain full citizenship before being permitted to vote, while a man may exercise that right after merely declaring his intention to become a citizen. In that way the act, it is alleged, militates against a foreign-born woman in favor of a native-born, which, it is contended, makes it unconstitutional.

It was said that other features of the act probably will be attacked in the suit.

Food Conservation.

A conference was held in the governor's offices of more than 200 farmers, grain dealers, live-stock breeders, fruit growers, canners, bankers and others from all parts of the state to make plans for the greater food production and conservation of food supplies on account of the conditions produced by the war.

Food Director Named.

Prof. G. I. Christie of Purdue university was appointed state food director by Governor Goodrich. Professor Christie will direct the extensive efforts to increase the food production in Indiana this summer and will be charged with the task of co-ordinating all the different energies engaged in the work.

The state food director will have three deparaments under his direction: First, to aid and increase the acreage planted on farms; second, to bring into cultivation unused lands in cities and towns; third, to aid and enlarge the back yard gardening movement.

Put on Girls' School Board.

Governor Goodrich has appointed Mrs. Winfield Scott Johnson of Bloomington as a member of the board of trustees of the Indiana Girls' school at Clermont. She succeeds Mrs. John W. Kern, whose term expired April 1. Mrs. Johnson formerly lived in Indianapolis, where she was active in club circles. She went to Bloomington to become the chaperon at a sorority house. She is well-known throughout the state because of being a secretary in the Indiana State Federation of Clubs.

Tribute to Old Glory.

Gov. James P. Goodrich addressed the employees of the Service Motor Car company and a large number of citizens at the service plant at Wabash, where a large flag, bought by the employees, was raised. The governor said:

"I am glad to be with you today to perform what in this time of national crisis is the most sacred duty of a citizen of the United States, the duty of honoring the American flag.

"It would seem that almost nothing has been left unsaid in tribute to our national emblem. The poets for more than a century have sung its praises. It has been the inspiration of millions of free men and has been the modern Star of Bethlehem to millions more born in the land of oppression.

"We have been told how its red is the blood of myriads who have died in defense of its honor, how its white betokens the purity of purpose which has characterized its people since the founding of the republic, and how its blue represents the fidelity of the nation—a faith and singleness of purpose which has given rise to the term of 'true blue American.'

Most Beautiful on Earth.

"To every citizen of this broad land of ours Old Glory is the most beautiful emblem on earth, and we worship it accordingly. Yet I would not have you lose sight of the fact that after all our flag is but a symbol, loved not for its shape or its colors, but for the thing which it represents. For, after all, a flag is no grander, no more beautiful than the government for which it stands, and no government can be pure or better than the people who make it up. It is, therefore, as a symbol of America and the things for which America stands that Old Glory commands a loving tribute from the greatest nation on earth.

"It is not necessary that I recount in detail our national ideals to you here today. These are engraved in the heart of every one of you and have been cherished there since first in the schoolroom you imbibed the history of the republic.

Why Old Glory Is Grand.

"Old Glory is grand and beautiful because it represents the first government devoted solely to the interests of the people, because it represents the best government that has ever been devised by human agency moved by the inspiration of the Omnipotent Creator. It is grand and beautiful to those whose ancestors fought at Bunker Hill and starved at Valley Forge, because of the priceless heritage it has afforded them, and it is just as grand and beautiful to those of us who came from a land across the sea, because it represents the one great chance to work out our destinies according to our just deserts.

"I need not remind you of the crisis which confronts us today. After years of peace we are face to face with a mortal struggle with a foreign power. That is why we are unfurling Old Glory today. And Old Glory looks as beautiful now as in days gone by, because we know that our flag is being unfurled not for conquest, not for tribute, but for the protection of American rights, and perhaps for the freeing of people who now look upon us as an enemy seeking to destroy.

Each Will Do His Share.

"And just as I need not remind you of the crisis which now confronts us, neither need I ask you to stand unflinchingly by your flag and the government at Washington. Love of country and reverence to its banner are plain to be seen on every countenance here today. I know that you will meet every situation that may confront you and meet it successfully. I know that each one of you will do his share toward bringing one more victory to the old flag, whether this be by meeting the enemy face to face or converting the natural resources of the country into sinews of war.

"Indiana is aroused to the common danger, and as Indiana, so is the nation aroused, and the flag which inspired the patriots to victory at Yorktown, and again at New Orleans, the flag which rallied the boys in blue from from '61 to '65 that the nation might live, the flag whose starry folds led the charge which broke the back of foreign oppression at San Juan hill—this same flag is flying from every spire and every peak in America, and this means that every American, regardless of race, creed or ancestry is going to do his duty."

Public Health Week.

Governor Goodrich in a proclamation has designated Sunday, April 22, as the first day of public health and cleanup week, and suggests in his proclamation that special services be conducted in the churches of the state, emphasizing the moral and religious importance of health and cleanliness." Designating the week beginning April 22 as public health and cleanup week, the governor recommends that "all state, county, township, city and town officials and all professional and business men, farmers, women, children and all citizens organize in their respective communities to help keep Indiana clean."

Party Conventions to Be held.

Special conventions of the Republican and Democratic parties to name candidates for 15 delegates at large to the constitutional convention may be held in the near future.

Plans for selecting candidates were advanced at meetings here. The Democratic state committee named a committee of 27 to confer with Republicans later on a plan of action. Chairman Hays of the Republican party, after a conference with leaders, called a larger and more general conference for April 17.

FRUIT LAXATIVE FOR SICK CHILD

"California Syrup of Figs" can't harm tender stomach, liver and bowels.

Every mother realizes, after giving her children "California Syrup of Figs" that this is their ideal laxative, because they love its pleasant taste and it thoroughly cleanses the tender little stomach, liver and bowels without griping.

When cross, irritable, feverish, or breath is bad, stomach sour, look at the tongue, mother! If coated, give a teaspoonful of this harmless "fruit laxative," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, sour bile and undigested food passes out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again. When its little system is full of cold, throat sore, has stomach-ache, diarrhoea, indigestion, colic—remember, a good "inside cleaning" should always be the first treatment given.

KAZAN

The Story of a Dog That Turned Wolf

By

James Oliver Curwood

Copyright Bobbs-Merrill Co.

KAZAN ONCE AGAIN COMES UNDER MAN'S INFLUENCE AND PERFORMS GREAT GOOD DEEDS.

Kazan, a vicious Alaskan sledge dog, one-quarter wolf, saves his master's life and is taken along when the master goes to civilization to meet his bride and return with her to the frozen country. Even the master is afraid to touch the dog, but Isobel, Kazan's new mistress, wins his affection at once. On the way northward McCready, a dog-team driver, joins the party, and on the following night, inflamed by drink, he beats the master insensible and attacks the bride. Kazan flies at the assailant's throat, kills him, flees to the woods, joins a wolf pack, whips the leader and takes a young mate, Gray Wolf.

Three hundred yards beyond that moving blotch was the thin line of timber, and Kazan and his followers bore down swiftly. Halfway to the timber they were almost upon it, and suddenly it stopped and became a black and motionless shadow on the snow. From out of it there leaped that lightning tongue of flame that Kazan had always dreaded, and he heard the hissing song of the death-bee over his head. He did not mind it now. He yelped sharply, and the wolves raced in until four of them were neck-and-neck with him.

A second flash—and the death-bee drove from breast to tail of a huge gray fighter close to Gray Wolf. A third—a fourth—a fifth spurt of that fire from the black shadow, and Kazan himself felt a sudden swift passing of a red-hot thing along his shoulder, where the man's last bullet shaved off the hair and stung his flesh.

Three of the pack had gone down under the fire of the rifle, and half of the others were swinging to the right and the left. But Kazan drove straight ahead. Faithfully Gray Wolf followed him.

The sledge-dogs had been freed from their traces, and before he could reach the man, whom he saw with his rifle held like a club in his hands, Kazan was met by the fighting mass of them. He fought like a fiend, and there was the strength and the fierceness of two mates in the mad gnashing of Gray Wolf's fangs. Kazan wanted to reach the man who held the rifle, and he freed himself from the fighting mass of the dogs and sprang to the sledge. For the first time he saw that there was something human on the sledge, and in an instant he was upon it. He buried his jaws deep. They sank in something soft and hairy, and he opened them for another lunge. And then he heard the voice! It was her voice! Every muscle in his body stood still. He became suddenly like flesh turned to lifeless stone.

Her voice; the bear rug was thrown back and what had been hidden under it he saw clearly now in the light of the moon and the stars. In him instinct worked more swiftly than human brain could have given birth to reason. It was not she. But the voice was the same, and the white girlish face so close to his own blood-reddened eyes held in it that same mystery that he had learned to love. And he saw now that which she was clutching to her breast, and there came from it a strange thrilling cry.

In a flash he turned. He snapped at Gray Wolf's flank, and she dropped away with a startled yelp. It had all happened in a moment, but the man was almost down. Kazan leaped under his clubbed rifle and drove into the face of what was left of the pack. His fangs cut like knives. If he had fought like a demon against the dogs, he fought like ten demons now, and the man—bleeding and ready to fall—staggered back to the sledge, marveling at what was happening. For in Gray Wolf there was now the instinct of matehood, and seeing Kazan tearing and fighting the pack she joined him in the struggle which she could not understand.

When it was over, Kazan and Gray Wolf were alone out on the plain. The pack had slunk away into the night, and the same moon and stars that had given to Kazan the first knowledge of his birthright told him now that no longer would those wild brothers of the plains respond to his call when he howled into the sky.

He was hurt. And Gray Wolf was hurt, but not so badly as Kazan. He was torn and bleeding. One of his legs was terribly bitten. After a time he saw a fire in the edge of the forest. The old call was strong upon him. He wanted to crawl in to it, and feel the girl's hand on his head, as he had felt that other hand in the world beyond the ridge. He would have gone—and would have urged Gray Wolf to go with him—but the man was there. He whined, and Gray Wolf thrust her warm muzzle against his neck. Something told them both that they were outcasts, that the plains, and the moon, and the stars were against them now, and they slunk into the shelter and the gloom of the forest.

Kazan could not go far. He could still smell the camp when he lay down. Gray Wolf snuggled close to him. Gently she soothed with her soft tongue Kazan's bleeding wounds. And Kazan, lifting his head, whined softly to the stars.

CHAPTER VII.

Joan.

On the edge of the cedar and spruce forest old Pierre Radisson built the fire. He was bleeding from a dozen wounds, where the fangs of the wolves had reached to his flesh, and he felt in his breast that old and terrible pain, of which no one knew the meaning but himself. He dragged in log after log, piled them on the fire until the flames leaped up to the crisping needles of the limbs above, and heaped a supply close at hand for use later in the night.

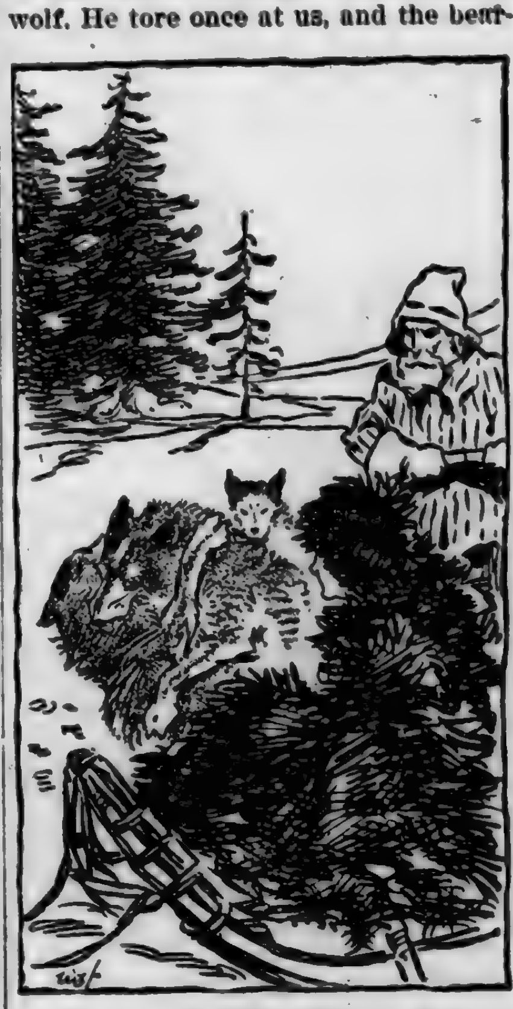
From the sledge Joan watched him, still wild-eyed and fearful, still trembling. She was holding her baby close to her breast. Her long heavy hair smothered her shoulders and arms in a dark lustrous veil that glistened and rippled in the firelight when she moved. Her young face was scarcely a woman's tonight, though she was a mother. She looked like a child.

Old Pierre laughed as he threw down the last armful of fuel, and stood breathing hard.

"It was close, ma cherie," he panted through his white beard. "We were nearer to death out there on the plain than we will ever be again, I hope. But we are comfortable now, and warm. Eh? You are no longer afraid?"

He sat down beside his daughter, and gently pulled back the soft fur that enveloped the bundle she held in her arms. He could see one pink cheek of baby Joan. The eyes of Joan, the mother, were like stars.

"It was the baby who saved us," she whispered. "The dogs were being torn to pieces by the wolves, and I saw them leaping upon you, when one of them sprang to the sledge. At first I thought it was one of the dogs. But it was a wolf. He tore once at us, and the bearskin saved us. He was almost at my throat when baby cried, and then he stood there, his red eyes a foot from us, and I could have sworn that he was a dog. In an instant he turned, and was fighting the wolves. I saw him leap upon one that was almost at your throat."



Fought Like Ten Demons Now.

"He was a dog," said old Pierre, holding out his hands to the warmth. "They often wander away from the posts, and join the wolves. I have had dogs do that. Ma cherie, a dog is a dog all his life. Kicks, abuse, even the wolves cannot change him—for long. He was one of the pack. He came with them—to kill. But when he found us—"

"He fought for us," breathed the girl. She gave him the bundle, and stood up, straight and tall and slim in the firelight. "He fought for us—and he was terribly hurt," she said. "I saw him drag himself away. Father, if he is out there—dying—"

Pierre Radisson stood up. He coughed in a shuddering way, trying to stifle the sound under his beard. The fleck of crimson that came to his lips with the cough Joan did not see. She had seen nothing of it during the six days they had been traveling up from the edge of civilization. Because of that cough, and the strain that came with it, Pierre had made more than ordinary haste.

"I have been thinking of that," he said. "He was badly hurt, and I do not think he went far. Here—take little Joan and sit close to the fire until I come back."

The moon and the stars were brilliant in the sky when he went out in the plain. A short distance from the edge of the timber line he stood for a moment upon the spot where the wolves had overtaken them an hour before. Not one of his four dogs had lived. The snow was red with their blood, and their bodies lay stiff where they had fallen under the pack. Pierre shuddered as he looked at them. If the wolves had not turned their first mad attack upon the dogs, what would have become of himself, Joan and the baby? He turned away, with another of those hollow coughs that brought the blood to his lips.

A few yards to one side he found in the snow the trail of the strange dog that had come with the wolves, and had turned against them in that moment when all seemed lost. It was not a clean running trail. It was more of a furrow in the snow, and Pierre Radisson followed it, expecting to find the dog dead at the end of it.

In the sheltered spot to which he had dragged himself in the edge of the forest, Kazan lay for a long time after the fight, alert and watchful. He felt no very great pain. But he had lost the power to stand upon his legs. His flanks seemed paralyzed. Gray Wolf crouched close at his side, sniffing the air. They could smell the camp, and Kazan could detect the two things that were there—man and woman. He knew that the girl was there, where he could see the glow of the firelight through the spruce and the cedars. He wanted to go to her. He wanted to drag himself close in to the fire, and take Gray Wolf with him, and listen to her voice, and feel the touch of her hand. But the man was there, and to him man had always meant the club, the whip, pain, death.

Gray Wolf crouched close to his side, and whined softly as she urged Kazan to flee deeper with her into the forest. At last she understood that he could not move, and she ran nervously out into the plain, and back again, until her footprints were thick in the trail she made. The instincts of matehood were strong in her. It was she who first saw Pierre Radisson coming over their trail, and she ran swiftly back to Kazan and gave the warning.

Then Kazan caught the scent, and he saw the shadowy figure coming through the starlight. He tried to drag himself back, but he could move only by inches. The man came rapidly nearer. Kazan caught the glisten of the rifle in his hand. He heard his hollow cough, and the tread of his feet in the snow. Gray Wolf crouched shoulder to shoulder with him, trembling and showing her teeth. When Pierre had approached within fifty feet of them she slunk back into the deeper shadows of the spruce.

Kazan's fangs were bared menacingly when Pierre stopped and looked down at him. With an effort he dragged himself to his feet, but fell back into the snow again. The man leaned his rifle against a sapling and bent over him fearlessly. With a fierce growl Kazan snapped at his extended hands. To his surprise the man did not pick up a stick or a club. He held out his hand again—cautiously—and spoke in a voice new to Kazan. The dog snapped again, and growled.

The man persisted, talking to him all the time, and once his mittened hand touched Kazan's head, and escaped before the jaws could reach it. Again and again the man reached out his hand, and three times Kazan felt the touch of it, and there was neither threat nor hurt in it. At last Pierre turned away and went back over the trail.

When he was out of sight and hearing, Kazan whined, and the crest along his spine flattened. He looked wistfully toward the glow of the fire. The man had not hurt him, and the three-quarters of him that was dog wanted to follow.

Gray Wolf came back, and stood with stiffly planted forefeet at his side. She had never been this near to man before, except when the pack had overtaken the sledge out on the plain. She could not understand. Every instinct that was in her warned her that he was the most dangerous of all things, more to be feared than the strongest beasts, the storms, the floods, cold and starvation. And yet this man had not harmed her mate. She sniffed at Kazan's back and head, where the mittened hand had touched. Then she trotted back into the darkness again, for beyond the edge of the forest she once more saw moving life.

The man was returning, and with him was the girl. Her voice was soft and sweet, and there was about her the breath and sweetness of woman. The man stood prepared, but not threatening.

"Be careful, Joan," he warned.

She dropped on her knees in the snow, just out of reach.

"Come, boy—come!" she said gently. She held out her hand. Kazan's muscles twitched. He moved an inch.—two inches toward her. There was the old light in her eyes and face now, the love and gentleness he had known once before, when another woman with shining hair and eyes had come into his life. "Come!" she whispered as she saw him move, and she bent a little, reached a little farther with her hand, and at last touched his head.

The young woman, by kindness, wins from this fierce wolf-dog a service that saves her life. It's all told in the next installment.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Not Like a Church.

The express elevator in one of the office buildings flew up to the tenth floor. Nobody called for a floor number, nobody spoke.

All at once a timid little voice said: "Mother, please, may I speak?"

"Of course, dear, why not?" answered mother.

"O, it is not here like in church then, isn't it?" came the quite relieved reply.

The Exception.

"I am going to call up that pretty telephone girl and ask her to marry me."

"Then you won't get the usual answer."

"What do you mean?"

"She'll hurry to reply, 'Ring on.'"

'CLEAN UP' AN ANCIENT IDEA

Hercules Cleaned the Augean Stables by Using River as Broom, Long, Long Ago.

Nowadays Health and Beauty Demand Sanitation in Home and Town—More Than 6,000 Communities Are Busy This Year.

By HAROLD G. BLODGETT.

"Clean-up" effort is of prehistoric origin. Ask the school children and they will tell you that in Greek mythology they read of a "clean-up day" that for colossal endeavor and results probably beats any renovating job of the rapid-fire sort undertaken since. It is not a pretty story, but here it is: Augeas, the king of Elis, was not strong on sanitation.

For decades he had permitted filth to accumulate. He didn't care much about his people or his health, but he had a little herd of some 3,000 oxen of which he was considerably proud. For 30 years the stable which housed the herd had not been cleaned, when suddenly old Augeas awoke. He wanted the stable cleaned.

The job was so stupendous that ordinary mortals could make no headway against the piles of refuse, until Hercules, who had never before been famed as a sanitarian, stepped up and said he would clean it up. Two rivers, the Alpheus and the Peneus, flowed near by. Hercules changed the course of the rivers until they flowed through the Augean stables, and in a day the "clean-up" task was accomplished.

Hercules Emulated.

Since that day "clean-up" has had its place in the world's vernacular. With the spring the desire to refurbish comes subconsciously into the hearts of men and women, and communities. But without direction and sustained effort the expression of that desire, in the form of the ordinary "clean-up day" or "week," has resulted in such a superficial sally against filth that the more experienced and earnest civic workers have for long held such "days" in disrepute.

Hercules was of the gods. If he wanted to "clean-up" in a day the heavens backed him and he did it. Since that day men and women, mere mortals, have sought to emulate the original "clean-up" expert in speed, and they have failed. Communities for years have conducted "clean-up days" of the annual-bath order, only to find that the next day there was filth "behind the ears" and "between the toes." And a week later conditions generally were as bad as ever.

It remained for Allen W. Clark, publisher of a St. Louis trade paper, to turn the "spring clean-up" interests into permanent and constructive channels. Years ago Mr. Clark made up his mind that this could be done; that real campaigns, working toward definite ideals and accomplishing real results, could be organized everywhere to take the place of the old hit-or-miss "clean-up" methods.

In May, 1912, he founded a "clean-up" and "paint-up" organization. He hoped that a thorough-going movement, national in its scope and practical in its principles, might take the place of the "annual bath" idea as expressed in the old-time "clean-up day" or "week."

Movement Growing.

For four years the scope of this movement has been rapidly extended until this year it is co-operating with more than 6,000 local communities in the organization and direction of real "clean-up and paint-up" campaigns, not "days" or "weeks."

Continuous campaigns for homes and home towns beautiful, sanitary and safe, conducted by permanent committees, and involving the co-operation of city and town officials, clubwomen, commercial organizations, the schoolchildren, fire prevention interests, all business men and property owners and the press, and the goal aimed at by all of the "clean-up" propaganda. And this solid success is being achieved in thousands of cities and towns throughout the country today. In fact, requests for "clean-up" assistance have come from South America, the Philippines, Australia, India, Canada, England and France. The slogan, "Clean up and paint up" has indeed become the battle cry of earnest and practical civic workers 'round the world.

Such magazines as Outlook, Pictorial Review, Every Week, Associated Sunday Magazine, the American City, Kansas Municipalities, Journal of Michigan Municipalities have printed extensive editorials and feature articles on the practical value of the work.

OPPORTUNITY FOR BOY SCOUT

"Wonderful progress has been made during the past year in developing in Boy Scouts a recognition of their opportunities for service to others and of their community obligations. For instance, specific reports of such civic help as co-operation in "safety first," antifly, antimosquito and "clean-up" and paint-up" campaigns, improving school gardens, planting trees, protecting parks and acting as emergency police have been received from more than 200 different places which have been actually recorded.

ALL WORK TO CLEAN UP TOWN

Monkeys imitate. And there's a lot of "monkeys" in most of us.

Imitation is bad for the monkey if his model is bad, but the climber who follows a good example keeps out of a lot of trouble. Just so with us mortals. Inspired by environment, we can think great thoughts and do things worth while. Depressed by environment, we can sink into the depths.

But thanks to the human power of initiative, we can shape our environment—we can make it what we will, if we will. And so intimate are our own interests linked up with those of our neighbors that when we improve our own surroundings, be it ever so little, we improve theirs.

Right there the "monkey" in man asserts itself.

The fact that we are "our brother's keeper," responsible to a certain extent for the example we set him, may not weigh heavily on our shoulders. But the "monkey" in man keeps right on working just the same.

Today your neighbor slicks up his yard, cleans the alley, removes rubbish, plants flowers, trims his hedge, paints his house.

Tomorrow you will find that your own place looks sick. You never noticed before that a little cleaning up and painting up and greening up would accomplish so much in making home life happy and healthy through the long outdoor months of summer. So you get busy with the pruning shears, the rake, the lawn mower, the garden hose and the spade. You start a painter working on your house and outbuildings. Forthwith you, your wife and the kiddies begin to realize more fully the joy of living in this community through the good old summer time.

Day after tomorrow other neighbors will begin to "perk up" their premises and their persons. Then others will follow their example, and so the spirit of spring's generation will spread from house to house and block to block.

But let's not wait for this creeping regeneration.

Let's each start something today that will help make our own little corner of the community sanitary and more safe.

If there is unsightly advertising on your property see that it is removed.

Clean up your property, business and residence, inside and outside, front and back.

Help the authorities keep streets and alleys clean. Do not throw papers or rubbish in streets or yards.

If your ash pit is full have it cleaned out. If it is out of repair and a fire risk have it repaired.

See that manure is removed from stables once a week.

See that garbage is kept only in metal containers, with tightly-fitting covers. Vermin and flies will pester you if you don't.

Clean up your vacant lots and turn them into flower or vegetable gardens.

Study the smoke that comes from your chimney and eliminate it.

If there are old shacks on your property, which are unsightly and fire risks, have them removed.

If you have no yard for a garden plant flower boxes for your windows.

If you own vacant property make it look at its best. A tenant will move in so much the sooner.

Let's make "Clean Up and Paint Up and Keep It Up" a real slogan hereabouts by living up to it.

TRAINING FUTURE CITIZENS

The boys and girls of today are the men and women of tomorrow. Boys and girls live in a very real world. It is a world of present activity, not future activity. The boy may be "president" or the girl may be "a great lady" some day—but the work and play of every day is the serious "business" at hand. It is serious business to the young people—talk with one of them for a minute and see. And it may be serious business in fact, just as worth while in human progress as the larger part of the daily activity of the "grown-ups." All that is necessary is that adults give the boys and girls real business to do, something worth while—that they consider the young people "junior citizens" rather than "future citizens."

"Clean up and paint up" effort, wisely directed, gives the boys and girls something important and definite to do for themselves and the community. Their part in the local campaign should be important.

SELF-RESPECT AND PAINT

The towns that have made themselves a part of the "clean-up and paint-up" movement are cleaner and better because of it. Naturally the paint dealer, the carpenter, florist and others profit by such campaigns. None but the pessimist will object to this. They give value received and more. The house that is painted and repainted is the better for it. A neighborhood that has cleaned up and painted up is a better one in which to live. Paint makes for self-respect and justifiable pride.

CLEAN-UP POET BUSY

Little cans of paint,

Enterprising Newsboy.

A theatrical representative tells that he ran across the most enterprising newsboy in the world:

"I was coming from the station when a little fellow ran up to me and called:

"'Poiper, mister?'

"'No.'

"'Carry yer grip?'

"'No.'

"'Git you a taxi?'

"'No.'

"'Wanna guide?'

"I told him I didn't need a guide, and he planted himself squarely in front of me.

"'Want me to turn a flip-flop for you?' he asked.

Locked Out.

It was very late when Mr. Bings came home. To his great annoyance he found that he had forgotten his latchkey and was obliged to ring the bell.

Mrs. Bings opened the window.

"Who's there?" she inquired.

"It's me, love!" said Bings.

"Where have you been at this time of night?"

"I've been sitting up with a sick friend, my dear."

"Oh, you have, have you?" snorted Mrs. Bings. "Well, you'd better go right back to him. You ought to be ashamed of yourself to desert him at this hour."

Then she slammed the window down and retired.

Thrift Gardens In a Clean Up Campaign Reduce Living Cost

Thrift gardens will be the innovation and one of the dominant features of the fifth annual crusade of the national clean up and paint up campaign bureau, which is being directed from the national headquarters, Security building, St. Louis.

The thrift garden idea, which means the utilizing of the back yards, vacant lots and waste grounds of a community, was originated by Allen W. Clark, chairman and founder of the national clean up and paint up campaign, with a view of directing the attention of the people of the towns and cities to an immediate and effective way of reducing the high cost of living. A thrift garden in the back yard 25 by 50 feet will—at a cost not exceeding $2 for best seeds and $5 for fertilizer—if properly cultivated very materially reduce the cost of living.

It will supply a family of six with fresh vegetables throughout the season.

It can be made to yield produce, in cash value, from $50 to $100 per season.

It will provide wholesome and profitable exercise of mind and body.

It will make a more contented people.

It will teach preparedness and economy.

It will conserve the resources of the country.

Be Sure to Put Brains Behind Your Brooms

To make your town worth while you must put brains behind your brooms. You must plan clearly with thoughts beyond present conditions. You must build your civic house with the future of your children and your children's children clearly before you. You must do hard things now in order that more abounding prosperity and civilization may come after you. The essentials of town planning are:

Cleanliness.
Godliness.
Industries.
Care for the children.
Cleanliness always comes first.

Here are a few testimonials for patent medicine men: "I have been unable to walk without crutches for many years, but after using your medicine I ran for office." "I lost my eyesight four years ago. I used a bottle of your eye wash and I saw wood." "I have been dumb ever since I was married; but the other day, after taking your remedy I had a speaking likeness taken at the photographers." "Some time ago I lost the use of both arms. Shortly after buying a bottle of your nerve tonic I struck a man for ten dollars." "I had been deaf for many years, but after using your ointment I heard my aunt had died and left me $10,000." And here is the best one of all, written by a tramp who had been sent to the workhouse for sixty days for stealing six bottles of Iruinya: "Gentlemen: Before taking your medicine I never did an honest stroke of work. I took six bottles and have worked steadily ever since."

Announcement Party.

On last Wednesday evening, Miss Flossie Sechler gave an Announcement party at which time she told of her approaching marriage to Charles Everett Mavis, of Hicksville, Ohio, to a number of her young matron and girl friends. The rooms were beautitully decorated. The dining room was decorated in pink with pink carnations and pink tulips. The sitting room and parlor was in yellow, with yellow Jonquils. The first part of the evening was just spent in visiting. Then a few contests were given, one of which was "A Hunt for Hearts." The one finding the most was given a prize. The one finding the large heart, which had the announcement written on it was to become the next. Mrs. Zelpha Steward found the most, and Miss DeVeta Bayman found the big heart which announced the coming marriage as taking place sometime before the first of May. Miss Gladys Kain also was winner in one of the contest. After this the luncheon of Escalloped Potatoes, salmon loaf and peas, olives, pickles, sandwiches, fruit salad, cake and coffee was served. Jonquils were given as favors. Those present were:—Mesdames Vernie Rhodes Avis Staman, Berniece Baker, and Zelpha Steward; the Misses Inez Hart, Ethel Wallace, Agnes Sechler, Lela Wallace, DeVeta Bayman, Ina Shorden, Gladys Kain and Audrey Coburn.

COMB SAGE TEA IN HAIR TO DARKEN IT

It's Grandmother's Recipe to keep her Locks Dark, Glossy, Beautiful.

The old-time mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur for darkening gray, streaked and faded hair is grandmother's recipe, and folks are again using it to keep their hair a good, even color, which is quite sensible, as we are living in an age when a youthful appearance is of the greatest advantage.

Nowadays, though, we don't have the troublesome task of gathering the sage and the mussy mixing at home. All drug stores sell the ready-to-use product, improved by the addition of other ingredients, called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" for about 50 cents a bottle. It is very popular because nobody can discover it has been applied. Simply moisten your comb or a soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also produces that soft lustre and appearance of abundance which is so attractive. This ready-to-use preparation is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire a more youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

It Works! Try It

Tells how to loosen a sore, tender corn so it lifts out without pain.

Good news spreads rapidly and druggists here are kept busy dispensing freezone, the ether discovery of a Cincinnati man, which is said to loosen any corn so it lifts out with the fingers.

Ask at any pharmacy for a quarter ounce of freezone, which will cost very little, but is said to be sufficient to rid one's feet of every hard or soft corn or callus.

You apply just a few drops on the tender, aching corn and instantly the soreness is relieved, and soon the corn is so shriveled that it lifts out without pain. It is a sticky substance which dries when applied and never inflames or even irritates the adjoining tissue.

This discovery will prevent thousands of deaths annually from lockjaw and infection heretofore resulting from the suicidal habit of cutting corns.

COULD NOT EXPECT MORE

Two Years Illness Cured by Glando The Great Gland Tonic.

Mrs. Susan B. Taylor, 348 S. Williams St., Paulding, Ohio, said: "Two years ago I had a general break-down. I was nervous, languid, and hardly able to drag around. My liver and kidneys were sluggish and my complexion sallow. I felt sleepy and drowsy most all day, yet I did not sleep well at night. My heart fluttered terribly at times. I was in this miserable condition two years. A friend persuaded me to try Glando Tonic. The first treatment helped me. I am taking the sixth treatment and am feeling so well that I gladly recommend Glando Tonic to any one who suffers as I did."

Nearly every case of poor health is due to inactivity of the liver, kidneys and other glands. There is enough poison produced in the body every day to cause poor health if it is not eliminated. This poison can be removed only by keeping the glands in a good working condition. Some of the most common symptoms of inactive ganlds are headache, dizziness, indigestion, constipation, backache, pain or ache under the shoulder blade, biliousness, tonsilitis and quinsy. These conditions can be most quickly relieved by using Glando the Great Gland Tonic. It restores the glands to action, removes the impurities and builds up the entire system. Sold only in 50-cent treatments and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Manufactured by the Gland Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

DISEASE AND DIRT ARE TWINS

Filth in Streets May Cause Your Death, So Help as Much as You Can to Clean Town.

See That the Children Wash Hands and Face Before Eating—and Fight Flies, for They're Pestilent.

By DR. A. S. BARNES.

Dirt and disease are apt to go together, but until lately no one knew why. Today we know that dirt and disease often are closely connected, because dirt generally is not merely dead earth, but rather a kind of living earth, crowded with unseen and almost countless germs of microbes, some of which are dangerous, and even deadly.

Dirty streets are dangerous because the dirt in this case may cling to shoes or other articles of footwear and be carried from the streets into houses where, either as fresh dirt or more often as dry dirt (dust), it may find its way to foods or other articles, which either enter or touch the mouths of members of the household.

Street dust also is dangerous when dried up or pulverized or turned into dust which may be readily lifted and blown about, thus finding its way perhaps directly into the mouths of human beings or through cracks or crevices or open doors and windows into human habitations, and finally into human bodies, with articles of food or drink.

Dust Causes Many Diseases.

The connection between street dust and a number of diseases now is clearly established. It is claimed that out of 46 experiments on animals, the germs contained in city and dust caused infectious diseases in 32 cases.

Dust may so lower the vitality of the mucous membranes by producing an irritated condition of the respiratory organs that the development of disease is made easy from the germs deposited thereon.

Street dust consists of ashes ground-up steel, iron, stone and asphaltum; house and store sweepings, pollens of plants, excrements of horses, dogs and birds, dried sputa, dead pulverized insects, pulverized earth, plaster and cement, earth from street excavations, soot from chimneys, debris from fruit stands, garbage and even human excrements, which in crowded regions frequently are voided by children or adults in alleys and ill-lighted streets.

This filth is being whirled into our faces by the wind, by motor and street cars and other vehicles, while we walk or drive; into our homes, offices, factories, theaters, churches and stores where meats, fish, fruit, vegetables, breadstuffs, cake, pastry, candies, confectionery, etc., form a final resting place for this germ-laden filth. It also settles on walls, carpets, curtains, clothes, and then is set freshly into circulation with each and every dusting and sweeping.

Germs Plentiful in Food.

It is still easier to understand why water which contains dirt or excreta may be very dangerous, because in no way are the germs of disease more readily taken into the human body than with food and drink.

Dirty milk is dangerous because the dirt most often found in milk is manure or else dirt from dirty barns, or dirty utensils, or dirty milkmen who have handled the milk with dirty hands. Dirty hands are dangerous, as human hands so very readily almost everywhere, and thus only too easily, become dirty—children, for example, have soiled their hands, may perhaps the next minute put their fingers upon their faces or into their mouths, and thus carry dirt, and with that the germs of disease directly into the body itself. Frequent washing of the hands is a great sanitary safeguard.

Keep Streets Clean.

This dirt menace and nuisance is preventable not only in the streets, but likewise in our living and working places. Much house dust pollution may be avoided if the original street dust were removed or allayed.

The remedy for abating street dust in cities is thorough flushing of streets with large amounts of water. In order to make street sprinkling effective, it either should be sufficiently abundant to wash the dirt away into the sewers, or if moderate amounts of water are used, then it becomes imperative to put in the water some suitable disinfectant.

Small towns should clean streets of loose dirt, pack undersoil with roller and oil carefully with heavy oil.

With a better insight into the dangers from dust, a real live interest is awakening. Education has been telling, methods are improving, the public has awakened to the dangers from dust and filth. Every person should do his part to assist in the eradication of disease from these dangerous sources.

Dust then is not by any means or in the main a mere nuisance and source of public discomfort, but perforce a menace and direct public danger of deadly potentiality.

LESSON FOR APRIL 22

JESUS ANOINTED AT BETHANY.

LESSON TEXT—John 12:1-11.
GOLDEN TEXT—She hath done what she could.—Mk. 14:8.

This is a lesson of Jesus in the home. It occurred at the beginning of passion week. We have before us the master; the worker, Martha; the worshiper, Mary; the witness, Lazarus; the traitor, Judas, and the people without. An unconscious bit of wisdom fell from the lips of that good housewife who exclaimed, "How much better my neighbors' houses look when I have my windows clean." Too much we are looking through the eyes of selfishness. Out of this lesson let us learn to look through unselfish eyes.

I. Unjust Criticism (vv. 1-6). It is six days before Jesus' last Passover. The accounts of Matthew and Mark suggest it to have been within two days, because they mentioned this feast after telling of the conspiracy of the chief priests and elders with Judas, who came to his determination to sell his Master after the reprimand given him on this occasion.

(1) The Value of Good Deeds. Jesus did not forget, in the supreme hour of his life, the friends whom he loved. To bring them some further spiritual gifts, he had come to their home in Bethany. Doubtless he also had in mind the desire to nourish the faith which had been kindled in the hearts of all by the resurrection of Lazarus, just as he returned to Cana after having performed his first miracle (John 4:54). Jesus was Very God of Very God, yet he was very much of a real man; therefore he enjoyed the pleasures of home as much as other men, and the joys of kinship and brotherhood.

(2) The Wealth of Good Deeds. Out of her love Mary expended $51, probably her whole treasure, in the purchase of this alabaster box, and put it aside to use it upon him at the proper time. We do not think that she stopped to calculate the cost of this ointment. Love never estimates value. Her deed proved a safer guide of conduct than the calculating prudence of Judas and the other disciples (see Matt. 26:8). Such deeds are always looked upon with suspicion. The Iscariots usually are the leaders in criticizing the actions of others. Envy lay at the bottom of their criticism, but good deeds are unconscious, for we read that "the house was filled with odor."

(3) A Standard of Good Deeds (Mark 14:8); "She did what she could," and we have also the record of good deeds, a memorial to her (Mark 14:9). A large number of people who never give of their own to the poor nor to the kingdom of God are willing to criticize others who do give out of the gratitude of their loving hearts.

II. Gracious Commendation (vv. 7-11). Jesus praised where his disciples and Judas criticized. The poor they always had with them (Mark 14:7). This must have been a challenge that evidently they had not attended to the poor as they should. Jesus also tells them frankly that whatever they do for him they must do speedily. Jesus' judgment upon Judas is a rebuke of the disciples; his exposure of the sophistry of the critics and of their subtlety is suggestive. Upon Mary's act he bestowed the highest possible praise. "She hath done what she could." That is all that is asked of anyone (II Cor. 8:12). Such commendation as Jesus bestowed upon Mary he bestowed upon no other, and his wonderful predictions concerning her (Matt. 26:13) have been literally fulfilled. Jesus' judgment upon Mary is also suggestive. He shielded her, "let her alone;" He approved her works as being good, and he interpreted her innermost purpose in the act which she had performed. This outward act was literally the pouring forth of her heart's adoration and worship. Martha was in part taken up with her household service. Lazarus was in part taken up with his enjoyment of the presence of Jesus, but Mary was wholly taken up with Jesus himself. Does the record surprise us: "Wheresoever this gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also which she hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her?" Judas, under the judgment of Jesus, was stung (Matt. 26:14) and hurries at once to the enemies of Jesus to strike a bargain with them for the betrayal of his Lord though he did not secure from these enemies the equivalent of what she had poured upon him. Christ will be no man's debtor. He takes the poor offerings we lay before him, and crowns them with the richest reward. Mary's gift of ointment received words of commendation of which she never dreamed, and a reward far beyond her fondest hope, and has been the fount of countless deeds rich with love. Many people had gathered, not only for Jesus' sake, but that they might see Lazarus also. He drew people because of what Jesus had done for him, yet he drew them to Jesus. This brought him also under condemnation, for we must share the bitterness of the foes of Jesus.

THE 3 D'S IN DODD'S

Mr. Robert W. Ferguson, Hingham, Mass., writes: I suffered from kidney disorder for years. Had incessant backache and trouble. Nearly died from it at one time while in Vancouver, but overcame it by a persistent use of Dodd's Kidney Pills. Finally I was completely cured. I occasionally use the remedy now in order to keep the kidneys regulated. I have the highest praise for Dodd's. Be sure to get "DODD'S," the name with the three D's for deranged, disordered, diseased kidneys, just as Mr. Ferguson did. No similar named article will do.—Adv.

LIFT YOUR CORNS OFF WITH FINGERS

How to loosen a tender corn or callus so it lifts out without pain.

Let folks step on your feet hereafter; wear shoes a size smaller if you like, for corns will never again send electric sparks of pain through you, according to this Cincinnati authority.

He says that a few drops of a drug called freezone, applied directly upon a tender, aching corn, instantly relieves soreness, and soon the entire corn, root and all, lifts right out.

This drug dries at once and simply shrivels up the corn or callus without even irritating the surrounding skin.

A small bottle of freezone obtained at any drug store will cost very little but will positively remove every hard or soft corn or callus from one's feet.

If your druggist hasn't stocked this new drug yet, tell him to get a small bottle of freezone for you from his wholesale drug house.—adv.

JUST ORDINARY OL' PICKEREL.

My Dear Buck:

If there is one of the fish family that we remember from the knee-pants and bent-pin stage of the fishing game, it sure must be Ol' Judge Pickerel and the young "picks." It certainly made your heart do a double-quick and started the cold creeps up your spine, the first time you hooked a pickerel, after a kindergarten course on chubs and sunnies. You probably had a long cane pole or a young sapling cut from the nearby wooded shore; anyway, from that time on you realized that there was "some sport" to the game. Since then, of course, the ol' pickerel has been sorta dropped into the discard, and it takes trout, bass or muskie, perhaps, to start the joy trips up along your vertebrae. But let me tip you off straight, Buck, there's many a good fighter left in the pickerel outfit, regardless of the many slurs cast upon his fighting qualities by some of the ultra-exclusive highbrows in the angling derby.

Find Pickerel Most Anywhere.

The pickerel is one of the fish that you can fish for nearly anywhere, and you don't have to make a five hundred to one thousand mile trip to his "home grounds." He is a common, ordinary cuss that can pick up a living on next to nothing, and at the same time raise a mighty big family. In nearby "civilized" waters he will even make a sure-enough professional fisherman sit up and take notice at his ability to evade the bait and make said fisherman use all his skill and wits to induce him to take the lure. The more he is fished for the wiser he gets, and to land a few fair-sized pickerel in much-fished waters takes keen work, more so than for the gamer fish in the usual fish haunts of the North woods. As a rule the pickerel found in local waters does not grow to excess size, say an average of two or three pounds. Some are larger, of course, but not the general run.

Where the Pickerel Hangs Out.

The pickerel from the running streams, like all other fish, puts up the best fight, while those from the warmer waters of the lakes and sluggish streams are dull and slow fighters. The pickerel is found in nearly all rivers and lakes or ponds, his preference being for shallow, grassy lakes. His main hunting grounds are along the edge of lily and weed beds and on the outskirts of the grassy growth that is often called "pickerel grass." Here he lurks, waiting for the smaller fish to swim past, often striking his prey with a snap of the jaws that cuts the victim in twain. He is a sure-enough barbarian, and is a destroyer of the weaker fishes, all of which points to the fact that he will be with us for many a day. He is vicious to the core, and at times will strike a trolling spoon with force enough to bend it double. In spring-fed lakes he is often found around the spring-holes, and deep fishing here will bring him out. You can feel reasonably sure of landing him any time from the first of the season to the windup, and then take a rap at him through the ice in winter.

Needs Dentist in August.

August is about the poorest month for pickerel fishing, caused, no doubt, by the soreness of the gums, as claimed by many of the old-timers. The "muskie," a cousin of the pickerel, loses his teeth in August, while the pickerel itself has a swelling of the gums during dogdays that does not put him in a humor to bite on anything. Late September and early October is about the best all-round pickerel season, at which time he is found in the shallows, at the mouth of outlets or inlets, where the feed is good.

Troll and Cast for Him.

Although trolling is the surest method of landing the pickerel, much sport can be had by casting for him, using light bass tackle. A weedless hook with a small frog, shiner or minnow for bait, and a single spinner is all you need. Row along the weedbeds, about seventy-five feet out and cast in toward the edge, landing your bait about five feet from the edge. Give the pickerel a little time before striking as he grabs the live bait and darts back to his lair, there to turn it around in his mouth and swallow it head first. Strike sharply and row away from the weeds. Bear this in mind: he may come up to the boat with ease, but he makes his big effort for liberty after you bring him up to the boat.

The usual way to get him is by trolling with a spoon or spinner. Take a No. 4½ tandem spinner with a treble hook bucktailed or feathered, or a No. 4 spoon and you have an excellent trolling rig. A chunk of pork rind adds to the attractiveness of the lure.

Temperance Notes

BEAT BARON MUNCHAUSEN.

A liquor paper recently commented on the decreased death rate during the past five years and claimed that during the same period the sale of liquor greatly increased. It made this statement among others:

"Sane people who are honest with themselves will draw the conclusion that the nation is going along under constantly improving conditions of sanitation and sobriety, and while using liquors more freely, it is using but not abusing."

Then the liquor editor made a mistake. He sent a copy of the paper to the Journal of the American Medical association. Now the Journal had among its reference books a copy of the Statistical Abstract of the United States, which gives the official figures of liquor consumption, and after consulting that authority the great medical Journal also makes a statement. It is this:

"Statistics or the figures themselves never lie, but compared with some of the interpretations which are made from them by the advocates of personal liberty in drinking, Baron Munchausen was a second George Washington.

DEPRIVED OF PERSONAL LIBERTY

The Ladies' Home Journal tells this story:

"A driver of a distillery wagon belonging to one of the largest distilleries in the country had just unloaded some barrels of whisky and stood resting for a moment before driving on. 'I suppose,' said a bystander, 'you have all of that to drink you want?' 'Well,' the driver answered, 'I could have it if I wanted it. But I never touch it on or off the job. I see too much of what it does. Then, we are not allowed to drink, you know.' 'Not allowed? You mean by your employers?' asked the bystander. 'That's right,' answered the driver. 'They know the stuff they're handling, and it is good-by to our jobs if we touch as much as a drop. No, sir, the greatest teetotalers in the country are the drivers of booze wagons and don't you forget it. They're like bartenders. You rarely find a bartender who drinks.'"

LIQUOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Speaking for the newspapers which refuse to carry liquor advertisements —some 850 dailies in the United States —Mr. Schermerhorn, editor of the Detroit Times, says:

"We believe that if a newspaper carries on its first page the story of a tragedy caused by liquor and on another page a guaranteed cure for drink, and on still another page asks everybody to have a drink—that the whole process is as inconsistent as when the nurse marries the undertaker to catch the patient coming and going. We believe that for a newspaper to take liquor advertising is to do behind the bar what the bartender is doing in front of the bar."

BOOZE HABIT DECLINING.

A New York advertising journal gives some interesting testimony anent the decreasing popularity of drinking among business men. The entire alcohol bill of all the lunchers and diners at the Advertising club of New York for a recent month was $30. There were something like 4,000 regular meals served in the club rooms during those 26 working days, not reckoning dinner parties. This makes the average bill for booze not over eight-tenths of a cent per person per meal. In other words not over one diner in forty took a drink with his meal.

NO INTOXICANTS SERVED.

The Gerogia Press association at its last meeting passed the following anti-liquor resolution with only two negative votes and not a speech against it:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this body that hereafter it shall be the duty of the officers of this association, who negotiate the arrangements for our annual outings, to inform all local committees where we are to be entertained that it is the wish of this association that no intoxicants of any kind, including beer, near beer, wines or liquors, shall be furnished at any of our functions."

RIGHT OF STATE.

"The state has the undoubted right to prohibit to everyone the use of alcoholic drinks, since drinking in every form is a social danger."

This is not one of the "fanatical" utterances of Richmond P. Hobson or William J. Bryan, or Governor Capper of Kansas; it is part of a political speech delivered by a German in the council hall of the Berlin Rathaus.

POOR MAN'S CLUB.

The United States Cast Iron Pipe and Foundry company of New Jersey as the result of careful observations finds that the drinkers among its employees lose on an average of $180 a year in wages. The company arrived at its conclusion by keeping close tab on 100 employees secretly selected, half of whom were drinkers and half abstainers. It is shown that the fifty employees who were average drinkers lost a total of 4,156 days during the first eleven months of the year, an average of nearly eight days a month,

Died of Premature Old Age!

How many times we hear of comparatively young persons passing away when they should have lived to be 70 or 80 years of age. This fatal work is usually attributed to the kidneys, as, when the kidneys degenerate, it causes auto-intoxication. The more injurious the poisons passing thru the kidneys the quicker will those noble organs be degenerated, and the sooner they decay.

It is thus the wisest policy, to prevent premature old age and promote long life, to lighten the work of the kidneys. This can be done by drinking plenty of pure water all day long, and occasionally taking Anuric, double strength, before meals. This can be obtained at almost any drug store. You will find Anuric more potent than lithia for it dissolves uric acid as water does sugar.

Sailors Need More Air.

The broad ocean is supposed to be about the likeliest place on earth to find fresh air, yet Dr. R. C. Holcomb, a naval surgeon who has been investigating conditions on shipboard, says that because more men per cubic foot of habitable air space are to be found in the navy than in almost any other occupation, there is insufficient air space in the sleeping quarters, exposure to extremes of temperature, and irregular sleeping hours, which condition, with the possibility of accidents during storms, may lead to an undue prevalence of injuries, diseases of the respiratory organs and other maladies.

Journal of a Female House Fly

1. Thursday, Nov. 2, 1911. Went into winter quarters. Barely lived through the long, hard winter.
2. April 20, 1912. Came out of winter quarters and laid my first batch of eggs—120 in number—in a manure heap.
3. April 21, 1912. My first 120 eggs have hatched.
4. April 22, 1912. Larvae have undergone first molt.
5. April 23, 1912. Larvae have undergone second molt.
6. April 26, 1912. Larvae transformed into pupae.
7. May 1, 1912. One hundred and twenty full grown flies, sixty of which are females.
8. May 3, 1912. Laid my second batch—120 eggs—this time in the filth of an uncared for privy.
9. May 13, 1912. One hundred and twenty flies came from my second batch of eggs. Laid my third batch in a kind neighbor's garbage can.
10. May 20, 1912. The city has offered a prize to the school child who will kill the largest number of flies. The boy at the house where I live is killing flies right and left. And to think—we have all been eating at the same table with him.
11. May 21, 1912. Laid my fourth batch of eggs. Left alone and unhindered, by Sept. 10 1912, my descendants will number 5,598,720,000,000.

THINK OF IT!

Flies and dirt double the amount of sickness among New York city's babies. This statement, made public by the department of social welfare of the New York Association For Improving the Condition of the Poor, is based on a two years' investigation in more than a thousand families.

Don't let that fly get away! Kill him now!

Buzz! Buzz! Buzz!
The fly that lives
To fly away
Will live to breed
A million a day
Kill Flies NOW!

REALIZE YOUR DANGER. SWAT THE FLY!

If you were to walk into a room and then be told that in it there were 7,000,000 chances of catching a deadly disease, how long would you linger? The chances are 100 to 1 that you would get out as quickly as possible. According to scientists and doctors, a fly may carry as many as 7,000,000 germs on its feet. Typhoid and tubeculosis are the most common of these germs.

Kill the murderous insect.

Millinery Models of Rare Distinction.

We had supposed that every possible new note of fashion had been struck in the Spring hats received the past week, but we were mistaken, for the latest notes are the most charming of all and the hats you will see here now will reveal some decidedly new and stunning effects as you'll readily admit. Novelties from Paris—New York. The cleverness of the ideas will be remarked even by the most particular woman whose aim is to attain "distinction" in every new thing she wears.

Sunday School Convention

Interesting and Profitable Meeting Held at the Lutheran Church

The third quarterly Sunday school convention of Concord township was held at the Lutheran church on Sunday afternoon, April 15. The vice president, J. P. Buckingham, presided in the absence of Mr. Provines.

After appropriate song and devotional services, Mrs. Elizabeth Mummaw gave a very interesting review of the Sunday school lessons for the quarter. The lessons were written by John, who is the one inspired writer who gives the greatest insight to heaven. Her talk was very interesting.

"Avoiding the Ruts in Opening and Closing Sunday School" was opened by M. T. Bishop. He would have a comfortable room and bells rung on time, with a superintendent who begins on time. These "ruts" he would get into and stay in. He would try and have the opening exercises different each morning, not letting the school know what was to be the special feature. B. E. Widney thought it a good plan to have different ones take charge, thinking they would be more in sympathy with the superintendent if they did.

"What Is Success in the Sunday School Work?" was very ably handled by Rev. L. W. Spayd. A teacher is only successful as he is able to make the pupil see the lesson as he sees it.

Mrs. Ethel Cheek, cradle roll superintendent, and Samuel Fellers, of the temperance department, were absent. Mrs. Bessie Tustison, elementary department, Earl Wyatt, secondary department, and Mrs. Eva Scheffer, home department, reported nothing new. J. S. Shilling reported nearly all the adult classes organized and holding charters. Dr. Sheffer reported two teachers' training classes. The report of the secretary-treasurer followed. The financial report was as follows: Balance on hand, $8.53; collection, $2.28; total, $10.81; paid F. B. Leighty for programs and postage, $1.53, leaving a balance of $9.28. A short business session was held.

Immediately after the afternoon session, a council of township officers, superintendents and teachers was held, at which plans for the betterment of the schools were discussed.

The evening session was intensely interesting. The speaker was L. B. Gatten, of Auburn. His subject was "The Relation of the Sunday School to Our Civic Life." A few extracts from his speech follow:

"The Sunday school is the noblest development of the Nineteenth century."

"The Sunday school needs more efficient and consecrated teachers."

Touching on prohibition, he said: "There are now 80,000,000 people living in dry territory;" and he predicted that 1919 will witness the death and burial of "John Barleycorn."

"The brewers say they sell more booze in dry than in wet territory. So we all should be satisfied."

Good music added to the interest of both sessions.

Files Another Case.

H. M. Widney has filed an action for $8,000 damages against the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company in the DeKalb circuit court. He claims that the company's bridge across the St. Joe river in Concord township has so obstructed the current that a portion of his land has been flooded and is being worn away, to his damage in the sum stipulated.

This land is in section fourteen in Concord township. The complaint states that the bridge of the company has four large stone abutments, two of which stand in the channel of the St. Joe river. That these two abutments are each fifty-two feet in width, and instead of being placed parallel with the river, stand at an angle of about fifty-seven degrees crosswise of the current.

Widney says that as a result of the abutments being so placed in the river the current has been obstructed so that a portion of his land has been rendered useless by the water standing on it for a good portion of the time, and the current so deflected from its proper course that otner parts of it have been worn away and damage is still being done to it.

DIRT DISEASE DEATH

Remember the three deadly "D's"—dirt, disease, death.

Help to keep your city clean. Use separate and large enough receptacles for garbage, ashes and waste paper.

The best public service depends on co-operation and mutual understanding. Will you help? Keep the garbage can covered.

It's your street in your city. Keep it as clean as you do your room in your home.

It's your street. Why not put dust and litter from the pavement into a can and not sweep it into the gutter?

"Dont's" for clean streets: Don't spit on the pavement; don't make a dump of your street; don't leave the garbage can uncovered; don't throw paper, banana skins, etc., into the street.

Clean homes and clean streets mean fewer flies, better babies, healthier children, happier people.

Clean streets increase business and improve property values. Don't let your waste paper blow about.

Don't wait for clean up week; do it now. It's your street and your city. Help to keep them clean.

Struck by a Fast Train.

Alex Foster, whose home is one mile north of Newville, had a narrow escape when he crossed the New York Central R. R., at Butler, last Wednesday, with a load of tile. The hind part of his wagon was struck by the train, throwing Mr. Foster to the ground on his face, severely cutting and bruising him about the face and also suffered a dislocated shoulder. The frightened horses ran away with the front part of the wagon, the hind part of the wagon being in splinters. The team ran across town and into a barbed wire fence; one of the horses was badly hurt on the rump, a large piece of skin being torn off, both were lacerated to some extent. Mr. Foster was taken to Dr. Frank Fanning's office where he was cared for, and the Doctor brought him home in the afternoon. Mr. Foster is nearly 70 years of age, but it is thought he will soon recover. The team was cared for at the Houk Tie Barn. Sam Stafford and Ross Nelson went to Butler, Thursday, and brought home the team. Out of 150 tile only 20 could be found, the rest were all smashed to pieces.

Ed Leighty made a business trip to Ft. Wayne, Friday.

Herbert Curie commenced work in the Drug Store this week, after school hours. Mrs. Staman will be released Saturday.

You are urged to attend the Farmers' Meeting held in the Assembly room of the school house, Tuesday evening, April 24.

DRUGS EXCITE YOUR KIDNEYS, USE SALTS

If your Back is aching or Bladder bothers, drink lots of water and eat less meat.

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which removes the body's urinous waste and stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this, also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of our kidney trouble and backache.

VOL. XXXI ST JOE, DeKALB COUNTY INDIANA, THURSDAY APRIL 26, 1917 NO. 17

Mavis-Sechler Marriage

A pretty home weddinge occurred last Thursday at noon, when Miss Flossie Lucile, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Sechler, was united in marriage to Charles Everett Mavis, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Mavis, of Hicksville.

At 11:30 a. m., the bridal party, consisting of little Miss Lucile Curie, ring bearer, Rev. A. K. Mumma, the officiating minister, and the bride agd groom, entered the parlor, while Mrs. Frank Curie, sister of the bride, played a wedding march. They took their places beneath a pink and white arch, where the contracting parties exchanged vows of fidelity and the man of God pronounced the words that united them for life. The ring ceremony was employed.

The bride was attired in pearl gray and carried a bouquet of Ophelia roses. The room was tastefully decorated with pink and white crepe paper, tulips, sweet peas, roses and carnations.

Those present were: Rev. and A. K. Mumma, of Spencerville; Mr. and Mrs. Charles Mavis, Loran Mavis, brother of the groom, and Mrs. Arrant, a sister, all of Hicksville; Frank Curie, wife and daughter, Lucile, Merritt Sechler, Mrs. Addie Filley, Mrs. C. A. Patterson, Mrs. Charles Armstrong and Misses Agnes Sechler, DeVesta Bayman and Lela Wallace, of St. Joe.

The groom is a printer and is an employe of the Hicksville Tribune. Little need be said of the bride, who is too well known here to require it, other than to say that she is a lady in every sense of the word; and what more can be said? She is a graduate of the Concord township high school, and was for three years a successful teacher in that institution, teaching the primary room. She is a member of the Lutheran church and was an active Sunday school worker, in which latter capacity she will be greatly missed.

The young couple left for Hicksville, their home, in the evening; but not so early as a bunch of the bride's girl friends, who acted on a hunch that the reported leaving of the newlyweds on No. 6 was a fib—harmless, of course—to effect an easy get-away. When the party reached the Ohio town they resolved themselves into a band of merry, non-felonious house breakers and made the home of young Mavis the object of their first burglarious raid. They found an accomplice in a neighbor, who provided them with a key and then entered and took possession. They did not keep it long; for, soon after, the rightful owners arrived. When the young husband switched on the lights, the burglars brazenly announced their presence. "We're here first!" they said. Did any arrests or threats follow? Oh, no! not by any means. Who could have the heart to arrest such burglars? Their only object was to show the young wife how dear she is to her girlhood friends, a sentiment which is shared by every resident of St. Joe who has any regard for pure womanhood.

H. M. Widney a Candidate

H. M. Widney has announced his candidacy for delegate to the state constitutional convention, the election for which will be held on Monday, Sept. 17.

DeKalb county owes it to herself and to the state to send a representative man to that convontion, and Mr. Widney is eminently fitted for the place. He possesses the necessary attributes—intelligence, integrity, progressiveness without being radical and is four-square on the great moral and social reforms that the good people desire to see incorporated into the organic law of the state. He is well known over Indiana, particularly among the farmers, having been for years one of the lecturers sent out by Purdue university to teach better farming methods. He is among those who are raising agriculture to the dignity of a profession instead of being a calling that requires nothing but brawn; and Spring Brook fruit farm, the fame of which is state wide, is evidence of this. His acquaintanceship and the prominent part he plays in public affairs will give him an influential place in the constitutional convention.

The position Mr. Widney seeks is not a political one. He is making the race as a citizen of Indiana, not as the candidate of any party. This is as it should be: fitness, not party, should guide voters in the selection of delegates to the constitutional convention; and the man who tries to inject politics into the matter should be turned down—hard.

THE NEWS will have more to say relative to Mr. Widney's candidacy.

Obituary

ADMIRAL DEWEY BEABER, son of E. W. and Amelia E. Beaber, was born 2½ miles east of St. Joe on April 22, 1898; and died at Fort Wayne on April 11, 1917, aged 18 years, 11 months and 20 days.

Having graduated from the Spencerville high school last year, Dewey decided to fit himself for a business career. To this end, he entered the International business college at Fort Wayne last fall, from which he expected to graduate six months hence. Of his success in his work, his parents have assurance in a letter of condolence from his teacher in short hand and English, Mr. J. C. Fritch.

In revival meetings held at St. Joe by Evangelist Hamilton about six years ago, Dewey professed his faith in Christ; and, after baptism, he took fellowship with the Church of Christ at Coburn's Corners, where he has ever been held in high esteem. He was ever exemplary in filial obedience, and was ever respectful to parental advice.

Dewey had aspirations. He studied hard—too hard for his constitution. So, ween attacked by that dread disease, pneumonia, his reduced nerve force could not resist the onset. It is very disappointing to have him thus early in life removed from our midst; but as he died in the Christian hope, we have great consolation in our bereavement.

Funeral services were held at the Coburn Corners' church at 2 p. m. on Saturday, April 14, conducted by Rev. L. W. Spayd. One of the largest and most sympathetic audiences in the history of the church was present. The floral offerings were many and beautiful. Interment at Alton cemetery.

The following representatives of the business college attended the funeral: Harold Pollock, Sigourney, Iowa; Hobart Henry, Seuth Whitley; John Gassert, Ft. Wayne; Leslie Popp, Ann Arbor, Mich.; Selye Hadsell, Hicksville; Schuyler Harvey, VanWert, Ohio; Ruth Perry, St. Joe; Harley DeWitt, Harlan; O. A. Dellinger and J. C. Tritch, instructors, Fort Wayne.

In Race for Co. Supt.

Two candidates are in the race for the office of County Superintendent of DeKalb county, succeeding Dr. Lida Leasure who finishes her term on August 16, of this year.

While there may be others to be announced later F. M. Merica of Garrett, and Scott Forney of Ashley, are the only persons that have announced themselves so far. A new county superintendent will be selected at the meeting of the trustees of DeKalb county in Auburn the first Monday in June, Dr. Lida Leasure, the present county superintendent, declining to serve for another term.

Mr. Merica, for many years, was superintendent of the schools at Garrett, and is one of the best known educators in the county. At the present time he is a member of the city council at Garrett.

Mr. Forney is the present head of the Ashley schools and is well and favorably known in the north part of DeKalb county.—Star.

B. & O. to Aid the Farmers

The Baltimore & Ohio railroad, with full knowledge of the labor shortage on farms in its territory and realizing the increasing danger, some time ago formulated plans toward working out a solution to this problem and established a farm labor bureau and employment agency, which is part of the commercial development department of the company, working in conjunction with the traffic departments.

A list is being compiled giving the name of each farmer on or near the Baltimore & Ohio railroad; the distance of his farm from the station; the number of acres devoted to each crop, including cereals, forage, vegetables and fruits; the amount of farm labor needed for the kind of work offered and the dates when needed; the rates of pay per day, with board and lodging.

Much Good Known to Have Been Result of Baby Week Celebration

Prepared by Children's Bureau, U. S. Department of Labor

May 1 to 6 is Baby Week. This nationwide celebration was inaugurated last year, when more than two thousand communities devoted a week to reviewing the needs of their babies. The first suggestion of a nationwide celebration came from the federal Children's bureau and the General Federation of Women's Clubs; they believed that a Baby Week was an excellent expedient for calling attention to the great loss of infant life and for stimulating local baby-saving work.

Many people are still unaware of the fact that of all the babies born in the United States, probably one in ten dies before it has completed twelve months of life. Babies die in rural communities, in cities, in suburbs, and in small towns. This great preventable waste of life is scattered over the entire country, and Baby Week asks:

"How many babies die in your community? Is your infant mortality rate the lowest that any American community has yet achieved? Do you realize that when all babies are well born and well cared for, infant deaths will so rarely occur that the infant mortality rate will be negligible? What is your community doing to make life safe and wholesome for its babies?"

Weigh Baby Once a Week.

But Baby Week has done more than remind people of the importance of these questions. It helps people who are already at work on the saving of babies' lives to explain to their fellow citizens what they are doing, and enables them to extend their efforts. It draws closer together the various agencies which have been working from different angles and furthers the co-operation which is essential to success.

Perhaps most significant of all is the effect of Baby Week in small villages and scattered settlements and other places where there has been no organized effort to meet the needs of babies. People have come to see, as few had done before, that even in the fresh air and the sunshine of the open country many babies do not have a fair start in life.

The seven hundred villages which reported to the Children's bureau a Baby Week campaign in 1916, have faced the fact that every community—in city and country alike—has a responsibility to fulfill which requires thought and effort and perseverance. And this awakening of a community has been in many cases accomplished by a campaign undertaken by some small group who co-operated for the first time in arranging their Baby Week. One campaign in a Southern mountain village was launched and carried through by one woman alone, a tuberculosis patient. She arranged for meetings and secured literature on baby care, which was distributed in the two stores of the town.

Of course Baby Week can effect no immediate revolutions in community care, but it has proved an excellent starting point for new and permanent work.

Perhaps a visiting-nurse service is organized, because the women of the community come to realize during Baby Week that there is no other way in which they can be instructed so easily and so well in the modern science of baby care. They see, perhaps more clearly than before, that the mother who depends on instinct and tradition in regulating her baby's food and clothing and sleeping and all the details of the baby's day is behind the times. They see, further, that intelligent care not only will prevent illness but will simplify their own daily work.

Or perhaps Baby Week leads to a determination to have complete birth registration in the community, with a committee to carry on a test and assist the local officials in enforcing the birth-registration law.

Or classes are started in the public school for the instruction of girls in domestic science and in baby care.

Baby Week, especially in small communities, is frequently concerned with little children as well as babies, and several reports tell of provision for physical examination of children or of new interest in wholesome play. As one woman wrote to the Children's bureau after Baby Week:

"We feel that the danger from contagious diseases, the need of a strict quarantine, the danger from flies, bad milk, unclean stables, and bad farm sanitation need publicity in rural communities. Our whole county does not boast of one kindergarten, and the idea of the value of play for children, both young and older, is very poorly understood. A popular proverb in these parts is 'Only babies and monkeys need amusing.' It was very interesting to see the play-hungry children hover over the toy exhibit and to watch them as they listened to the primary teacher tell them stories. The young mothers who brought their children seemed so interested, and so frankly acknowledged the helpfulness of the work, that it seemed altogether worth while."

And last but not lease, Baby Week has usually led to a better understanding of the child-hygiene work of the state health authorities. Four states have special child-hygiene divisions; and several others are doing extensive work for children. Nearly all of the states have special bulletins or leaflets on baby care. To show parents how and where authoritative material on the care of their children can be secured free of charge, and to make a community eager to co-operate with state health officials in their work for child welfare would be by itself a substantial result from Baby Week.

I Am the Baby

Prepared by Children's Bureau, U. S. Department of Labor

I am the Baby.

I am the youngest Institution in the World—and the oldest.

The Earth is my Heritage when I come into being, and when I go I leave it to the next Generation of Babies.

My mission is to leave the Earth a better place than I found it.

With my million little Brothers and Sisters I can do this, if the World does not impose too many handicaps.

Now I need Pure Milk and Fresh Air and Play.

When I am a little older I shall need good Schools in which to learn the Lessons of Life.

I want to live, laugh, love, work, play.

I want to hear good music, read good books, see beautiful pictures.

I want to build Houses and Roads and Railroads and Cities.

I want to walk in the woods, bathe in the waters, and play in the snow.

I am Yesterday, To-day, and To-morrow.

If you will make my way easy now, I will help you when I grow up.

I am your hope—I AM THE BABY.

How the Children's Bureau Can Help

Prepared by Children's Bureau, U. S. Department of Labor

The Children's bureau has bulletins which are of special interest to mothers, and bulletins addressed to every citizen who is concerned with children's welfare.

"Baby Week Campaigns" gives suggestions for planning and carrying out a Baby Week. The new edition of 1917 is full of interesting bits reported from the local Baby Weeks of last year.

Two bulletins, "Child-Welfare Exhibits" and "How to Conduct a Children's Health Conference," give more detailed instructions on these special features of a Baby Week.

Other bulletins on infant welfare include a tabular statement of infant-welfare work in the United States, and reports on the Children's bureau studies of infant mortality in certain selected typical communities.

Don't Kiss Baby on Mouth.

The causes and prevention of deaths of mothers in childbirth are discussed in the bulletin on "Maternal Mortality."

The bulletin on "Birth Registration" tells why the birth of every child should be registered with local authorities.

The series of bulletins for mothers includes one on "Parental Care," and one on "Infant Care." A third on "Child Care" is in preparation.

A postcard addressed to the Children's bureau, Washington, D. C., will bring to you a list of publications any of which will be sent you free of charge.

PRESIDENT WILSON ISSUES AN APPEAL TO THE COUNTRY

Executive In Personal Message Urges United Action in War for Liberty.

FARMERS HOLD NATION'S FATE

Asks Them to Make Every Possible Effort to Supply Abundant Food for Ourselves, Our Army and Navy and for the Nations Whom We Are Now Allied With.

Washington, April 17.—President Wilson on Sunday night addressed a personal appeal to his fellow countrymen and called upon every American citizen—man, woman and child—to join together to make the nation a unit for the preservation of its ideals and for triumph of democracy in the world war.

"The supreme test of the nation has come," says the address. "We must all speak, act and serve together."

Text of Address.

The address follows:

"My fellow countrymen:

"The entrance of our own beloved country into the grim and terrible war for democracy and human rights which has shaken the world creates so many problems of national life and action which call for immediate consideration and settlement that I hope you will permit me to address to you a few words of earnest counsel and appeal with regard to them.

"We are rapidly putting our navy upon an effective war footing and are about to create and equip a great army, but these are the simplest parts of the great task to which we have addressed ourselves.

"There is not a single selfish element, so far as I can see, in the cause we are fighting for. We are fighting for what we believe and wish to be the rights of mankind and for the future peace and security of the world.

"These, then, are the things we must do and do well, besides fighting—the things without which mere fighting would be fruitless:

"We must supply abundant food for ourselves and for our armies and our seamen not only, but also for a large part of the nations with whom we have now made common cause, in whose support and by whose sides we shall be fighting.

Must Supply Ships.

"We must supply ships by the hundreds out of our shipyards to carry to the other side of the sea, submarines or no submarines, what will every day be needed there, and abundant materials out of our fields and our mines and our factories with which not only to clothe and equip our own forces on land and sea but also to clothe and support our people for whom the gallant fellows under arms can no longer work, to help clothe and equip the armies with which we are co-operating in Europe, and to keep the looms and manufactories there in raw materials; coal to keep the fires going in ships at sea and in the furnaces across the sea; steel out of which to make arms and ammunition both here and there; rails for worn-out railroads back of the fighting fronts; locomotives and rolling stock to take the place of those every day going to pieces; mules, horses, cattle for labor and for military service; everything with which the people of England and France and Italy and Russia have usually supplied themselves, but cannot now afford the men, the materials or the machinery to make.

Need Greater Efficiency.

"It is evident to every thinking man that our industries, in farms, in shipyards, in the mines, in the factories, must be made more prolific and more efficient than ever, and that they must be more economically managed and better adapted to the particular requirements of our task than they have been; and what I want to say is that the men and the women who devote their thought and their energy to these things will be serving the country and conducting the fight for peace and freedom just as truly and just as effectively as the men on the battlefield or in the trenches.

Appeal to Farmers.

"Thousands, nay, hundreds of thousands of men otherwise liable to military service, will of right and of necessity be excused from that service and assigned to the fundamental, sustaining work of the fields and factories, and mines, and they will be as much part of the great patriotic forces of the nation as the men under fire.

"I take the liberty, therefore, of addressing this word to the farmers of the country and to all who work on the farms: The supreme need of our own nation and of the nations with which we are co-operating is an abundance of supplies, and especially of foodstuffs. The importance of an adequate food supply, especially for the present year, is superlative.

"Without abundant food, alike for the armies and the peoples now at war, the whole great enterprise upon which we have embarked will break down and fail.

Hold Fate of Nations.

"The world's food reserves are low. Not only during the present emergency but for some time after peace shall have come both our own people and a large proportion of the people of Europe must rely on the harvests in America.
